That mistake was further compounded when I went to see the Minister of State to discuss the problems of the Menzieshill community organisation. The organisation was formed to provide basic caring services to the elderly who live in the Menzieshill area of Dundee. Simple care was provided such as visiting the elderly, disabled or ill in their homes, collecting retirement and other benefits and doing the daily or weekly shopping—in other words, the type of jobs that we normally associate with home helps. The group also drives the elderly and infirm to the lunch club in the Menzieshill community centre. With the greatest stretch of imagination, one could hardly believe that a person would need to be trained to talk to the elderly and disabled, to take the benefit book to the local post office, to buy provisions from the local shops or to assist people from their homes to the community centre. Even the Minister would find it difficult to say that such tasks could be fitted into employment training.

At a meeting on 2 February, the Minister of State suggested that we had not looked properly at the proposals and that we should look at them again. He believed that we might be able to fit the Menzieshill community organisation into employment training. He said that instead of asking simply for money, I should be prepared to argue the case. I agreed and I went back to the Menzieshill group which agreed immediately to hold discussions once more with officials from the Department of Employment. That meeting has taken place and both sides agree that there is no way that such a service could be included in employment training. As my hon. Friend the Member for Dundee, East said, if Tayside regional council had not stepped in and found the extra money, the Crossroads scheme in Dundee would have ended. That would have added to the misery of the individuals who have enjoyed the benefits of the service.

It is not only my hon. Friend and myself whose words should be heard in this debate. One of the Minister's friends—in the sense that he shares his political views—is one W. Loe CBE, JP, who wrote on behalf of a number of caring organisations, including the voluntary day care units in Kirriemuir, Forfar, Brechin and Montrose. The Kinross day care centre had also associated itself with the thoughts expressed in the letter. William Low, CBE, JP is not a radical politician in the Tayside area, but even he thinks that the Minister should think again.

I hope that the Minister will show an awareness in his reply of the concern felt by the caring organisations in the Dundee and Tayside area and that the Government are at long last prepared to do something other than mouthing platitudes.

10 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Michael Forsyth): I may have many faults, but I do not think that mouthing platitudes is one of them.

The hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) based his explanation of why we missed the opportunity to debate the matter on a previous Adjournment debate on what he described as "sharp practice" by the Government Whips. I recall that as I waited in the Chamber to discuss the matter, the business moved on, because the Opposition did not choose to speak on previous business, and while I am delighted that we have this opportunity to return to the matter, I think that the blame lay with the hon. Gentleman for not being present rather than with anyone else.

I shall try to answer some of the questions asked by the hon. Members for Dundee, East and for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross). First, however, I will explain our overall policy on community care. We shall be bringing forward proposals for further development of community care in due course, but hon. Members will accept that this is a complex subject, and I do not think that I can say anything definite at this stage about when an announcement is likely to be made.

Before dealing with the circumstances of the community project about which the hon. Member for Dundee, East is concerned, I will say something about the provision of community care nationally. Gross expenditure on the Health Service in Scotland has increased by 34 per cent. in real terms since the Government took office and the planning figure for social work services has risen by no less than 67 per cent. in real terms over the same period. Those remarkable resource increases should be borne in mind in assessing the scope for futher development in community care.

We have heard a great deal about the generosity of Tayside region and how it stepped into the breach. Unfortunately, the hon. Member for Dundee, East did not tell the House that Tayside's grant for the coming year is very substantial. It represents an 11·1 per cent. increase over this year—well above the rate of inflation and the average increase of 9·8 per cent. that authorities have received. Moreover, grant penalties have been abolished so Tayside will receive the sum in full. It is true that Tayside's grant has been abated in the past, but that was the result of overspending and inability to control its financial affairs.

Mr. McAllion: As I understand it, the Minister's assessment of the need for social work spending in Tayside is not yet matched by actual expenditure. That is the result of the activities of a Conservative administration, which consistently underspent on social work provision over a long period. Since it came into office, the Labour administration has increased expenditure on social work services every year until this year and it has been penalised by the Minister and the Government for doing so.

Mr. Forsyth: Since the Government took office, the resources made available for planning for social work have increased by 67 per cent. in real terms. The hon. Gentleman is right to point out that Tayside spends less on the elderly than a number of local authorities. That is because of the way in which the Labour group has chosen to allocate the very substantial additional resources made available to the local authority. I would certainly wish to encourage the authority to redress the balance and make more resources available for the elderly from the substantial pool available to it. The background in Scotland has been of substantial additional support for the elderly. There has been a 16 per cent. increase in residential places for the elderly, a 68 per cent. increase in the number of day centre places and an increase of about 29 per cent. in home help provision. That is a result of the substantial resources that the Government have provided for local Government.

Mr. McAllion: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Forsyth: No, I want to make a little progress. I know that the hon. Member for Dundee, East is particularly interested in Tayside.

Primary responsibility for community care provision lies with the local authorities, health boards and housing agencies. The increased resources for the NHS in Scotland have led to a 40 per cent. increase in the number of beds and day places in psychogeriatric provision. National Health Service hospital provision for the elderly in Tayside stands at 26 beds per 1,000, compared with a national average of 24 beds.

The hon. Members for Dundee, East and for Dundee, West referred to the difficulties allegedly faced by care schemes in adapting to the employment training arrangements. We believe that employment training marks a significant development—in our view, an improvement—over its predecessor, the community programme. Employment training is targeted specifically at providing training designed to enhance full-time job opportunities for those taking part in the programme. That means that the Training Agency and local training managers must ensure that individual projects or schemes wishing to be involved in the ET arrangements must show that their activities contain an element of training which will benefit individuals looking for full-time jobs.

Many of the care schemes about which we hear are closely linked to the types of services that local authority social work departments or health boards can often provide at their own hand. It seems to follow, therefore, that the care schemes must be doing work which is relevant to functions already exercised by those statutory bodies.

There are claims—the hon. Member for Dundee, West has touched on them—that inflexibilities in employment training mean a reduction in the independence of individual schemes if they participate in ET. That seems to mean that for fairly small individual schemes it often makes more sense for the local training managers to bring together a number of projects for training purposes because this is the most cost-effective way of monitoring the training element. It is not the Training Agency or local training manager's intention to usurp the proper management responsibilities of individual scheme managers, nor does it mean that the aims or objectives of schemes should be significantly altered or influenced by this administrative arrangement.

A further allegation is that care schemes cannot hope to attract a sufficient number or quality of trainees because of the type of activity and the anti-social hours—that is, weekends—which those schemes often involve. I find it hard to believe that that is an overriding argument against care schemes participating in ET. Local training managers have been flexible in trying to identify and select suitable trainees and terms, and conditions of working have been adapted to suit the needs of individual schemes. The proof of this and of the other points I have made in this connection is that there are care schemes within ET that operate satisfactorily and have not suffered any of the traumatic effects that the hon. Member for Dundee, East and other detractors of ET seem to envisage. Many care organisations in Tayside have successfully made the transition from community programme to employment training. These include, Broughty Ferry community care and Clepington parish church. Indeed, I understand that both these projects are to all intents and purposes identical to Menzieshill. I am sure that the schemes are known to the hon. Member for Dundee, East, as they clearly were to the hon. Member for Dundee, West.

The obstructive attitude of the Scottish TUC and COSLA, including some local authorities such as Tayside regional council and Dundee district council, had an initial adverse impact on the implementation of employment training in Scotland. Many community programme providers were pressurised into following the STUC-COSLA line and declined to transfer to the new programme. Most of the people lost from Government training programmes in consequence reverted to unemployment. What does that tell us about local authority attitudes to the plight of the unemployed? Employment training is now progressing well, however, with more than 20,000 places filled in Scotland and more than 500 in Dundee. The national training programme cannot, of course, be revised to accommodate every peculiarity of every scheme. There is enough flexibility and discretion within the programme, and with co-operation and realism on both sides the scheme can be made to fit most circumstances.

The Menzieshill project was formerly funded under the community programme, but since September last year it has relied significantly on grants from Tayside regional council. The project, in common with several others in Tayside, chose not to participate in employment training. I have already set out the Government's views on the wider matter of how care schemes can take advantage of ET if there is a willingness and flexibility to do so.

The hon. Member for Dundee, West mentioned Crossroads. We have been saying to health boards and local authorities that they should use the powers and substantial resources available to them to assist organisations such as Crossroads. We have also been encouraging Crossroads to try to find patterns of operation which will meet the ET rules.

The Menzieshill project is clearly a broad-based community scheme aimed at helping a range of people, including the elderly, with ordinary day-to-day tasks. The original aim of the project was to provide a home visiting-caring service for the elderly, infirm, disabled and housebound within the local housing estate. That is community care in a very general sense, not specifically related to the health or social work services in quite the way that they were addressed in Sir Roy Griffiths' report.

[Mr. Forsyth]

None the less, I can see that for the 300 to 400 people who use or benefit from the project each year, it is a worthwhile venture.

The latest information that the hon. Member for Dundee, West has given suggests that project managers may not be particularly interested in exploring the scope for identifying suitable training elements in their activities and that project representatives see no possibility of ET being able to provide assistance to the project.

The hon. Gentleman said that Tayside regional council agreed earlier this month to continue for a further six-month period its present grant support to a number of community care schemes in Dundee, including the Menzieshill project. I understand that council officers have been instructed to discuss with each of the projects concerned their normal core funding arrangements. The council will then be in a position to assess the budget implications of its providing continuing grant support for those projects on a longer term basis. I very much welcome the positive and constructive approach taken by the regional council in the circumstances, but I must say that it is in rather stark contrast with its outlook on employment training.

The hon. Gentleman seemed to be asking whether that further six-month period would provide a breathing space and whether the Government should consider adjustments to ET more easily to accommodate community care projects. As I have said, I find that difficult to accept in principle, given that a number of projects—and one or two in Dundee which seem virtually identical to Menzieshill—have not found too much difficulty in meeting the ET criteria. On the face of it, therefore, I do not think that there is a strong case to be made for changes in the ET rules, and nothing that the hon. Gentleman has said amounts to new evidence or facts which have not already been considered.

I believe that ET can and will continue to play its part in support of community care projects. I accept that some adaptation to meet the different needs of ET is often required, but it would be unfortunate if worthwhile projects of benefit to vulnerable groups such as the elderly were to cease, not as a result of practical considerations but because of ideological resistance to ET from local authorities, trade unions and the Labour party.

We have done all that we can to make funding available for community care services in Scotland. It is clear from the organisations and care projects already within the ET arrangement that there is no intrinsic barrier to involvement. I have mentioned two schemes in or around Dundee which carry out the same type of activities as Menzieshill. If, however, schemes are forced to close or to contract significantly because of an unwillingness to look toward employment training for funding, the collective opposition of local authorities, STUC and the Labour party in Scotland must bear their share of the responsibility.

Mr. McAllion: The Minister is trying to say that Labour and the STUC oppose the schemes. Does he understand that the Conservative group on Tayside regional council, who originally thought that ET could be used, has reversed its position and agrees that there should be special provision for community projects of that kind?

Mr. Forsyth: Regrettably, the Conservative group is not in power in Tayside region. If the behaviour of the Labour party in Tayside region in respect of ET is anything to go by, I look forward to the day, which may not be far ahead, when the Conservative group is in power as a result of the strong feelings of the electorate about the way in which politics are being used to the disadvantage of the elderly and other vulnerable groups in the community.

The unhelpful background of prejudice cannot detract from the success of ET in Scotland. The voluntary sector is already helping to provide over 10,000 project places—50 per cent. of all ET places in Scotland. Nor can it diminish the high standard of community care development in health and social work that was achieved during this Government's term of office.

Animal Experiments (Cosmetics)

10.15 am

Dame Janet Fookes (Plymouth, Drake): I put a simple and stark proposition in relation to the testing of cosmetics on laboratory animals. In 1987, 14,534 animals died needlessly, and often suffered needlessly before they died. No more licences for such animal suffering should be granted.

I will not harrow the House with details of what some experiments involve, but they are, perhaps, symbolised by the irritancy test which is applied to the eyes of rabbits. Scientists want to see whether a human being would suffer irritation and other unfortunate effects from a substance. Those substances are applied to rabbits' eyes, and they must be secured so that the animals cannot interfere. Many of us have been sickened by such experiments when we have seen either descriptions, or even worse, illustrations of them.

I shall explain to the House and to my hon. Friend the Minister why my opposition is entirely practical and not simply pie in the sky. First, my understanding is that there are no regulations in this country requiring animal experiments for the purposes of cosmetics. The 1984 regulations, which relate to the safety of cosmetics, state only that "a cosmetic product shall not be liable to cause damage to human health when it is applied under normal conditions of use."

The term "cosmetics" covers a wider range than simply what one might think of as lipstick, mascara, face powder and the like. It applies to any substance which goes on the body to cleanse it, improve its look, protect it in some way from the sun, or improve its smell. That includes a range of substances such as toilet soaps, perfumes, anti-perspirants, hair lacquer, hair tint and bleaches, anti-wrinkle products, and sun-bathing products.

As far as I can judge, there are no mandatory requirements for animal testing of such products in northern European countries, the United States, or Australia. France has its own twist. The authorities there ask for a detailed dossier on a certain ingredient or formulation, and can require animal testing if they think that it is necessary, but it is by no means a mandatory universal requirement. There are particularly interesting arrangements in the United States. They have a list of ingredients which are generally recognised as safe—GRAS, they call it for short. Those substances which have a long proven record of safety and reliability, primarily in household products and cosmetics, can go on the list, and no further testing is required.

My main point is that, irrespective of whether such applications are mandatory—and I hope that I have proved they are not—it is unnecessary to test such products by the use of animal experiments. There is a very long history of the application of some ingredients and formulations. If we want to have proof positive of that, it lies in the number of firms that state now that they have either never tested on animals or no longer do so. The impressive list includes such well-known names as Yardley, the own brands of Boots, Marks and Spencer, and Sainsbury, Rimmel, Innoxa, Body Shop products and a host of others.

Indeed, if anyone is interested, the RSPCA has produced an interesting booklet which I have in my hand, listing the firms that do not use animal tests, and their products. The list is as comprehensive as it is possible to be, although it is never easy to keep it up-to-date.

At the end of the booklet is a very interesting statement of the policies of various companies and I shall read two of them to give an indication of their appoach. For example, Rose Laird International says:

"first stage of testing is under laboratory conditions for culture testing. Each batch of manufactured goods is tested on approximately 30 to 50 women, prior to filling into final packaging. Samples of each batch are kept as a matter of course for historical testing."

Yardley, a very well-known name in cosmetics, says:

"The safety of our products is confirmed by human patch test studies, no animal studies, either on formulations or ingredients, are undertaken on behalf of or at the request of the company."

If it is good enough for such major companies and household names not to test, I fail to see why any tests are necessary.

Let me deal now more specifically with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, under which licences for cosmetic testing must be applied for. I recall that my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), when he was piloting the Bill through the House made it very clear in his direct and forthright way that he did not regard the Act as static. He deliberately tried to formulate the Act so as to respond to new needs and requirements, and a new approach. I am sorry to see, so far, that that point has not been taken on board sufficiently clearly with regard to cosmetics experiments.

Under the Act, all cosmetic licence applications must be referred to the Secretary of State's statutory advisory body, the Animal Procedures Committee. It should take a very much harder line, and should recommend that a new requirement is attached to applications for licences, to ensure that unnecessary experiments do not take place. There should be some form of needs condition, whereby a company would have to indicate that human volunteers are not possible. Even more important—I stress this to the Minister today—there should not be other products on the market that would fulfil the role that the new product has in mind. On that basis, 99 per cent. of licences would be turned down.

In many ways, I am surprised that licences have been granted under the Act. A useful cost-benefit analysis is provided by the Act, whereby the benefit that will accrue is weighed against the pain, suffering and loss of life suffered by the animals. It would be hard for any cosmetics company to put hand on heart and sign that declaration with sincerity. The procedures committee should look hard at that formulation to see whether the committee should allow licence applications to succeed, as that criterion is already built into arrangements for licensing.

In many cases, it is not possible for members of the public lawfully to take direct action. I would be the very last to commend anyone to do an act that broke the law. But here we have a superb example of where women and men—some items are used by men, including shampoos and after-shave lotions—can decide whether it is acceptable that an animal should suffer during testing. They can choose from the very wide range of products that are no longer tested on animals, or never have been. I commend to anyone who feels strongly about this, as I do, to look at the lists available and make their views known by buying the cruelty-free products, as well as writing to firms whose products they usually buy to say that they will no longer do so unless action is taken to stop the testing.

I hope, too, that cosmetic companies will not be too coy about saying in their advertising that they do not test on animals, or no longer do so. I recognise that some of them might feel awkward because they have commissioned studies in the past but we are concerned with what they are doing now and what they intend to do. I hope that they will not be backward in coming forward in that respect. I am sure, from the number of letters that I and other hon. Members have received, and from the many signatories to early-day motion 44, that there is a groundswell of opinion that this activity is no longer acceptable.

People may say reluctantly that testing is necessary and must be accepted because of its role in medicine to save human life and suffering, but I for one do not want to use make-up or other toiletries that have been used on animals. In order to beautify ourselves, we have made unhappy, innocent animals suffer.

I hope that my hon. Friend will reply in a forthright way on the lines that I have so strongly advocated this morning.

10.27 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I am sure that the whole House is grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Dame J. Fookes) for bringing the subject of the safety testing of cosmetics before the House this morning. It is undboutedly a matter of public concern. It is also one in which it is very important to strike a balance between ensuring that the substances that we use every day are safe, and reducing the number of animals and the severity of procedures that are used in this essential safety testing.

My hon. Friend the Member for Drake was right to draw the attention of the House to the broad interpretation given to the word "cosmetic". We must be clear about its meaning. In ordinary language one would assume that it was confined to ornamental substances such as lipstick or mascara, but as my hon. Friend rightly says, that would be a mistake; "cosmetic" has a very wide meaning.

Under the European Community cosmetic directive 76/768, which was promulgated on 27 July 1976, cosmetics include any substance intended for placing in contact with the external parts of the body, the skin, the hair, nails, lips, genital organs, the teeth and the mouth in order to clean, perfume or protect them, so as to keep them in good condition, change their appearance or to correct body odours.

Clearly, cosmetics are a wide category. As my hon. Friend fairly said and as I have already stated, we are not talking exclusively about lipsticks and perfumes. We are also talking about virtually any cream, lotion or oil; virtually any powder; soaps, shampoos and shaving creams; toothpastes and mouthwashes; deodorants and products for what is known technically as "intimate hygiene"; and a range of products used in factories such as a form of gel to remove oil from people's skin. It is a long list, that could go on and on.

Inevitably, some of the substances are applied to sensitive parts of the body for prolonged periods, so the House will agree that we must ensure that they are safe and that the very best and most effective procedures are used for establishing the safety of these products when in use. When I say that we must do those things, I mean that we are under a legal obligation, a moral obligation and a social obligation to do so. My hon. Friend has set before the House her case for the reduced use of animals in cosmetics testing. I agree with her objective of the reduced use of living animals. That is the Government's position. However, where I disagree with her is on the possibility of the total elimination of such testing.

My hon. Friend has been kind enough to recognise that, under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which was so successfully steered through the House by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Department of Health, we have introduced a substantially more rigorous system of control over the conduct of all scientific procedures on animals. All work now has to be authorised by project licences.

Under section 5 of the 1986 Act, the Secretary of State shall "weigh the likely adverse effects on the animals concerned against the benefit likely to accrue"

and

"not grant a project licence unless he is satisfied that the applicant has given adequate consideration to the feasibility of achieving the purpose of the programme . . . by means not involving the use of protected animals."

It is thus a balancing exercise.

All project licence applications for the testing of cosmetic substances are subject to special conditions. They are carefully scrutinised by the inspectorate and all are referred to the Animal Procedures Committee.

We are not talking here about a very large number of licensees—there are currently only six project licences. All are held by commercial concerns with special expertise in safety testing.

All the licencees have an obligation to ensure that substances which might be expected to have a severe reaction are not tested under a cosmetic project licence, and all the licensees are aware that the purpose of safety tests on cosmetics is to establish the mildness of the substances they are testing. That point was highlighted in the discussion of cosmetics in paragraphs 3.6 to 3.14 of the 1987 annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee.

The effect of the stringent conditions that we have put on cosmetic testing using living animals for many years, and the concern of the industry to use animals only when strictly necessary, has led, I am glad to say, to a progressive reduction in the use of animals for cosmetic testing over recent years. In 1980, for example, the number was 31,300: by 1987, this had fallen to 14,500, or less than 0·5 per cent. of all animal procedures.

I come now to the part of my hon. Friend's argument where I cannot wholly agree with her. I cannot agree with her when she suggests that we can now bring an end to all cosmetics testing on living animals because the effect of that would inevitably be to stop the innovation and development of new ingredients.

It is important that I emphasise once again that we are not talking merely about mascaras and lipsticks, because there might be a case for saying that we know quite enough about mascaras and lipsticks and so there is no need to develop our knowledge further; as my hon. Friend fairly said, "cosmetics" is given a broad definition. I do not think that it would be right to put a prohibition on development and innovation across the broad spectrum of products that are covered by the definition of "cosmetics".

I shall give some examples that might be worth thinking about. This morning the House could easily have been discussing aerosols and the threat to the ozone layer. All hon. Members are now wholly persuaded of the need to find alternatives to CFCs for use in aerosols, but many of the products for which aerosols are necessary are cosmetics. It is inevitable and right that the alternatives to CFCs must be tried for safety before they can be marketed.

I shall give another example. For reasons that are well known to the House, the House has been concerned about food safety. One question concerning the industry is the safety of preservatives used in food. The same thing applies to cosmetics because, by the nature of cosmetics, when broadly defined as I have defined them, preservatives play an important part. It is essential that we should ascertain the safety of those preservatives. We must ascertain whether chemical or microbiological degradation is likely to lead to infection or adverse reaction. Preservatives are one of the more common causes of allergic responses to cosmetic products. I do not think that we should say that we can now draw a line under our knowledge of preservatives. I find that proposition difficult to accept.

It is right that work should continue to make preservatives safe. The only way of guaranteeing that they are safe—in so far as guarantees are possible—is to carry out some tests on living animals. The testing of such preservatives counts for statistical purposes as the testing of cosmetics.

The plain fact is that similar arguments apply for a wide range of other cosmetic products. It goes without saying that shampoos must not irritate the eyes or cause hair loss, that toothpaste must not inflame the gums and that creams to protect the skin must not produce a rash.

Even substances which we may use very rarely must be tested to make sure that the workers who produce them, and are therefore exposed daily to large quantities, are not at risk. Again, such testing counts in our statistics on cosmetics testing.

Understandably, my hon. Friend raised questions of law. The point is that, if cosmetics are to be made in this country, manufacturers must comply with a common law requirement to ensure that their products are safe as well as meeting both our own and European Community legislation, in particular the Cosmetic Products (Safety) Regulations 1984, which implement the European Community's cosmetics directives, and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Indeed, without proper testing involving animals, manufacturers could become liable—in my view, rightly so—for heavy damages if they sold cosmetic products which seriously injured the health of their customers.

Taking a broad view of the matter and having regard to the liability, or potential liability, of manufacturers, it seems to me that they simply could not establish that they had taken "all reasonable care"—which is the test in negligence actions—if in certain cases they had failed to carry out procedures on living animals. I do not see how they could satisfy their common law, not to say their statutory, duties in that respect.

We should also note that the European "Notes for Guidance for the Toxicity Testing of Cosmetic Ingredients" make the requirement for testing in living animals explicit, following an earlier report by the Scientific Committee on Cosmetology.

That report stated:

"some in vitro systems have been developed so that they can be used as screening tests to indicate the possibility of a long-term risk, but the results still have to be confirmed in mammals. Most of the adverse effects associated with cosmetics . . . are such that they can only be demonstrated in mammals".

As I have told the House, we share the concern of hon. Members to ensure that this testing is kept to a minimum. The Home Secretary has specifically sought the advice of the Animal Procedures Committee about cosmetic testing. As my hon. Friend the Member for Drake will agree, that committee is an unusually distinguished and independent-minded committee.

In its annual report laid before Parliament in December the APC set out its current position on cosmetics testing. It has asked for special reporting requirements to be imposed on cosmetic project licences to enable it to carry out a thorough review of the subject in due course. We are also encouraging alternatives to the use of living animals whenever possible, and I am glad to say that the industry has responded.

At the moment, alternative methods are used to screen substances before they are tested on living animals. This is particularly important with tests such as the Draize eye test to which my hon. Friend referred. Before embarking on such tests, a safety evaluation must be carried out using published information to establish lack of irritancy. When available, tests not involving living animals must also be used. Only if those are satisfactory are tests performed using living animals, and, whenever possible, the substances are diluted for the test.

My hon. Friend, in an interesting speech, talked at some length about so-called "cruelty-free" cosmetics produced by companies which claim not to test their products on living animals. I do not pretend that we in the Home Office are particularly expert in that sphere. Our concerns, as my hon. Friend will be aware, are to ensure that all procedures involving living animals are properly justified and correctly carried out.

One should approach some of the claims with a degree of caution. The term "cruelty-free" is certainly vague. It could be judged to be emotive. Like a number of similar claims for products, such as those which are described as "home made" or "organic", it is not always clear exactly what is being claimed.

The phrase "cruelty-free" may imply that the product has not been tested on living animals or that when it was, the testing did not involve cruelty. It is of course always possible for a company to market a product which is known to be non-toxic without the need for further testing —we would encourage that whenever possible—but I am told that some of the claims about "cruelty-free" substances are not always what they seem. I know that some companies claim that their finished products are not tested on animals, but that as a proposition is true for the majority of products, as, in general, it is only the ingredients which are tested, and then only when they are being developed.

I know, too, that some companies claim that the substances they use have not been tested on living animals within the last five years. But most companies could claim that with a degree of justice. Because of the time it takes to develop a new ingredient and obtain European Community acceptance, it is relatively uncommon for a new ingredient to be marketed within five years of its safety clearance.

[Mr. Douglas Hogg]

I share the wish of my hon. Friend that, whenever possible and whenever it is safe to do so, the safety of cosmetics should be established without recourse to animal testing. In the meantime, we should be clearer what the claim to be "cruelty-free" means, and perhaps we would be wise not to take all these claims at face value.

I am sure that this is not the last time that the House will debate these issues. It is right that there should be a continuing awareness of them. It is right, too, that my hon. Friend, with her knowledge and expertise of this issue, should take opportunities to bring the matter before the House.

The Government are concerned to ensure a correct balance. The correct balance, as we judge it to be, is the balance between, on the one hand, the proper and effective safety testing of everyday personal hygiene and toilet preparations and other cosmetics broadly defined and, on the other, the use of living animals in this testing.

We believe that the controls that we have introduced in the 1986 legislation are effective in ensuring that the only testing which is done is that which is necessary and which is required by proper regulatory authorities and testing which is properly conducted.

We are keeping the matter under review and are in discussion with licensees about the conduct of their work. The public must be reassured that experiments on living animals are conducted only when there is no alternative and, equally, that the wide range of what are defined as cosmetic substances which they may use every day are safe for them and for their children.

Gwynedd Health Authority

10.47 am

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): I now understand what it means when hon. Members tell me that the timetable of the House is extremely fluid. I am reminded of the time when I was an advocate in the magistrates court, standing outside the court waiting for my case to come on, to be told that the best estimate was such and such a time, only to discover that that estimate was wildly inaccurate. I am grateful that I have not been caught out on this occasion.

I am grateful to the Minister of State for being here to respond to this important debate. In normal times, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary would have been at the Dispatch Box, but unfortunately he has been indisposed of late. I trust that the Minister will convey to him my best wishes and those of my hon. Friends for a speedy recovery. Indeed, I am sure that that is the wish of the House generally.

On 3 March of this year the Secretary of State for Wales approved plans by Gwynedd health authority to close a number of hospitals in the county and to transfer some services to other sites. This could be seen as the culmination of a long period of public discussion and concern which began in the autumn of 1987 when the plans were first announced.

What else, may one be forgiven for asking, is there to say? The Secretary of State has given what some will see as the final word on the matter, save that there will be a further short period of consultation on the future of Caernarfon cottage hospital. I say that some people might come to that conclusion, but my hon. Friends and I have not. I aim through this debate to highlight the profound concerns which remain.

The Secretary of State carries the ultimate responsibility for the provision of health services in Wales. That duty is clearly set out in section 1 of the National Health Service Act 1977 which states:

> "It is the Secretary of State's duty to continue the promotion in England and Wales of a comprehensive health service designed to secure improvement—
> (a) in the physical and mental health of the people of those countries, and—
> (b) in the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of illness, and for that purpose to provide or secure the effective provision of services in accordance with this Act."

I stress the word "comprehensive". It does not mean the provision of an unbalanced, incomplete or disjointed service, but that provision of services should be across the board, dealing with all aspects of mental and physical health for children, young, middle-aged and old people in the acute sector and in the community.

The Secretary of State is also charged with a more specific duty in section 3 of the Act, which states:

> "It is the Secretary of State's duty to provide throughout England and Wales, to such extent as he considers necessary to meet all reasonable requirements—
> (a) hospital accommodation;
> (b) other accommodation for the purpose of any service provided under this Act;
> (c) medical, dental, nursing and ambulance services;
> (d) such other facilities for the care of expectant and nursing mothers and young children as he considers appropriate as part of the health service;
> (e) such facilities for the prevention of illness, the care of persons suffering from illnesses and the after-care of persons who have suffered from illness as he considers are appropriate as part of the health service;

(f) such other services as are required for the diagnosis and treatment of illness."

That is the Secretary of State's remit. He fails in his duty if the Health Service in any part of Wales does not meet the general requirement in section 1 and the specific requirements in section 3 which are subject to some qualifications.

Neither the Secretary of State nor his Department have day-to-day conduct or control of the service. Under sections 13 and 15 of the Act, he has powers to direct district health authorities to carry out those functions on his behalf.

I shall outline the background leading to the rationalisation plan and seek to persuade the Minister to set up an inquiry under section 85 of the Act, having regard to the fact that the authority is not providing a comprehensive health service in Gwynedd.

The Welsh Office commissioned a firm of management consultants, Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, to report on the health authority's financial affairs. As the Under-Secretary of State admitted in a debate in the House on 14 June 1988, that was a direct result of Welsh Office concern at the way in which the authority ran its finances. The Under-Secretary of State for Wales said:

"I cannot say that I am satisfied with the level of financial management shown by the authority. That was one of the reasons for calling in management consultants. The consultants' recommendations bear out that."—[Official Report, 14 June 1988; Vol. 135, c. 549.]

The report was scathing in its condemnation of the authority's management team and its lack of financial planning, budgetary control and management accounting system. I shall quote some examples of the comments in that report, but there were many others. Paragraph 54 states:

"Insufficient management action was taken".

Paragraph 55 continues:

"We have to conclude that the authority's senior managers have not addressed the difficult but necessary task with sufficient urgency and co-ordination" and paragraph 86 goes on:

"Planning operates outside the general management structure".

The clear implication is that the Welsh Office demanded that the authority implement the package of measures proposed by Deloittes to bring it back into balance and avert a major financial catastrophe. The measures suggested by Deloittes largely formed the basis of the rationalisation plan which was ultimately backed by the Secretary of State in toto except for the hospital at Caernarfon, which had a temporary reprieve.

The part played by the Welsh Office in the plan cannot be denied. It appointed Deloittes in May 1987 to report on the authority and that was quite clear from the terms of reference it gave. Arising directly from the instructions to the consultants are the hospital closure plans. In giving the consultants terms of reference which did not mention the need to have regard to the adequacy of health care in the county, the Welsh Office effectively directed the consultants to produce a report which would recommend cuts.

The Welsh Office wrote to Deloittes on 6 October 1987 referring to assurances of continued support to the authority

"so long as they accept the need for full implementation of the programme".

When the authority told the public during the consultation period that the package had to go through as a whole, it obviously had that stricture very much in mind.

The inevitable question which now arises is why was the authority in such a financial predicament. The clear implication is that once again the financial difficulties arose in the 1980s, partly due to the authority's failure to control the capital and revenue costs of ysbyty Gwynedd. That is referred to in Deloittes report.

The willingness of the health authority to axe community hospital services because of financial pressure and its reluctance to give priority to community service development led many to believe that those with a preference for the further growth of ysbyty Gwynedd wielded real power at the expense of the outlying communities. In my opinion, the authority's current management structure contributes to the concentration of resources at ysbyty Gwynedd. The management team includes officers who represent geographical districts rather than clinical disciplines. There is a strong case for arguing that discussions on spending should be based on priorities within disciplines rather than geography. Effectively, that means that no one person is responsible for community services. As a result, weaker districts constantly lose out in the battle for cash. Cuts are nearly always made in community provision because of the geographical strength of the district in which ysbyty Gwynedd is located.

It is true that Gwynedd health authority has a strategic plan which includes plans for community hospitals, but they are nothing more than academic exercise. In my view and those of my colleagues, the authority should have grasped the nettle long ago. Clwyd health authority did so in the mid-1970s and it now has a network of small community hospitals with full attendant services. I challenge the Minister to say that Gwynedd has a single community hospital anywhere in the county which meets those basic requirements. I refer the Minister to the remarks of the junior Health Minister responding to a similar debate on 21 March setting out four basic provisions which are required for community hospitals, none of which are present in Gwynedd.

Gwynedd health authority says that it does not have the resources to contemplate such a programme, yet the Welsh Office claims that it is one of the best-funded health authorities in Wales, based on the latest capital and revenue formulae. Who is right? The debate continues and while statistics and formulae are discussed ad nauseam the public suffer. The general public, who are not responsible for the authority's financial crisis, have been denied a comprehensive health service. Elderly people are being denied dignity in their old age and some are being hospitalised and institutionalised due to the lack of adequate day-care facilities and support for carers. There is a chronic shortage of speech therapists for children with speech problems and elderly people who have suffered strokes. Gwynedd has 11 speech therapists when it should have 45. There is also intense pressure on physiotherapists and occupational therapists. I have seen elderly people suffering from senile dementia shunted from establishment to establishment because of the lack of adequate facilities to care for them. Relatives of elderly people have telephoned me late at night in desperation and at their wits' end because they have been told that they must find accommodation for their elderly relative urgently as the hospital bed is required by another patient.

[Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones]

I am particularly worried about the lack of provision for the elderly mentally ill. Why should Gwynedd be denied these services? Who in reality pays the price for the health authority's inability to come to terms with its financial and planning responsibilities? Why has it failed to develope a coherent strategy? The health authority seems to get away scot free——

It being 11 o'clock, MR. SPEAKER interrupted the proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

DEATH OF A MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I regret to have to inform the House of the death of Robert McTaggart Esquire, the Member for Glasgow, Central. I desire on behalf of the House to express our sense of the loss that we have sustained and our sympathy with the relatives of the hon. Member.

11 am

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): With permission, I shall make a statement about the explosion at Vibroplant, Fengate, Peterborough.

At 9.35 yesterday an ICI Nobel's Explosives lorry of standard design, carrying 800 kg of explosives, caught fire while on a routine delivery. I understand that the driver pulled into the nearest yard, which was that of Vibroplant plc, Newark road, Fengate, Peterborough, and called the fire brigade. While in attendance, the lorry exploded, killing one fireman and injuring more than 80 people. Some have serious injuries. I want to convey the Government's sympathy to the families of the dead fire officer and the injured.

At least five premises were seriously damaged and the police declared a major emergency. The scale of this tragic incident has been major. My hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) is at the site and will be giving us an urgent report. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Home Office is visiting the Cambridgeshire fire brigade. Two factory inspectors and two explosives inspectors are at the site to conduct an investigation. The Health and Safety Executive will be preparing a report. I will not pre-empt the conclusions of the investigation. The report will be published and a further statement will be made to the House then.

The relevant legislation is the Conveyance of Explosives on Roads Byelaws which lay down rules for the carriage of explosives by road. New Carriage of Explosives by Road Regulations, to be made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, will be laid before the House in early April. A copy is being placed in the Library.

The current byelaws do not require vehicles carrying explosives to display any warning signs. For security and safety reasons, it was believed that the presence of a two-man crew should be sufficient. During the drafting of the new regulations and after detailed consultations, the Health and Safety Commission has concluded that the balance now lies in favour of secondary safety. The new regulations will require appropriate description placards to be displayed on vehicles. We accepted that judgment when I approved the regulations earlier this month. I apologise to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) for not giving him earlier a copy of the statement.

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): First, I thank the Minister for his statement. I extend my sympathy and that of my right hon. Friends to the family of Mr. John Humphries, the fire fighter who lost his life in the furtherance of his duty and in the service of the community. I also extend our sympathy and concern to those who were injured and those who are anxiously waiting at their bedsides. I note that the hon. Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) is at the scene of the accident, and I appreciate what a difficult time it is for him.

We share the admiration of the whole House for the devotion and commitment shown by all the emergency services involved and for the hospital staff, many of whom will now share the heavy burdens of trying to heal serious injury and trauma.

Sadly, in recent months the House has had occasion to debate far too many tragic accidents involving ships, trains, planes and now, regrettably, lorries. No one can doubt that in this complex society of ours, where people and goods are constantly on the move, safety in transportation must have the highest priority. We will give every possible support to the Government in their quest for that greater safety, and in that context I welcome the Minister's statement. The issue before the House this morning is whether enough has been done to ensure the safe transport of explosive materials and whether the tragic loss of life and the injuries could have been prevented.

As with all such tragedies, some immediate questions must be asked, but asking them has not been straight forward. When I first telephoned the Department at 4 pm yesterday I was told that it was not the Department's responsibility but that of the Department of the Environment. I am grateful both that the Minister has clarified the position and to have the opportunity to ask him the following questions, particularly those with relevance to the part of his statement on new regulations.

How long has the process of consultation on the new regulations for the transport of explosives taken? When were the consultations completed? At what point were they ready to come before the House? I appreciate and support the fact that they are now coming before the House in early April. Naturally, we guarantee our support for them and we are pleased that we shall have the opportunity to give that support. Does the Minister agree that, given the clear intention of the Government to regulate, it would now be possible for the industry to act immediately, thus ensuring that, should any similar emergency occur, the fire fighters would be warned that such a dangerous cargo was on board?

While I appreciate that there have been few serious accidents of this nature, as the Minister has said on other occasions, the potential for tragedy with such hazardous loads is all too obvious. Will the Minister confirm that the regulations to which he has referred deal solely with the issue of labelling such vehicles? We support clear labelling of the hazards contained in vehicles transporting explosives. Does the Minister not consider that he should make a complete review of all aspects of the transportation of explosives? Will he undertake to make such a review and will he tell the House the number of movements of such loads of explosive cocktails on our roads each year?

In so many of these tragedies, a conflict has emerged between the needs of confidentiality and security, and those of safety. We believe that the safety of the public, the communities through which the vehicles pass and particularly of our emergency services must take priority over other considerations. In these matters, the people must have the right to know.

We welcome the new regulations and we shall support their speedy progress through the House. This latest tragedy has placed a special duty on all of us again to ask: is enough being done? I think that today the House would like to call upon safety officers, workers, managers, owners and all who work in transportation, particularly those involved in the transportation of hazardous goods, to give some extra attention and thought voluntarily to reviewing their procedures to ensure that such a tragedy does not happen again.

Mr. Bottomley: I agree with nearly everything that the hon. Lady has said. I want to reinforce her message of sympathy, which I am sure comes from all sides of the House, for the fire service in particular, which gets called out to incidents, not knowing what caused the incident, what the incident may be or what consequences it will have. We know that they are brave people and we pay tribute to them. It is right to pay tribute to the medical services who cope with the consequences of injury and often, sadly, death on and off our roads.

I still believe that the last time that the road transport of explosives led to a fatality was in 1957. That is a good record over 30 years for an industry which has about 15,000 to 20,000 movements a year. That is the best estimate that I have had so far and it is subject to correction. There may be some incidents of which I am not yet aware.

The work to protect both the public and those who work with explosives, which are a necessary part of our industrial life, is maintained to a high standard. Clearly, when things go wrong, and yesterday things did go wrong —we do not know what, why or who, and I do not want to prejudge any of that—we must learn the lessons. We must learn how to make existing regulations work and how to ensure that regulations can be modified at least to maintain and if possible to enhance safety. I notice the presence of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), who got that clause into the Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act, which only allowed regulations to be made which would maintain or enhance safety. I am sorry: I mean the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer). The House must forgive me for mixing the two up.

The hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) said that we should look at the major hazards of transport of dangerous substances. Within the Health and Safety Executive, there is an advisory committee on dangerous substances which I believe for a number of years has been considering the updating of the regulations. The regulations came to the Department of Transport towards the end of January and within two months—after settling some of the questions—I approved them, a week and a half ago.

As far as I know, no other country is carrying out such good work on the issue of major hazards of transport than Britain. We look forward to the sub-committee looking at the major hazards of transport and presenting a report on all forms of dangerous goods and all modes of transport of them. It will be looking at loading and unloading, in movement and when resting up, whether on trains, in lorries or any other way. Therefore, all the information that the hon. Member for Deptford requested will be provided.

I apologise, however, if at 4 o'clock it was not possible to give a clear definition of responsibility. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Employment for being on the Front Bench. From my time at the Department of Employment, I know the necessary links of the Health and Safety Executive with many Government Departments. That does not mean that we can always define boundary problems straight away, but there is no ducking of responsibility.

I would ask those people who are ringing my office and jamming the switchboard over a potential option for a road scheme in north London, to please stop doing so immediately. It has been virtually impossible for anyone else to ring in for the past two hours, which is one of the reasons for my coming rather late to the House with the statement.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the importance of this tragedy, but I must remind the House that this is a private Members' day, and I ask for brief questions.

Mr. Malcolm Moss (Cambridgeshire, North-East): This is indeed a great tragedy for the people of Peterborough and surrounding constituencies, such as mine in north-east Cambridgeshire. In the absence of my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) who was on duty in Northern Ireland when the tragedy occurred but who flew immediately this morning to be with his constituents, I wish to make a few comments with which he wishes to be associated.

First, there is no praise high enough for the emergency services of Cambridgeshire—the fire service, the police and the members of staff of the Peterborough district health authority. We would like to offer our condolences to the widow of John Humphries and our sympathy to all those who have been seriously injured. We wish them a speedy recovery.

Many jobs on the Fengate industrial estate are now at risk. About 40 small businesses are now devastated by the event and I ask the Government to make every move possible to ensure that the security of those jobs is not put at risk.

Mr. Bottomley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. I am aware that the impact of the accident will be felt not just in Peterborough but also in Cambridgeshire and Huntingdon.

Mr. Matthew Taylor (Truro): On behalf of my party, I would like to extend our sympathies to the family of John Humphries and also to all those who were injured in this terrible incident. I would like to extend our thanks for the brave work put in by the emergency services.

The Minister has not said whether he has any information about why the emergency services were not informed of the nature of the load. I would appreciate it if he could comment on that, although I realise that it is very early. Can he also say whether there are any rules regarding notification of such large loads of explosives as they travel around the country?

Mr. Bottomley: The view has been that that would not be appropriate. As I have said outside the House, a balance must be struck between security and such notification. I do not believe that any hon. Member needs reminding of what the effect of explosives in the wrong hands could be. Secondly, there is the issue of safety, which is labelling the outside so that the fire service or other emergency services can know what they are dealing with. After due consultation, the decision has been made to reverse the emphasis. Only time will show whether that is right or wrong. I say to all those involved in risk assessment in this and other areas that we are grateful for their work, because these issues are not easy.

Mr. Conal Gregory (York): I am sure that the whole House shares in the grief of yet another transport tragedy. Has my hon. Friend had any further thought about the possibility of a national emergency number being established? We have had the crises of Clapham, Lockerbie and others, and now a further one in Cambridgeshire. It causes great distress to the relatives involved, at a time when they are under much pressure, to remember a special telephone number. If there was a three-digit number appropriate for such accidents, I am sure that not only would British Telecom deal with that, but my hon. Friend's own staff would not have the difficulties to which he has alluded.

Secondly, as I am sure that the House will wish to have those regulations at the earliest opportunity, would my hon. Friend invite those companies which are involved in the transport of explosives to advise between now and then their movements to the services concerned, so that they can learn from the lessons and we will not have a repeat of this incident in future?

Mr. Bottomley: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's interest. One of the reasons why we have the safest roads in relation to population within Europe—possibly within the motoring world—is that we do not use the ministerial voice as a microphone to give an instant response to every suggestion, however well intended. The reason that we kill so many fewer than in other comparable countries, such as France and Germany, is that we rely on the collaborative work within, for example, the network of the Health and Safety Executive and the Health and Safety Commission, which is a tripartite body. We try to rely on the assessment of risk by those involved, together with the health and safety inspectorate. I pay tribute to its work, too.

I know that an emergency number is under consideration. Can I separate the point that I was making earlier about my own office? I may not be important, but the work of my office is on a day like this. If people could avoid using the private office number as a way of registering protests which they could make in other ways, it would be easier to obtain the information that I want to give to the House.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): The Minister will be aware that in a series of answers since the M6 crash, about the carriage of dangerous goods, he has told me that he believes that the existing legislation is adequate, but that there are increasing numbers of accidents in which heavy goods vehicles are involved. By definition, a percentage of those will carry dangerous, if not explosive, substances. Will he undertake that the regulations will not only be laid before the House the minute it resumes, but that they will contain checks and balances? If the men driving lorries, and the emergency services, are always informed of the nature of the goods being carried, they will be able to take appropriate action when an emergency arises.

Mr. Bottomley: Significant changes in the new regulations are better training, marking and information on the nature of the cargo being carried and what to do with it.

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): The Minister will be aware that, in the chemical-producing areas such as my own, there is widespread concern about the packaging of dangerous substances which are carried on the roads. He will undoubtedly remember that I wrote to him on 28 January about a specific incident in which marking had been removed from a lorry on the instructions of the police. Subsequently, my hon. Friend will remember that he wrote to me on 9 March saying that the Government were reviewing the whole question of hazardous and explosive packaging. He then gave me the welcome news that the Government intend to act on that very soon.

That letter was also warmly received in the chemical-producing area of Teesside and my hon. Friend's statement will also receive a wide welcome. I urge him to bring forward the proposals as soon as possible to ensure that those hazard markings are improved.

Mr. Bottomley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. Certainly the expertise of the police and other emergency services on Teesside and around Cleveland is immense and much relied on.

As has been said outside the House, there will be a European dimension, and we have asked the secretariat of the ADR system to review the decision that it wants to take, which is that there should not be marking.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): I welcome the tentative tone of what the Minister has said—he is always reasonable—in the hope that we will see the shock of yesterday as a great warning. There are many circumstances in which, if the incident was repeated, the devastation would have been far more severe—for example, if a lorry had been fully loaded, if it had been in a confined space and in a built-up area. Does the Minister recall the more than 50 questions I tabled more than a year ago following the conviction on a breathalyser offence of an ammunition lorry driver who was to pick up a load in my constituency. As a result of those inquiries it is known that there have been three fires on ammunition lorries in Britain and numerous collisions and other incidents over the years.

With all the possibilities of accidents not just from explosives but from chemicals and gases carried under pressure on lorries and the possibility of a cocktail accident, are we saying today that we see yesterday as a warning and a lesson? Will our best memorial to the brave fireman who died yesterday be our realisation that our long-accepted practice of allowing tons of explosives, plus loads of inflammable fuel, plus a combustion engine to pass unguarded, unmarked and unprotected along our roads at great speed within a few yards of our homes represents a combination of risks that we can no longer tolerate?

Mr. Bottomley: If the hon. Gentleman really meant that last sentence it means an end to a fair amount of industry and contribution to national employment and prosperity.

In terms of risk management, I agree that we need to ensure that we have the best possible reduction of risk and that we put our efforts into the areas that will bring the greatest return. The record of the transport of explosives in this country is good. I have suggested what I believe the figures are for the past 30 years, they may be wrong, but they are certainly in the right order. It is also important to consider this matter in a both/and sense rather than an either/or sense. If yesterday was an average day, 14 people died on our roads and 5,000 will die this year—and many of them are likely to go up in fires caused by the petrol in their cars, let alone as a result of a collision with other vehicles.

I pay a general tribute to the drivers in the heavy goods vehicle industry, whose involvement in casualty accidents has been coming down at twice the rate of car drivers.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): My hon. Friend will be aware of the concern felt not only by my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), who has already been mentioned and who has visited the scene, but by my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) who we are glad to see in his place today.

Could my hon. Friend have discussions with those companies that convey explosives and other dangerous substances to see whether, in advance of the implementation of the new regulations, it might be possible for them to improve their procedures particularly relating to the marking of the substances? That would ensure that, even before the regulations come into effect, a repetition of yesterday's accident will be made much more unlikely.

Mr. Bottomley: I know that the House will acknowledge what my hon. Friend has said about my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major). The Nobel division of ICI has, over the years, had one of the best records in terms of the consideration of health and safety. I am not saying that it or anyone else is perfect, but I am sure that it is already making the investigations and inquiries to which my hon. Friend has referred.

I have taken advice and, without being able to confirm that it is absolutely right, I believe that it would not be unlawful for any company to put markings on vehicles now. They do not have to wait for the regulations to be laid and regulations to be passed.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Will the hon. Gentleman make the regulations a little more comprehensive? Together with his hon. Friends in other Departments, will he ensure that those regulations cover the transport of nuclear weapons, radioactive and other forms of nuclear material?

Mr. Bottomley: I think the House would prefer me to take the regulations that come from the Health and Safety Commission after the work of the Health and Safety Executive and lay them before the House as they are.

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): Many hon. Members who have quarries in their constituencies will be aware that those of their constituents who live close to them will have been particularly shocked and distressed at yesterday's accident. Explosives are a vital part of the quarrying and mining industry. When my hon. Friend considers this matter, will he assure us that he will bring in the mines and quarries inspectorate to consider the safety of the materials as they are conveyed to quarries, and the route that some of those materials take? I am sure that many people will be reassured by the figures that my hon. Friend has given about accidents, which should allay some people's fears. I should be grateful if he would involve the mines and quarries inspectorate in this work.

Mr. Bottomley: I know from my previous service at the Department of Employment that the Health and Safety Executive brings the relevant inspectorates together. I believe it is better for either myself or other Ministers to be answerable in this House, but to maintain the Health and Safety Executive and the Commission as the bodies that primarily bring the industries and the experts together from all sides of industry. It is the practitioners who have the responsibility to ensure that their work is as safe as reasonably practicable and, in this respect, I believe that the record shows that they generally have. What happened yesterday was things going wrong rather than things going according to the book.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Will the Minister accept that there seems to be a leisurely course in dealing with health and safety at work regulations? A study of the current statutory instruments list shows that many of them are intended to raise charges for optical and dental examinations and a whole host of other things. Last night the House approved many instruments that will cut legal aid without any proper scrutiny. That happens when the Government want to increase charges.

Why have health and safety regulations taken so long? Will the hon. Gentleman give the House an assurance that those regulations will make absolute provisions for training and marking and that we are not about to go down the road to qualifying the requirements with the words "so far as reasonably practicable", which the Health and Safety Executive and the commission are rather fond of using? The Minister knows that those words place a cost on carrying out that requirement and such words can be used in a defence in court. We want an absolute provision so that employers are required to ensure training and proper and adequate marking.

Mr. Bottomley: Having transferred a partial tribute to the hon. Gentleman from his hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), I now believe that he does not deserve it. To introduce other extraneous matters when we are dealing with the serious issues of what happened yesterday and the new regulations that have come through the Health and Safety Executive machinery is to end this statement on a low note.

The hon. Gentleman should remember—assuming that he knew in the first place—that the words "so far as reasonably practicable" lift up the level of provision rather than providing a ceiling to it.

Mr. Skinner: That is just not true.

Mr. Bottomley: If a firm can do something that is reasonably practicable, it has a duty to do it. The obligations go beyond what is just written down if it is reasonable to do that. As somebody who is not a lawyer, I do not think that I shall take legal advice from the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my hon. Friend confirm that detonators and explosives must have been carried in the same load for the explosion to take place? Will he take steps to ensure that in future, such materials are never carried in the same load? Further, will he ensure that all explosive material is immobilised in any transit journeys of the type undertaken on this occasion?

Mr. Bottomley: I think that my hon. Friend is asking me if such loads can be rendered inert, rather than immobilised. I cannot give an answer to his first point, but I am sure that the Health and Safety Executive's inspector's report, which will be published, will cover that issue.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): Where was the vehicle destined to make its delivery? Is the Minister suggesting that the existing regulations do not require those transporting explosives to show warning signs? I am sure that many people will be astonished if that is the current practice. Will the Minister answer two questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) which I do not believe he answered? When did the consultation on the new regulations begin, and when did that consultation end?

Mr. Bottomley: I imagine that consideration—I am not sure whether it involved consultation—started in 1979, when the last amendment to the previous regulation was made. There is a continuous process of review. I suspect that the passing of the new regulations will be the start of a new process of considering what more can be introduced.

The key point is that the majority of countries in Europe still believe that our previous, and up to now present, practice is right: the security of not advertising the fact that explosive material is being carried is better than the secondary safety which will be introduced as a result of our consultations and changes of view. If the hon. Gentleman is suggesting that there is a clear-cut answer, he is wrong. It would need only one more example of illicit explosives being used to cause the death of a number of people for others to turn round and say that the "obvious" point recognised by the hon. Gentleman is wrong rather than right. I have been open with the House about the change of view as to what will provide the greater protection.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the time taken by the statement, the debate in the name of the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) will now conclude at 5 minutes to 12, and the debate on the legal profession will start at that time.

Gwynedd Health Authority

Question again proposed, That this House do now adjourn.

11.29 am

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): Before the statement I was asking who would be paying the price for the health authority's inability to develop a coherent strategy in financial and planning terms. I am convinced that in this case the patients in Gwynedd will pay the price: what a heavy price it is. Is it right that the patient pays a penalty when he or she has committed no wrong? Why should we be punishing innocent victims?

As the Minister will know, the people of Llandudno lose a children's ward, and Groesynyd hospital will close. The Druid hospital closes, with the proviso that a new ward is to be built on the Cefni site at Llangefni. The Madog hospital is to close. Caernarfon cottage hospital may have had a temporary reprieve but still faces the axe. St. David's hospital is to close and services are to be transferred to ysbyty Gwynedd.

Let me assure the Minister that neither I nor my colleagues are saying that every hospital should be kept open for all time. Hospitals need to close when the buildings are old, difficult to maintain and heat and when they become costly. However, they should not be closed at the expense of decent, comprehensive community provision.

I was astonished at some of the statements in the Secretary of State's letter of 3 March to the authority approving the plans. It said:

"The Secretary of State accepts that implementation of your Authority's proposals will in fact mean some reduction of services, including loss of beds, notwithstanding that overall implementation will maintain services and indeed improve some."

To be charitable, the Secretary of State is saying that there will be virtually no change, but, at worse, there will be a significant reduction in the provision for many people. I have no hesitation in saying that the old will suffer as a result of the plans.

On the position in Llangefni, if the health authority had introduced plans for a fully resourced, fully funded community hospital, I would not have objected, and neither would the staff and patients, to the closure of Druid.

What should be done? One does not criticise others lightly and I accept that I have been highly critical of the health authority today. I have done so only after careful consideration of the matter and in the knowledge that my views are likely to be reported. However, there are occasions when one feels that there is a duty to speak out and I do so today on behalf of my constituency and the people of Gwynedd. In my view, the authority has failed in its statutory duty to provide a comprehensive health service for Gwynedd. I call upon the Secretary of State to set up an inquiry into the affairs of the authority, as he has powers to do under the National Health Service Act 1977. If he finds that the authority is in breach of its statutory duty, he should issue a direction to ensure that it complies with that duty.

In the meantime, I call upon the members of the health authority who voted for the rationalisation plan to consider their position and ask themselves whether they can, in all conscience, remain members of an authority that has failed the people of Gwynedd.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on securing this debate. It is a timely debate in view of the major threat to the vital hospital facilities in Gwynedd. Two hospitals in my constituency are under threat. The first, the ysbyty Madog in Porthmadog, has regrettably had its closure confirmed by the Welsh Office and the second is the Caernarfon cottage hospital, which is subject to further consultation on the dental facility, but which we fear will be subject to the same rubber-stamping exercise thereafter, as has happened to the four hospital facilities that are being closed.

I need not stress to the Minister the outrage that is felt in Gwynedd about the proposals. He should know that from his constituency. The outrage was manifested in Llandudno on Monday this week when 400 people unanimously passed a vote of no confidence. He should remember the experience of his predecessor but one, now Lord Thomas of Hendon, who, because of the strong local feelings on the issue of leasehold reform, lost his seat. The Minister should take note of that lesson.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Môn has put the general arguments about the failure of performance by Gwynedd health authority over a number of years. I touched on those arguments in our debate on 14 June 1988 and they were not answered by the Under-Secretary of State. They are even more persuasive now. The guts of the argument is this question: why on earth should the ordinary people of Gwynedd who depend on these hospitals be chastised and lose their services because of the health authority's ineffectiveness—an ineffectiveness which the Welsh Office has acknowledged?

Our impression is that, because the Welsh Office was not able to get from the health authority the performance that it wanted, it sent in consultants. So as not to be criticised by the Welsh Office, the health authority slavishly adhered to the consultants' report, without differentiating between or looking to the merits of individual proposals. We suspect that the health authority has called the Welsh Office's bluff. The Welsh Office is afraid not to rubber-stamp the closures in order to ensure that the health authority does not blame any future predicaments on the Welsh Office. This yo-yo game is not good enough. There is a need for greater statesmanship and vision and a need to ensure that any rationalisation is part of a coherent, long-term strategic and investment plan that ensures that there are services worthy of the 21st century.

In Porthmadog we should be moving towards a new community hospital to serve the ysbyty and north Meirionnydd area. That proposal has been put forward on numerous occasions by the health authority but is not part of any strategic plan. The closure is taking place in a vacuum. It is ridiculous that a town of the size of Porthmadog should face the prospect of having no hospital.

The number of objections to the proposed closure is so large that the Secretary of State has failed to take proper note of them. In annexes E and F of the decision the Secretary of State said that no objection had been received from any of the community health councils in Gwynedd. That was said as a justification of the closure decision.

[Mr. Dafydd Wigley]

On 13 March, a letter from the secretary of the Arfon-Dwyfor community health council to the Welsh Office said:

"The members of my Council at their recent meeting were astounded at the statement in Annex E and F that 'no objection had been received from any community health council'. A letter was sent to the Gwynedd Health Authority on 7th March, 1988, setting out this Council's detailed objections to the proposals affecting the 3 hospitals in the Arfon-Dwyfor area, namely, St. David's Hospital, Bangor; Cottage Hospital, Caernarfon; and Madog Memorial Hospital, Porthmadog. On the same date, a copy of the letter was sent to your Department".

The Welsh Office is playing with words. On 20 March, the Welsh Office said in a parliamentary answer to me that it was firmly aware of the objection of the community health council dated 7 March but, because it was it was dated March and not April, it had referred to the fact that no objection had been received from any community health council. The Minister cannot get away with that. It is not good enough. Why does the Welsh Office not just admit that it made a mistake?

Mr. Wigley: That would be much more honourable. I see that the Minister nods. If he is going to admit that a mistake was made, that is fair enough. However, if a mistake has been made, the whole issue should be reconsidered. The Minister should go back to the drawing board because the decision on Porthmadog was reached after an 8:7 vote at the Gwynedd health authority meeting. It was a knife-edge vote. Given the enormous number of objections, the Minister should think again.

The Porthmadog hospital was set up as a trust, as a memorial to those people from the Porthmadog area who lost their lives in the first world war. Does the Secretary of State have the right to close the hospital and reduce the service in the area? Does he have the right to sell off the building? Surely it should revert to the trustees as a war memorial building. This matter may well be taken up in a legal case by people from the Porthmadog area, who feel strongly about it. If the closure goes ahead, the Welsh Office should be warned that there will be an enormous campaign to have a new, much-needed community hospital for the area.

I should like to refer to the cottage hospital in Caernarfon. There is still a glimmer of hope because the Welsh Office has asked for further consultation to be undertaken on the dental side. The Minister knows that I and my family have a strong personal commitment to this hospital. My goodness, that hospital is not going to close if there is anything that I can do to stop it. I say that in all seriousness.

Many objections have been put forward by people in the Caernarfon area and it seems that, again, evidence has been lost. I have a full list of the names and addresses of the people whom the Welsh Office recognises as having submitted objections. It was sent to the area health authority and it has come into my possession. It does not include the names of numerous people who, I know, have sent objections. I have a letter from Selwyn Griffith, clerk of the Llanddeiniolen community health council dated 15 March, confirming that objections were sent formally opposing the closure proposals. Yet his name does not appear on the Welsh Office list or the area health authority list. That is only one example. I could quote dozens of examples of people who have written in and have had their letters acknowledged, but who have not received a copy of the consultation document or any other acknowledgement of their objection. This serious matter needs to be looked into because it appears that consultation procedures have not been carried out as they should have been.

Circumstances at the cottage hospital have changed dramatically over the past 15 months, since the closure proposals were put forward. Utilisation at the hospital in 1988 was 80 per cent. of a 14-bed facility, compared to only 67 per cent. of the 10-bed facility in the original proposal. That is a massive difference in utilisation. The staffing level is now down from 21·5 full-time equivalents in 1987—the figure given in the consultation document —to 17·5 full-time equivalents. Those two factors taken together mean that the cost at the Caernarfon cottage hospital for patients is equivalent to £10 per patient per day cheaper than in ysbyty Gwynedd, one of the alternatives being put forward. It would be ridiculous for the health authority and the Welsh Office to go ahead with the closure when circumstances have changed so dramatically since the proposals were drawn up.

There has also been an increase in the demand for geriatric provision at ysbyty Gwynedd and the specialists there have used the cottage hospital increasingly for people to recuperate in the community. Further consideration is to be given to dental provision. I ask the Minister for assurances that there will be a further public meeting in Caernarfon to consider the new proposals that he has asked the health authority to bring forward. Will he also clarify whether objections should be sent to the health authority or the Welsh Office, as the Welsh Office does not appear to take much notice of objections sent to the health authority? Will he also confirm that the whole proposal to close the cottage hospital at Caernarfon will be looked at again, rather than just the dental aspect? One aspect affects the others and logically the whole matter must be considered afresh, in its entirety. Finally, can the Minister confirm that, as circumstances have changed since 1987, those changes will be considered by the Welsh Office before a decision is taken? I support the plea made by my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Môn. Members of the health authority should consider their position and the Welsh Office should consider seriously the future of the health authority itself as a result of this sad saga.

The Minister of State, Welsh Office (Mr. Wyn Roberts): This debate is being held in the light of the decision letter issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the hospital rationalisation proposals of Gwynedd health authority and I fully understand the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) and for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley). Their constituents are affected, and so are mine because I too am a Gwynedd Member.

I believe that my right hon. Friend's decisions on the Gwynedd health authority's proposals were right in the context in which they were taken and that they lay the foundations for a potentially better health service in Gwynedd. Of course, my right hon. Friend and I appreciate that the process of transition to a new pattern of services is not easy, but the long tradition of service by those hospitals scheduled for closure should not blind us to the strenuous efforts of the health authority to provide a full and effective service elsewhere. The proposals that have been approved by my right hon. Friend include a number of features which will improve the service available to Gwynedd as a whole, such as the reprovision of psychiatric facilities in purpose-built accommodation at ysbyty Gwynedd and the integration of maternity services on the district general hospital site. They also include proposals of local benefit such as the centralisation of care for the elderly in refurbished premises at Llangefni in the constituency of the hon. Member for Ynys Môn. The approved proposals provide an opportunity for the health authority to build for the future, and the Welsh Office will be watching with interest to see whether the lessons that have been learned can be applied elsewhere.

The hon. Member for Ynys Môn has spoken at some length about his assessment of the management of Gwynedd health authority. It may help, therefore, if I dwell for a moment on the relationship between the health authority and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

My right hon. Friend is of course ultimately responsible for the National Health Service in Wales, but the day-to-day running of hospital services is delegated to the district health authorities. Health authorities are responsible for providing effective and efficient services to people in their districts from within the revenue resources allocated to them. They are also responsible for planning the future pattern of services, using the most appropriate combination of buildings and equipment, within the capital funding provided to them and on the basis of capital allocation assumptions for future years published for planning purposes by the Department. Authorities' shares of both capital and revenue resources are determined each year using formulae agreed by the joint NHS/Welsh Office resource allocation working group. Health authorities are under a statutory duty to keep their finances within balance.

The hospital rationalisation plans to which my right hon. Friend has given his approval form part of a package drawn up by the health authority to bring its finances into balance. The health authority first drew the attention of the Welsh Office to its financial problems at the beginning of 1987. After discussion with the authority's chairman and senior officers it was decided to bring in management consultants, at the Welsh Office's expense, to investigate the authority's financial position. The consultants concluded that the authority's problems had their roots in 1984-85, with a developing trend of overspending on budgets in following years. The authority had managed to contain its overspending by taking advantage of non-recurrent savings—including slippage on capital schemes—and in 1986-87 by substantially increasing its creditor balances. But by 1987-88, the position had become untenable.

The consultants attributed the authority's position to the cumulative underfunding of pay awards, an increase in activity levels, particularly in high-cost specialties at ysbyty Gwynedd, the failure to make recurrent savings to finance the 0·5 per cent. transfer of funds to priority groups and the effects of incremental drift on pay.

The consultants also concluded that insufficient management action had been taken to control activity and spending levels. Later in their report they were critical of the authority's systems of planning, budgeting and financial control. It is vital that, as part of its programme to restore financial balance, the authority takes vigorous action to improve its arrangements for planning, budgeting and financial control, and I am pleased that action has been set in hand to achieve that.

The authority remained within its cash limit in 1987-88 mainly as a result of advances from the Welsh Office and the effect of emergency measures adopted by the authority when its financial crisis first became apparent. A similar combination of advances, together with the effects of the emergency measures, has contained the position in 1988-89.

The problems are the more serious when set against the background of an authority that has been shown—by both the capital and revenue formulae used to assess the relative funding position of Welsh heath authorities—to be one of the best resourced in Wales. The growth in recurrent revenue resources which will have been made available to the authority in the period 1978-79 to 1989-90 is some £21·5 million, or more than 51 per cent. after adjusting for actual and expected inflation. That is the second highest rate of growth of any authority in Wales, and it compares favourably with the Welsh average of 44 per cent.

In the light of these figures, I cannot say that I am satisfied with the level of financial management which has been shown by the authority in the past. However, I am encouraged by the steps that the authority is now taking to improve its performance in that respect.

There have been several references to the consultation procedures which led to my right hon. Friend's decision letter. It may be helpful if I outline the details of the procedures under which Gwynedd health authority consulted upon its hospital rationalisation proposals. Before I do so, one or two points have been raised by the hon. Member for Caernarfon about objections by two community health councils. I openly admit that there has been an error, for which officials have already apologised to the community health councils in question, in that the letter of 3 March conveying my right hon. Friend's decision did not record the fact that objections were submitted to him by Aberconwy and Meirionnydd community health councils following the health authority's meeting on 25 April. Although the decision letter in the case of Meirionnydd CHC was inaccurate in not correctly attributing the objection by Meirionnydd CHC, the council's two objections were discussed in paragraphs 19 to 21 and 34 of annex F of the decision letter.

In view of the council's statutory duty with regard to representing the interests in the Health Service of the public in Gwynedd, my right hon. Friend has looked again at its objections, but he is satisfied that his original view of them is correct and that the authority's proposal to close the Madog memorial hospital is still to be supported.

The bulk of the objections submitted by Aberconwy CHC was a copy of its representations to Gwynedd health authority during local consultation. They were considered by my right hon. Friend before the issue of the decision letter. A letter is being sent today to all those who received the original decision letter notifying them of the additional consideration that has been given in each case.

I am aware also that the hon. Member for Caernarfon has written to my right hon. Friend raising several points about the additional consultation to be carried out on the proposals for the cottage hospital at Caernarfon. My right hon. Friend will send a separate detailed reply to him. I should like to confirm that my right hon. Friend will be prepared to take into account all objections received about the cottage hospital as part of his additional consultation, whether or not they relate specifically to the dental service.

I have already referred to the responsibility of district health authorities in Wales for the detailed planning of health service provision. Responsibility for local consultation on the plans produced also rests in the first instance with district health authorities. In formulating plans, authorities are required to have in mind the need to make the most efficient use of their available resources which is consistent with the changing needs of patients. Ultimate ownership of all health authority buildings is normally vested in my right hon. Friend. In view of the fact that proposals for permanent closure or change of use can have a significant effect on the community, special arrangements have been designed to ensure that the public and all local interests are fully consulted. The procedures provide a right of appeal to my right hon. Friend, who decides on the proposals in the full knowledge of the contending considerations. Guidance is contained in the procedures for consultation on the closure and change of use of health buildings set out in planning paper No. 5. I stress that the role of my right hon. Friend is essentially to consider whether to approve the health authority's proposals, in the light of objections made to him. Under the consultation procedures, it is not the role of the Welsh Office or my right hon. Friend to draw up proposals of their own.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: He has a duty.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The hon. Gentleman says that my right hon. Friend has a duty, but his duty is exactly as I have spelled it out. Of course he has a responsibility for the National Health Service in Wales, but when these sort of proposals are put before him his role is to decide whether to approve them. It is not up to him to make his own proposals.

Legal Profession (Green Papers)

11.56 am

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I am delighted to have this opportunity to be the Member of Parliament who initiates our first debate on the Lord Chancellor's Green Paper on reform of the legal profession.

As, sadly, this debate has been personalised in some quarters, let me state my credentials. I am a barrister, although I make no claim to being a distinguished or senior one; I have devoted too much time to politics since the age of 20 to aspire to that. But I have a good working knowledge of criminal courts. I venture to suggest that MPs are rather more in touch with public opinion than most barristers. That is not the fault of barristers: it is simply that it is our job and not theirs.

The Green Papers have been widely reported and, it must be said, criticised by interested parties—or perhaps I should call them vested interests. There is nothing pejorative about that phrase. In a democracy, vested interests have as much right to comment as independent observers who, while they may be more objective, may be less knowledgeable.

I thought that it was time for an hon. Member to congratulate the Lord Chancellor on bringing forward the Green Papers. They are an excellent working brief for our debate. Above all, they deserve sober comment rather than hysterical outbursts in newspaper advertisements.

In my conversations with fellow barristers, it has been put to me that the Green Papers begin with dogma. My colleagues say that there is no sustained proof of the shortcomings of the Bar or of how reforms could benefit the public. The "dogma"—the alpha and omega of the papers—is a belief that restricting rights of audience and the promotion of solicitors is a restrictive practice that should be swept away. I do not view that as dogma. It is a sensible assumption.

My barrister colleagues, however, would say that such a restraint on the rights of solicitors is an historic and well-tested tradition and also protects the rights of small country solicitors, enabling them to brief the best in the land. It provides an independent cadre that is dedicated to the pursuit of justice, rather than profit or success in courts.

It has been put to me by my colleagues that, were the reforms to proceed, there would be no incentive for able young men and women to join the Bar, which would wither away as an independent force. I hope that I have been fair to the comments of my colleagues.

In my conversations with the public, I am afraid, I have found not a shred of sympathy for the barristers' case. That does not deter me from my opinions. Lawyers were unpopular long before politicans. The public seem to take the discomfiture of barristers with a large pinch of salt. I attach considerably more respect to the informed lay arguments, that barristers must take their turn to be reformed, like everybody else.

I now come to my views. I hope that they represent a reasonably informed and objective view of these matters. I hold the Bar and its traditions in deep affection. I respect its senior men and women for their learning and their commitment to justice. As a nation, we should be proud of our incorruptible and dedicated judiciary. It would be a tragedy if the independent Bar was swept away or even withered away.

The traditions of integrity, the skills and the low overheads of an independent Bar compose what is probably the most efficient economic mechanism known to man. The independent contractor freely offering his services in the open market will—this is the crux of my argument—survive and prosper if the reforms are brought in.

The experience of the Commonwealth shows that an independent Bar survives such reforms. The Australian experience in New South Wales proves that an independent Bar can survive and be prosperous, vigorous and independent despite giving rights of audience to solicitors in all courts; nor have large in-house firms of advocates in New South Wales taken work from the independent Bar.

However, we need not look to Australia to confirm that analysis. Our own experience as practising barristers is cogent enough. When solicitors were granted rights of audience in county courts, many of the same arguments were used, such as: "They cannot be trusted as instruments of justice." Not only have those arguments been proved groundless, but the independent Bar flourishes in the county courts. When one walks into any magistrates court in London—I fear that I have walked into too many in my life—one sees that the benches are filled with young barristers, notwithstanding open competition from the solicitors. Why? The barristers are cheaper. They are not paid for those interminable hours of waiting around for their case to be called.

In my experience, few solicitors running busy criminal practices with large overheads and enormous out-of-court work pressures, such as meeting clients, organising bail late at night and much else, would dream of taking on lengthy, relatively poorly paid Crown court trials. Why should they, when most solicitors have known to them a group of experienced advocates who devote their whole life exclusively to court work and to the paperwork that is directly connected with it?

Again, experience in New South Wales shows that little High Court work—only about 10 per cent.—has been taken from the independent Bar by solicitors. However, equally, I have come across solicitors who can present an excellent case in long old-style committals—men with a lifetime of experience in the law and in the lower courts. Is it seriously contended that those men of mature years, of sound legal training and practical experience, are not capable of representing a client just as ably as a 22-year-old barrister with six months' desultory pupillage under his belt? Of course not.

My barrister colleagues have said that if somebody wants to become an advocate, "Why not become a barrister?" They say, "Why should we labour for years in the vineyard for little reward as a barrister, while the prodigal son—a solicitor—walks in at the last moment and helps himself to the plums?" What sort of argument is that? The enemies of the Bar would claim that it merely shows an attitude based on exclusivity—even snobbery—that has no basis in logic.

We all know how difficult it is to start at the Bar, especially for women and for minority groups, but in reality it is difficult for all of us. We have all had that experience. If a young man or woman has been forced by economic necessity to become a solicitor and if increasing family commitments make it impossible to transfer, should that young man or woman, assuming that he or she develops into an outstanding lawyer, be denied the ability to practise his or her trade at the highest level? Of course not.

At one end of the scale there is an unanswerable case in justice for the solicitors; at the other, we have well-attested evidence that the Bar will survive and prosper, even in the face of open competition. Put like that, the case for the Lord Chancellor's reforms is unanswerable.

However, all that is beside the political point: how can we, members of the Conservative party, justify dealing with restrictive practices, closed shops and vested interests for working-class people—for dockers and print workers—but not for our own people? What would the country think of us, especially as there is widespread belief that legal costs are too high?

The public remains to be convinced that more competition will not lower costs. Indeed, members of the public consider that, if they are not fortunate enough to be wealthy or able to obtain legal aid, the legal system—certainly as regards civil proceedings—is closed to them, and that is a disgrace.

Time does not permit me in this short debate to deal with conveyancing, except to address the central issue of advocacy rights. My advice to the Lord Chancellor is to listen and ponder, and perhaps to compromise on some issues, but to proceed on the main issues of the rights of audience.

I have a few suggestions, for what they are worth. Worries about multidisciplinary practices and their effect on an independent Bar should be taken seriously, and if a compromise must be made, perhaps this is an area for so doing. However, it can be asked, if barristers are to lose their right of exclusive audience in the higher courts, why should they not be compensated by free access to partnerships and direct relationships with clients?

We are giving our opponents a handle by setting up a structure of legal advisory committees and advocacy certificates. The constitutional arguments from certain judges are, frankly, bogus. The Lord Chancellor already appoints judges, and the committees will only set down standards of practice. Perhaps we should consider simplifying matters by extending rights of audience and leave the rest to self-regulation.

In any event, I call on the judges to lower the temperature. The remark by the Lord Chief Justice was, frankly, way over the top. The judges must take the lead in suggesting consensus and refrain from using inflammatory language that does their case with the public no good.

The Bar will have to do a deal with the Law Society. The Law Society pressed the Lord Chancellor to act, and his proposals are the result. The Bar cannot will them away with a Saatchi and Saatchi advertising campaign. Indeed, it will have to do a lot better than the "Wrong, wrong, wrong" advertisment. What nonsense to suggest in that advertisement that, if the reforms were to proceed, high street solicitors would wither away. This week the Law Society published a temperate and sensible response. Its views cannot be ignored by the Bar, any more than by the Lord Chancellor.

As a Government, we believe in self-regulation. Clearly, the Bar Council and the Law Society must sort out standards of advocacy, and it is better that they, rather than we, do it. The Lord Chancellor must also do some more work on the effect on the consumer. Will this reform lower costs? As I have said, for too many people it is just not an option to go to court. Can we have more information on foreign experience?

The Crown prosecution service question must be examined in more detail. That service has not been a success. Nor, in my view, will it ever be able to attract sufficient first-class entrants, if employed barristers cannot practise in Crown courts. It would clearly be absurd if employed barristers could prosecute but employed solicitors, often working in the same office, could not. The "Wrong, wrong, wrong" advertisement from the Bar Council was also deeply insulting to the integrity of Crown prosecution service personnel.

We need more information on the nature of the Bar. I doubt that it is the small elite known to judges that it was. To what extent, however, does the esprit de corps feeling facilitate justice, and how much has that esprit de corps broken down in recent years?

Those are a few suggestions and questions. I congratulate the Lord Chancellor on having the courage and determination to take these issues on in a positive and understanding way. He has conducted himself in an exemplary fashion in this debate. He deserves the thanks and the praise of the whole House.

12.8 pm

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): We live in stirring times. After 700 years, a determined Government of outsiders has dared to question the automatic rights and the closed shop of the Bar. The Bar's response has been surprising. Here is a profession which is supposedly good at thinking on its feet and which can always see the tactical advantage and the way forward, yet from this profession I see an outraged and hysterical response—hardly the cool and dispassionate dissection of an argument that I was taught as a young pupil.

I have yet to attend a meeting as a barrister where the word "consumers" is used—certainly not with approval. Now the Bar has moved to lower forms of attack. We have already heard arguments ranging from exaggeration to obvious misrepresentation and they have done no good.

The Bar has accused the Government of a sinister attack on its independence. What of news given to me last night by a colleague at the Bar, that the Bar Council has a file on me and other hon. Members which it intends to use for future attacks? It has already criticised my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Lord Chancellor. It said that the Lord Chancellor is a Scot and does not understand the English system, that he had not thought out his proposal carefully, that he prepared it on a Sunday afternoon when he did not have a great deal of time, and that he had been pushed into it by the Prime Minister, another barrister. It says that the Prime Minister had only a short time at the Bar and does not understand how it works, and that she is simply seeking revenge for some petty pique that she acquired during her brief period at the Bar.

That is a total disgrace and does nothing to enhance the standing of an ancient profession worthy of the highest respect. The Bar argues tha the client is entitled to Rolls-Royce treatment and therefore has to pay Rolls-Royce prices, but that rests on a number of assumptions held by senior members of the profession who seem not to know or care about the junior end of the profession.

There are great variations in the ability of individual barristers and it is not necessarily the best who get into chambers or who take silk. When this year's new Queen's counsel are announced, it might be interesting to see exactly who they are. I have not had time to scan their qualifications, but I did go through last year's list.

In 1988, the proportion of QCs who had been to state schools was 28 per cent., while 72 per cent. had been to fee-paying public schools. Oxbridge provided 63 per cent., other universities provided 24 per cent. and those who had been to no university—horror of horrors—accounted for only 8 per cent. Women accounted for a mere 5 per cent. and a number of articles published two days after the silks were announced pointed out that three out of four of the 57 silks appointed that year had had the greatest difficulty in getting into chambers in the first place.

Let us examine the fate of those who do not get into chambers. They go to the City or they retrain as solicitors, but why should they not be able to become solicitors automatically? Those people are not necessarily less able: more often than not they do not come from a legal family or their faces do not fit. I suspect that part of the Bar's anxiety about rights of audience is that many of those people, who may be more talented, will be able to remain in the profession and compete as solicitor-advocates. That shows a monumental lack of self-confidence. If the Bar is the cream, the cream will rise to the top.

I know from my experience as a barrister that some of the most successful barristers have already been solicitors. The Bar must exist by its excellence alone and not be buttressed by legal restrictions.

I believe that there will continue to be a demand for the services of the Bar. Many solicitors' firms regard junior counsel as cheap overflow labour. Most clients do not care a fig for the independence of the Bar and are sick of seeing barristers fumble through cases as they learn them on their feet. The whole business of independence is a myth, certainly at the junior end of the Bar. Many firms of solicitors have a semi-permanent or permanent relationship with particular chambers and often send along junior counsel who deal with clients direct.

The system is charging for two tiers but only providing one. There are no complaints. Those of us who have had to go to Worksop on the Wednesday and have been given a file with a piece of pink string around it containing a piece of paper with a chap's name on it and a note saying, "Please do the necessary," do not complain, because that is our bread and butter, our £50 in the bank to make the bank manager a bit happier. [Interruption.] Yes I will speed up and get on.

It is worth pointing out that there is already competition between solicitors and barristers in the county court. We have had all these arguments before. We are now watching London firms and provincial firms of solicitors merging, but that is not cutting down work for the junior Bar. We should go in for purse-sharing. That is a sensible new reform.

At the top end of the spectrum the solicitor-advocate will be able to free himself of overheads and take work from several firms, not just his own. The crucial question is not the future of the Bar or of solicitors, but how consumers get a cheaper, quicker service with a more predictable outcome. The law has become a lottery in which only the rich and very determined will take part. The Government must step in once again to crush a vested interest in the interests of the overall good of the nation. Competition is a wind which generally blows the consumer much good. Solicitors have shown that they can withstand it, when they lost their conveyancing monopoly. If barristers are the cream of the profession, as many of them seem to believe, they, too, can adapt to a changing world.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): This is a short debate and no substitute for fuller consultation with Members of Parliament. It is not possible to give any comprehensive critique of the three Green Papers.

We in the Opposition readily agree that the aims and objects of the Green Papers are beyond dispute. Legal services should be cheaper, without loss of quality. They should be readily accessible, and the services of those with expertise should be more readily known and affordable. I want to deal with the principles which should govern the approach to the Green Papers.

I shall not become involved in any inter-professional row. There is no case for restrictions which exist for the benefit of the professions, not for consumers. That goes for all the professions: judges, solicitors and the Bar. They must make themselves more readily accessible and user-friendly, and they should have the ability to advertise and inform about their specialities. I hope that the idea of advertising and making specialities known can be developed.

The hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) touched on the principle of what is described as the independence of the professions. One must be careful. The independence of the professions is an important element. By "independence" I do not mean detachment from responsibility or accountability to the general public. I do not mean that the professions should be immune from change, because that would be an arrogation of privilege. The independence of the professions means that collectively they should not be subservient to the state or amenable to any detailed political control.

I take the hon. Gentleman's point that the Lord Chancellor may wish to loosen the arrangements of access to higher courts for solicitors and to have a system of advocacy certificates. He is absolutely right that, having had that broad-brush approach from the Lord Chancellor, the detailed control of such matters should be left to the professions. That is not a vested interest argument. It is simply a point which has been made powerfully by the National Consumer Council. It stated:

> "We welcome greater lay participation in the regulation of the legal profession. We are concerned, however, that the Lord Chancellor proposes to make final decisions on whether a particular area of expertise should be recognised and the standards of education and training appropriate in each case. In our view, such decisions should be made by a statutory Legal Council . . . employing its own secretariat."

The NCC then recommends that the detailed control of these matters should be for the professions, not the Lord Chancellor. That is absolutely right. We have had far too detailed a degree of political control exercised by the Lord Chancellor.

The next principle concerns the individual independence of lawyers. Lawyers are officers of the court and have an ethical duty to act properly, but their main and central duty must be the client they represent. They should be able to do that without fear or favour, or any conflict. When the Lord Chancellor is studying the conveyancing proposals, he should consider the way in which the property market has become concentrated in the hands of a few people. For example, the influential Prudential Assurance Company may well now be selling property as an agent, providing the mortgage to the vendor, providing an insurance policy for the vendor, providing—subject to the current proposals—legal service to the vendor, providing a mortgage to the purchaser, an insurance policy to the purchaser and so on. As the Lord Chancellor pointed out in the Green Paper, in those circumstances, the legal adviser will owe a duty to two people.

The Lord Chancellor must study carefully what is already becoming a complex monopoly of property services in the market. It would be strange if, at the time that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is loosening up the tied arrangements of brewers, a new kind of monopoly and ties were created in relation to other services.

It is important to ensure access to all legal services and freedom of choice for the consumer. There is no difference of opinion between my party and the Lord Chancellor about the need to provide safeguards for consumers. The Lord Chancellor must consider carefully, however, the independence of employed lawyers in relation to property transactions.

Any discussion of adequate provision of legal aid is absent from the Green Paper. We do not want the contingency fee arrangement to be some kind of smokescreen for not extending legal aid and accessibility to legal services.

This is not the time to have a detailed and thoughtful discussion of the Green Paper, but I ask the Solicitor-General to make a request to the Lord Chancellor to extend the period of consultation. There is a lot of interest in the proposals.

The Royal Commission on Legal Services took a long time to consider many representations. In view of the comments that have been made, the Lord Chancellor should extend the time for consultation beyond the May deadline, particularly since his proposals did not come from any kind of multidisciplinary inquiry, but from within his Department.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Before I call the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind), I must remind the House that this debate must conclude at 12.30 pm.

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): I shall be brief, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The Bar, as part of the legal profession, must accept that the Conservative party, which is dedicated to free and open competition, will naturally push forward its reforming ideas into the professions having dealt with many other aspects of our society.

I am concerned that the quality of the profession, its expertise in advocacy, its high standards of discipline and honesty are maintained. The independence of the Bar is not under threat from the Green Papers. Many of my colleagues at the Bar have gone over the top in their criticisms of them.

There are three important considerations. First, commercial solicitors are not coming forward in droves to seek to recruit barristers—they cannot afford them. Some 80 per cent. of solicitors' practices in this country are four-man practices or smaller. They will need an independent Bar to provide expertise on the cab-rank basis and, accordingly, it will continue. The third important consideration is that the market will rule on costs because the Bar provides a much cheaper service than solicitors, who will be unable to compete in certain areas of litigation, such as crime. For the foreseeable future, therefore, the independent Bar will survive and it is essential that it does.

There are three things that the Lord Chancellor must consider carefully in his deliberations. The first is recruitment. Earlier certificates should be granted to young barristers who go to the Bar with the intention of becoming specialists in advocacy. That must be borne in mind when considering the generalist who becomes an articled clerk to a solicitor. Barristers should be allowed to form partnerships to help them recruit and to pay new young barristers. The Lord Chancellor must give great consideration to the salaries of Crown prosecutors who will appear in the Crown court. Those prosecutors must be paid a great deal more; otherwise, the necessary quality of advocate will not be attracted.

Those are important matters, and I hope that the House will seriously consider them.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Nicholas Lyell): This inevitably has been a short debate and it has rightly attracted a great deal of interest. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) first on initiating the debate, and I thank him on behalf of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor for his kind remarks, which will be much appreciated.

It will be understood that in just over five minutes I cannot cover the whole of the broad and profound issues that are dealt with by these Green Papers. Three main issues appear to have been concentrated upon in the public debates and in the debates by my hon. Friends and the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser). They are, first, the future structure of the legal profession—I emphasise the word "structure"—in relation to the rights of audience; secondly, conveyancing by financial institutions, on which the hon. Member for Norwood has made some comments; and, thirdly, very briefly, although more widely in the public, the issue of contingency fees. My hon. Friends have concentrated principally on the first issue, which is the question of rights of audience and advocacy and the questions that flow from that concerning the structure of the legal profession.

The first point that I want to emphasise, is one that my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has been at pains to emphasise in two recent conferences—one more expensive than the other; costs may have had something to do with attendance—that these are Green Papers and that the Government are listening. They are consultation papers, on which the Government welcome comments from as broad a range of opinion as possible. I think, as lawyers, that we understand better than anybody else that it is difficult for any individual—that includes a lawyer—to put his own case. That is why the Lord Chancellor looks for comments beyond the range of lawyers and beyond barristers and solicitors arguing for themselves, and wishes to draw in the consumer and the wider public.

The second point that my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor stressed is that the measures deserve to be studied with care. They start to examine from first principles a question that has been discussed for as long as I have been at the Bar. That has inevitably been disturbing, because those who begin an argument from first principles do not feel that they can control where that argument may end up.

In the context of this short debate, I would like to draw the House's attention to a few passages in the Green Paper that show that the Government are aware of different arguments and are especially aware of arguments that may bear upon the structure of the professions.

Chapters 5 and 8 of the Green Paper concentrate on those arguments. My hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) asked what help we could draw from Commonwealth and other common law experience. The Green Paper—after reviewing some of the competitive arguments in paragraphs 8.7, 8.8 and 8.9—especially asks for comments on that at the end of chapter 8. I invite the public and the House to concentrate on the issues highlighted in those paragraphs.

The Green Paper starts with principles that I believe are very difficult to gainsay. Basically—I shorthand them—those objectives are set out in the first chapter. They are to ensure that the public has the best possible access to legal services and that those services are of the right quality for the particular need of the client.

Everybody who has spoken in this debate has said that they wish to see a continuance of a strong independent Bar. I hope that I have paraphrased correctly. They make the point that barristers should not be afraid that they cannot compete against solicitors and that barristers should have the courage to welcome competition from solicitors. I believe that that is right as far as it goes.

The legal profession has, over the years, divided itself into two portions, one specialising in advocacy and the other in general legal services, if that is not a contradiction in terms. We should concentrate our minds on how in future, on the basis of the principles proposed in the Green Papers, the profession will structure itself. There have been valuable contributions from within the House and from outside on that important question, together with important contributions from the Law Society on the question of financial services in the context of conveyancing and wider contributions on contigency fees. The Government will be paying close attention to those arguments during the further six weeks of the consultation period and before forming their conclusions on these highly important issues.

Housing Benefit (Retired People)

12.30 pm

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on behalf of thousands of retired people, for giving me an opportunity in this Adjournment debate to raise the problems facing them in retirement flats with unresponsive managers. Over 20,000 new flats and houses for retired people have been built in this decade, yet their residents have minimal rights. Elderly people have been lured in their thousands into purchasing retirement homes only to find that they have no control over the accounts or the managers. Many of them are having to suffer incompetent management and soaring costs. There is ample evidence of firms profiteering at the expense of the frail and elderly.

I am grateful to the Minister for meeting me last Tuesday and for the courtesy and sympathy he has shown on this matter. I do not believe that changes in housing benefit regulations offer a solution, and changes in management practices will not suffice. We need a change in management and a choice for residents. Many residents are satisfied with the current arrangements but many are not, and with good cause.

People responded in their thousands to advertisements such as that from McCarthy and Stone which said:

"You are free of future worries of running a large property ... Our friendly management support team, Peveril Management Services ... now offers you the perfect retirement home in Homeroyal House."

Once residents move into such homes they often find that the management prices soar. The developers are either luring people in with artificial prices or imposing large increases to swell their profits. At present, it appears that management agencies of retirement properties allow developers to write themselves blank cheques at the expense of tenants and residents. Complaints are dismissed out of hand. I shall read some of the letters I have received.

At Fleetwood farm in Southport, the managers, Northern County Homes, took exception to a committee being formed. An elderly resident writes:

"Now they have sent their bully boy with a stick. We all fought in the last war and won—but not for this kind of treatment."

McCarthy and Stone wrote to residents in Scotland's largest retirement complex in Edinburgh saying:

"We do not recognise any committee or other group as representing the views or interests of residents as a whole."

Yet Mr. McCarthy, with an eye on public relations, claims publicly to encourage residents' associations.

At High Wycombe, the Warden housing association has not produced properly audited accounts after 22 months. In Crowborough, a resident of Martlet's court wrote to me saying:

"The elderly are being conned and it is time the Government should bring in laws to protect us."

In Upminster, retired people who are not satisfied with management are forced to sell at two thirds of the market price. In Homeabbey house in Cheltenham, one resident writes of McCarthy and Stone:

"their replies have been totally unsatisfactory and often unrelated to the issues I raised. I have been disgusted with their attitude towards elderly people."

It is a scandal that retired people who have reached the pinnacle of their professions in the services during and after the war, in Churches, public administration, commerce, business and industry should be treated as if they are doddery old fools. If I were ever to hold the Minister's position, I could wish for no better or more competent advisers than the residents who have briefed me in Homecross house in Edinburgh or the retired people who have written so lucidly from Torquay to Tunbridge Wells, from Harrow to Hove and from many other parts of the United Kingdom. It is an insult to those retired people who have served this country so well that developers like McCarthy and Stone often refuse even to acknowledge their letters.

Many older people in retirement flats face spiralling costs of management charges, which are far above the rate of inflation and the rate of increase in the retirement pension. Assurances from developers such as McCarthy and Stone that costs will be kept down have proved worthless. Often the new residents have looked to move from large, draughty family homes which are hard to heat and a constant drain on their resources to a smaller, comfortable retirement home. This was to be their dream home where they could expect many years of happy retirement. Sadly, for many people throughout the country, that dream has turned into a nightmare.

In Homeroyal house in Edinburgh, residents were issued in 1987 with a brochure from McCarthy and Stone which said:

"management charges rise at a rate either slightly below or at the level of inflation."

The sales staff repeated that assurance, yet in the 18 months since one of my constituent's purchased a flat there, the management charge has risen by over 16 per cent., twice the then rate of inflation.

McCarthy and Stone has done nothing to honour its promise to keep charges down. The charge for the son of one of my constituents staying overnight in the guest room rose by 60 per cent. in the five months between April and September, although each resident had already contributed £250 to furnish the guest room—a total of well over £8,000. I wonder how much of that went to equip one bedroom and how much went to McCarthy and Stone's profits. As one resident said to me,

"The strategy is to lure retired people in. They become trapped in the vice with no escape."

In many cases, the management agency is a subsidiary of the developer. Peveril Management Services serves McCarthy and Stone, not the residents. Their interests are all too often neglected.

In Homeroyal house in Edinburgh, one of my constituents has told me that if management costs continue to rise at their present levels, he will not be able to afford to remain in his flat. We are facing the prospects of thousands of older people bankrupting themselves to feed the profits of unscrupulous developers. These people have almost no rights.

In Homeroyal house there was a burglary over a year ago. McCarthy and Stone's surrogate, Peveril Management Services, holds the insurance policy. Between January and June, none of the communal equipment in the lounge or kitchen had been replaced. Then a Minister visited the property in June in a blaze of publicity. The lounge fire was replaced for that visit, but the stolen pictures were not replaced until November; nor was the fridge, while the vases and the clock were not replaced until this January and other equipment has not been replaced over a year later. There is only one expression for such management—uncaring and incompetent. Residents were charged for maintaining a garden which does not exist.

McCarthy and Stone and other management agencies say that cost rises are inevitable, but when the accounts are examined we see that the largest rises are not in service provision of the warden or in the rises in rates, gas or electricity but result from what is euphemistically labelled "management charges". Those charges for the mismanagement of Homeross house in my constituency have risen by 18 per cent. in the past year. They are set to rise by more than 40 per cent. in the next three years in return for no improvement in service.

When I first wrote to McCarthy and Stone about these rocketing costs, John McCarthy wrote back saying that that was a ludicrous claim. I gave him the figures, and he wrote back saying that his present costs were unrealistically low. The McCarthy and Stone residents do not believe that those costs are unrealistically low. In Homeross house about £20,000 is spent on staffing, £20,000 on service provision and a further £20,000—one third of the total—goes on management charges for which only minimal management services are given.

From Homedrive house in Hove, the residents committee has written to me saying:

"We do not wish to line the pockets of Peveril Management Services."

Such letters are all too familiar to Ian Cowie and The Daily Telegraph. I pay tribute to them, to Allison Clements of The Scotsman and to the Edinburgh Evening News for alerting Parliament and the public to the pitfalls of retirement homes. My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) has also been pressing for retired people to be given justice by McCarthy and Stone.

Colonel Scott, the residents association convener at McCarthy and Stone's Homeross house, wrote to me:

"Our main difficulty is that we cannot get replies to our letters."

People have written to me from Bournemouth to Blackpool saying the same. At Homeabbey house, a resident wrote complaining to McCarthy and Stone and enclosed a cheque to settle an account. McCarthy and Stone replied saying that the original letter had got lost. Surprisingly, the cheque in the same envelope had been cashed.

Years go by, yet McCarthy and Stone still fails to produce proper accounts. The pattern is the same in Edinburgh, Bournemouth, Torbay and Torquay. Residents are promised the accounts next week, then next month, then next year and then they are told that the accounts are in the post. At Homeroyal house, only one set of accounts has been finalised in two years. At a meeting minuted in April last year, the McCarthy and Stone manager agreed to produce audited accounts in October; that was not done. In November, he told the residents that the accounts were ready; none appeared. In February this year, he informed residents that the accounts would be produced the following week. A month later, they still have not been produced.

Throughout the country, millions of pounds are unaccounted for. The money has not vanished; it sits in the bank accounts of McCarthy and Stone and Peveril Management. When the residents write to John McCarthy about that, they receive no answer. Arthur Young, the accountants for McCarthy and Stone, present accounts for charges that have not been incurred. It sends bills to residents such as one for £3,000 that was sent to one of my constituents and it then issues a correction saying that McCarthy and Stone owes the residents £2,000.

Until proper legislation is enforceable, retired people move to such properties at their peril. They face rising bills, not for rates, services or wardens, but for a bureaucracy. Experience shows that that bureaucracy has forced up costs by almost 70 per cent. Since it was announced that I was introducing a Bill to give choice, rights and protection to retired people, I have received letters of support from all over the country. I have been swamped by complaints, ranging from discourtesy to dishonesty against some of the major retirement property developers.

Mr. McCarthy spoke out in an article called:

"The truth behind the gossip."

It was so full of inaccuracies that it was really the gossip behind the truth. It was a half-fictional account of the workings of McCarthy and Stone that many of the residents found hard to credit.

People should think carefully before purchasing retirement homes. I would not urge anybody to buy from McCarthy and Stone. Indeed, I would urge them to boycott McCarthy and Stone until another piece of valuable work has been carried out in this House. The hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) has done invaluable work on a voluntary code of practice for the retirement homes industry. I very much welcome that. But the House has heard me detail the problems facing retired people.

Mr. McCarthy wrote to me on 20 February:

"We are already implementing the code of practice."

Does a 69 per cent. increase in management bureaucracy charges comply with that code of practice? Is it part of his code not to carry out repairs, not to reply to letters, to charge people £100 for parking their cars, to charge them for selling their own houses or to dictate to them who their managers and accountants will be? He has brought the code of practice into disrepute even before the ink has dried.

That is why I shall introduce a Bill on 7 April which will give people rights in these matters, such as the right to choose a competent management agency and not to have an incompetent one foisted on them. There will also be the right to have the accounts presented properly and timeously and the right to appoint an auditor who serves the residents, so that they will not have to foot the bill for the manager's accounts. The consumer is not king in the domain of so many of those managers. My Bill will give legislative teeth to the code of practice, and I hope that it will command support on all sides.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Peter Lloyd): I should like to thank the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) for raising this interesting and important subject, which I know is causing many elderly people concern. Although the hon. Gentleman and I may differ somewhat in our approach to finding a solution to the problem, I share his worries and I am as anxious as he is that this cause of anxiety for a number of elderly people should be removed.

There is no doubt that the concept of sheltered housing for the elderly is an excellent one. In most cases, those elderly people who opt to move into sheltered accommodation are happy, both with the standard of the accommodation and with the way in which their homes are managed.

The amount of sheltered housing has increased significantly over the past decade and there are now more than 20,000 homes nationwide. The industry is to be congratulated on its efforts to meet a real and growing demand. Typically, sheltered housing consists of a cluster of purpose-built flats, with some communal faciltities and a resident warden. The vast bulk of such properties are owner-occupied, usually bought outright on a long lease with the proceeds from the sale of a previous home. I understand that in Scotland the homes are likely to be freehold rather than leasehold, due to differences in property law. This has some implications for the legal protection afforded to the owners, which I shall come to later. In all cases, however, the residents will pay rates—or the community charge from 1 April in Scotland—plus a service charge to cover the costs of items such as the warden service, cleaning, heating and lighting any communal areas, and management and administration. This service charge may run into several hundred pounds a year.

The attraction of such housing for the relatively fit elderly is obvious when the home in which they have lived, perhaps for many years, becomes too large and difficult to maintain. Sheltered housing combines the dignity and independence of a home of one's own with the convenience of modern purpose-built housing, the security of knowing that a warden is at hand should help be needed, the congenial company of like-minded neighbours and freedom from the need to worry about organising and paying for maintaining and repairing one's home.

It is that last consideration—the freedom from worry about the possibility of large unbudgeted bills for unexpected repairs or improvements, that concerned the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South in his detailed and copiously documented speech. As I said, most residents of sheltered housing are very happy with their decision. But some are undoubtedly finding their retirement years fraught with unexpected anxieties caused by large bills for service charges of which, they say, the glossy brochures published by the builder or management company completely failed to warn them. In some other cases their invoices have been incorrect or misleading.

Naturally, the effect on residents facing such a situation is worrying. Most elderly people are on fixed incomes. Their capital is tied up in their home. they have budgeted prudently on the basis of the service charges that they were led to expect when they bought their property. They now see their careful calculations upset by steep increases or additional charges for "improvements" that they may not have requested and do not want.

I know that the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South is not alone in his concern about this problem. As he rightly said, my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) has been addressing this very subject through a joint working party with some of the organisations most concerned, and I am grateful for his generous recognition of my hon. Friend's efforts. Those represented on the joint working party include Age Concern, the National Consumer Council, the National Federation of Housing Associations and the National Housebuilders Federation. The aim of the working party was to draw up a voluntary code of practice with the builders and managers of sheltered accommodation, which will ensure that the good management practices of the best-run sheltered housing are adopted by them all.

The code will focus on four main principles: first, how to develop a soundly planned housing scheme; secondly, deciding what estate management services to provide; thirdly, calculating the service charges to pay for those services; and fourthly, customer information, complaints procedures and arbitration to deal with some of the problems that the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South rightly highlights.

The code will stress the need for adequate pre-purchase information and include model guidance—for example, a model leaflet on consumers' legal rights. It will ensure that developers do not hand schemes over, once sold, to inexperienced management agencies. The latter must be reputable and developers will have to sign a standard agreement with them to ensure they inherit the original obligations that the developer entered into with his buyers. The draft code has gone out for consultation and the final version should be published later in the year.

In England and Wales, where most sheltered housing is leasehold, owners already have a measure of legal protection. A long leaseholder's primary safeguard should be the terms of the lease, which should set out the basis for any service charges, including management fees, and make clear the respective rights and duties of the parties to it, including the level of ground rent, the provision of services, the level of warden cover, and so on. As the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South said, those matters should be taken into account when the original lease is drawn up or assigned.

Tenants paying management fees and for services that are recoverable as a variable service charge have statutory protection under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985. That includes a right to be consulted about major works, a right to information about costs, an opportunity to inspect the supporting documents on which the service charges were based, and a right to challenge unreasonable demands. Those protections were originally for tenants of flats, but they were strengthened and extended to other dwellings by the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.

That act gives further protection to tenants. For example, when the landlord or his agent is failing in his duties to the tenants, they now have a right to apply to the county court for the appointment of a manager to take over the running of the block; when leases do not provide for the satisfactory management of a block, any party to the lease can apply to the court to vary the terms of the lease; and recognised tenants associations are now entitled to ask landlords to consult them on the appointment of managing agents. Also, from 1 April 1989, under section 42 of the Act, all service charge contributions, including contributions to sinking funds, will have to be held in trust for the benefit of the tenants. The same applies to any income accruing from the investment of such money. That change will be very welcome for some residents particularly those in some of the categories to which the hon. Gentleman referred.

I have listened carefully to the hon. Gentleman's argument for further legislative action, but I do not feel that there is a case for additional coercive action at this stage. I would like first to have an opportunity to test the effect of the voluntary approach. I hope that the code of conduct which I have outlined will be adopted and that it will substantially strengthen the position of residents of sheltered housing. At the end of the day, it is in the interests of those who build and run sheltered accommodation to see that their management policies benefit the residents. Their business interests are not served by widespread dissatisfaction among their customers and potential customers. We must work to ensure that all management companies meet the high standards which are already maintained by the very best.

That will benefit all residents of sheltered accommodation, not merely those who are able and willing to spend their retirement monitoring the performance of their landlords and going through some complex prescribed procedure when they wish to sack or replace an unsatisfactory management company. I do not think that it would be justifiable to treat the owners of sheltered housing differently from the owners of ordinary service flats. However, I and my colleagues in the Department of the Environment will watch this issue with close attention. We shall expect to see a reduction in the complaints received from residents of sheltered housing as the voluntary code of conduct is adopted. If that does not occur, no doubt my colleagues at the Department of the Environment will wish to look at this matter again to see what might be done.

The hon. Gentleman may find it helpful if I finish by considering what help may be available to residents of sheltered housing who are now facing hardship because of unexpectedly high service charge bills. That help may be available through income support or housing benefit. The two principles underlying the way in which help is given are, firstly, that housing benefit cannot be paid to help owner-occupiers with the cost of acquiring or maintaining their own home. Secondly, when it is payable, housing benefit can meet costs related only to the accommodation itself. It does not pay for items such as care, fuel, or meals when they are provided with the accommodation.

In most cases, sheltered housing is owned outright by the occupants. Housing benefit would not be payable except to meet up to 80 per cent. of the occupant's rates or community charge if his financial circumstances justified it. If the owner is entitled to income support, some help may be available with that part of the service charge that relates just to the accommodation. This would include the cost of heating, lighting and cleaning the communal area of the accommodation. If the owner is buying the sheltered accommodation on a mortgage, income support would be available to help with the cost of the mortgage interest payments, but not with the capital element.

There may be a few examples of sheltered accommodation that is rented rather than owned by its occupant. In these cases, housing benefit could be paid to meet the full amount of the eligible rent if the tenant's other income justifies this. The eligible rent would include such items as the cost of heating, cleaning the communal areas, and the cost of providing an alarm system in property that is specially adapted for the use of elderly or disabled people. Eligible rent does not, however, include items such as personal nursing care, heating of the rented accommodation and any meals. The cost of these items is expected to be met through income support and its premiums and other social security benefits for the elderly or disabled, or help may be provided by local social service departments. Thus, a range of help is available to elderly people in sheltered housing who are on low incomes and unable to meet the costs of their accommodation.

I hope that the hon. Gentleman will realise from what I have said that the Government share his concern for the predicament of elderly people who find that the cost of their retirement homes is greater than they anticipated. Although we may differ about the best solution at this stage, I am grateful for his views. I hope that he will continue to monitor the position, in his constituency and more widely. I know that my colleagues in the Department of the Environment will be ready to consider any further representations that he wishes to make. Finally, I congratulate him on securing the time to raise this important issue today.

Miss Emma Nicholson (Torridge and Devon, West): I was born deaf and I have been liberated. Most of my hearing comes from the best of modern technology. As a result, I am 95 per cent. as good as any normal hearing person in terms of what I can hear. Sometimes in this place, I am very grateful to be able to miss the last 5 per cent., especially with the insulting things that Opposition Members shrill across at the Prime Minister during Prime Minister's Question Time. But if I look at a speaker, I can understand what is being said, because, alas I retain the facility to lip-read.

I thought that I knew the extent of the problem of deafness. After all, if one is born severely deaf and does not obtain the sort of technology that one needs until the age of 40, one has had personal experience of deafness. But I did not realise the extent of this huge problem until I received a mammoth postbag in the weeks since an excellent article was published in The Daily Telegraph by Emma Burstall. She is a young journalist who knew me from the west country, and she has just come from The Western Morning News. She asked me to explore the topic with her when she heard that I was launching a campaign. Since then, my postbag has been crammed with letters whose poignancy I cannot repeat here.

There are hundreds of people who are deaf in some way or another. There are many different scales of deafness. They have become isolated, and the quality of their lives has been greatly diminished. They have become withdrawn and do not go out. They are still looked upon as freaks or mentally handicapped by the public and even by friends and family. There is still a stigma attached to deafness.

Some hon. Members are old enough to remember a time when children who wore glasses at school were laughed at by other children who called them "four eyes". That is a thing of the past. Because of the provision of spectacles on the high street, it is now normal to have several different pairs of spectacles with different coloured frames, perhaps to match one's dress if one is a woman or one's tie if one is a fashion-conscious man, and to go in and out of opticians' shops freely, without any fear, shame or embarrassment, to purchase the correction that one needs and that modern technology provides for sight that in some way is imperfect.

However, it is a different matter with hearing. What happens when one discovers that one is deaf? The first thing to say is that it takes a little time for one to realise that one is deaf. Most people go deaf in old age. One in three people above the age of 70 has a significant enough hearing loss to need a hearing aid, but that is not all. Many young people go deaf. There is what one might call "self-induced" deafness from going to too many discotheques, from getting too close to the speakers and not turning the sound down. There is also work-induced deafness if one gets too close to a piece of loud machinery. The human ear is sensitive—much more so than the human eye. Hearing loss is easy to acquire.

Mercifully, people who become deaf through my condition—or through the reason that I became deaf—are now very rare. My mother had rubella and luckily we now have vaccinations against it, so that cause of deafness is no longer common. None the less, there are still some things for which we do not adequately test in the United Kingdom. For example, toxoplasmosis is a blood disorder for which we do not test in pregnancy as I believe we should; it can cause physical defects, including hearing loss.

As one in 10 of the population of the United Kingdom has a significant hearing loss, which could be corrected, it can be seen that this is a large problem.

If one discovers that one is deaf, one goes first to one's doctor. National Health Service practitioners often know little about hearing because the medical profession knows that it cannot do much to correct hearing loss. Very little can be done surgically except in rare instances. Nonetheless, the filter that has been set up to enable one to achieve one's goal, which is to have one's hearing corrected, is a series of fine screens, which are so effective that few people emerge at the far end having achieved their goal.

I shall take my area—the south-west—as an example. I represent a constituency with 92 villages, 35 hamlets and five market towns. It is the most glorious part of the United Kingdom and is spread over 1,000 square miles. Because it is so beautiful, many elderly people retire to our area, and because it is so lovely, mercifully, people live for a long time. Therefore, we have a well above average age profile in our population and a low pay-out of child benefit.

The hospitals to which such people must go to get their first appointment with an ear, nose and throat surgeon —that is the second hurdle that one must face—are far away geographically. It could take somebody living in the village where I live two and a half hours to get to Barnstaple. My constituents are unlikely to have transport —we are not a rich area—so they will use the hospital car service. Marvellous though it is, it is mainly a volunteer service and sometimes it forgets to come or it may be late.

The hospital car service was late in calling for the lady who lives with me. As I was up in Westminster I could not take her and she cannot walk. She was going for hydrotherapy. When, eventually, after two and a half hours, they reached Barnstaple, the appointment had evaporated. Other people in different villages may be nearer Plymouth, which can be just as difficult to get to, or Exeter, which is the third referral point for ENT surgeons and consultants.

ENT consultants are busy professionals with lengthy waiting lists. In Plymouth, for example, the waiting time —this is no fault of the ENT consultant—is over 18 months. I have two constituents aged 83 and 85 respectively who have waited for well over 18 months to get on that step of this Jacob's ladder to heaven. They still have not seen him, and the consultant can offer them no date. I hope they will not be dead by the time they get an appointment.

Once they have an appointment, it is 99·9 per cent. certain that the consultant will not be able to do anything for them, because virtually all hearing defects are inoperable. Few people qualify for Cochlear ear implants, which are new and difficult and can cause problems. So, generally speaking, the consultant refers one to the clinic in the hospital which deals with hearing aids.

As a hearing aid user, I am aware of how many fittings one may need to make the aid work for oneself. The first one selected may not be the most suitable. If that happens, it will not be the fault of the dispenser, and I pay tribute to the excellence of the audiology departments in hospitals. Their staff are superb but, alas, they are gravely handicapped in what they can offer the patient.

The NHS hearing aid provision comprises only one type of aid. I sometimes wonder whether the NHS has noticed that God has given us two ears. Balance is best achieved by both ears hearing equally, and the provision of hearing aids is designed to correct imbalances in hearing. Often when one goes deaf the two ears do not age, in hearing terms, at the same rate. Nevertheless, in the NHS it is one only, so if one is lucky enough to get an aid, one emerges unbalanced.

Being unbalanced, one canot tell where the noise is coming from. One is fussed and bothered and must turn round trying to puzzle out whether the noise is coming from behind, from left or right or ahead. We have two ears to act as funnels for the input of noise. Hearing aids are not like spectacles in terms of technical excellence. They will be one day. After all, if we can put men on the moon, why cannot we correct the hearing of those left on earth?

Instead of having spectacles ground to one's prescription so that they exactly match—or as near as science can manage—one's defects, hearing aid provision is similar to buying a dress or a shirt. There are a number of sizes. One chooses the article closest to one's size and has it altered. The hearing aid is altered by the dispenser.

The NHS thinks that we are all fat, medium or thin. On the other hand, Marks and Spencer knows in its wisdom that we range from size 8 to size 24. The NHS thinks that all human beings are one of three stock variations. I have news for the NHS. That is not the case. If one goes to a private hearing aid dispenser one can choose from perhaps 250 variations of aid.

One is given an aid under the NHS and it does not fit one's hearing. Worse still, it may hurt. Hearing loss occurs at different levels. One may have lost hearing at the lower level, affecting the lower range of hearing. The tone control on the NHS hearing aid can be adjusted to help that lower tone. It cannot be adjusted to help the top range, and one may have perfect hearing at the top. That means that the hearing aid will amplify until perhaps it hurts at the higher level of noise.

That does not happen when one goes to a private dispenser, where one has a choice of 250 variations, the chosen one then being modified to suit one's needs. The modification of hearing aids is the key mechanism in creating the perfect answer. I have the perfect answer, and I know how fortunate I am that, although I was born with this boring handicap, which I did not regard as a handicap, I am perfectly all right. But most elderly people I meet are not perfectly all right because they have to go back to the hospital time and again for fittings to adjust a wretched device which ultimately does not help them. That is why at least one in three hearing aids lives in the top right hand drawer of somebody's dressing table and the drawer is never opened.

What is the answer? I offer several solutions. The aim must be to make it as easy, simple and socially acceptable to get a hearing aid as it is to buy a pair of glasses or a tin of baked beans. A hearing aid should be a normal commodity which is bought and sold so that no one is ashamed or embarrassed, and people would put all their energies not into deflecting public criticism or family ostracism, but into the effort needed between the patient and the dispenser to achieve the best result. Not all people with hearing loss are as lucky as I am in terms of near-full correction being available practically anywhere. Most people have to seek the best possible correction while the technologists create ever better hearing aids.

I seek the provision of hearing aids on the high street with a voucher system because it is important that patients are referred by a doctor. It is crucial to see the doctor, because people go to hearing aid dispensers with conditions that have nothing to do with deafness. For example, if tinnitus—a horrible buzzing in the ears—is a new condition, it is conceivable that it is nothing to do with hearing but is an acoustic neuroma, a tumour on the auditory nerve. To leave that alone would lead to real trouble. The onset of deafness definitely needs a medical examination. If one's ears are infected, one needs antibiotics, not a hearing aid; vertigo could be the onset of Meniere's disease, so a private dispenser must have a code of practice by which he refers a patient to the doctor before he starts his work.

Hearing aids should be available on the high street, and once a doctor has referred someone to a hearing aid dispenser he should give him a voucher to buy the best possible aid available throughout the full gamut of hearing aids.

The production cost of a National Health Service hearing aid is approximately £21·50, or £23 for the better variant. But private aids are horrifically expensive. Mine is not, as I go to someone of integrity, but people have written to me that they have spent £2,000 on useless aids, nearly always because they have been sold them on the doorstep. I would outlaw doorstep selling, with no further ado. It is a dreadful way of providing a health care product. Elderly people are vulnerable at home. I have had people knocking on my door trying to sell me hearing aids. It is a disgraceful state of affairs and it is sad that companies indulge in such practices, but they do so because the number of their clients is so small. Yet the volume of people needing hearing aids is vast.

If there were hearing aid shops on the high streets as there are opticians' shops, and people had vouchers, they could spend that money as they wished on the variant that suited them best, with the doctor's chit, to prove that they needed an aid in the first place. Children under 16 should go to hospital. We must continue that facility. Perhaps the disabled need home visits, but otherwise the High street is the place.

Furthermore, I would abolish the Hearing Aid Council which reports to the Department of Trade and Industry on a matter of health. It is a most peculiar body and is oddly constructed. That is not its fault. It was set up by a Government. Manufacturers and those who are meant to represent users sit on it. It is a hybrid, a mule, and can produce no fertile offspring. There should be a council, but for quality control, reporting to the Minister for Health. The hearing aid industry which produces aids should have its trade association. When a farmer buys a tractor, he does not expect there to be a tractor council comprising all those who build tractors and farmers who drive them, working out whether they have the best mechanism for ploughing the land. Other reforms could also be introduced. That is the substance of my plea to the Minister today.

Much marvellous work is done for the blind—so much so that Guide Dogs for the Blind has £80 million per annum in income. Hearing Dogs for the Deaf does not have a fraction of that income, yet the need is as great. There is a huge submerged audience. I am proud to have been able to articulate their deprivation in the House. I call on the Minister to comit himself to investigating with his usual penetrating thoroughness and vision this social scandal. Perhaps he should set up a working party, but let it be time-limited. The problem has been invisible on the agendas of Governments for too long.

1.16 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Roger Freeman): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on an impressive and persuasive speech. She and I have been able to hear each other during the debate, which is not always the case—certainly at certain times of the proceedings in this honourable House.

Perhaps it is not untimely or inappropriate to pay tribute to those who work in the House operating our effective system of microphones and loudspeakers. Many who listen to our proceedings do not know that the microphone is switched on immediately above the hon. Member who is speaking. Hon. Members like me, who do not have as brilliant a range of hearing as our colleagues, find the loudspeakers immensely helpful. Frequently I have been saved from embarrassment when being asked an oral question which I cannot hear by catching the last phrases of the question fron the loudpseaker on the back of the Bench.

My hon. Friend and I met recently at the Department of Health to discuss this matter. Today she made six major points. I followed her speech with great care and I agree with her analysis. She talked about the social stigma and misunderstanding about deafness. She said that it was a widespread disability. She has that disability and other hon. Members and I have members of our family with that disability.

My hon. Friend spoke about the National Health Service procedures which involve waiting lists and distances to travel. She taked about the importance of having a range of different appliances available and the greater choice in the private sector. She outlined a solution, which is liberation and transferring the service largely to the high street through reference by general practitioners. She talked about bad selling practice.

To a certain extent, my hon. Friend is pushing at an open door. We have unlocked it and our hand is on the handle. I am sure that my hon. Friend will find that the Government—obviously, I speak particularly for the Department of Health—are sympathetic to her analysis. In the coming months we must work on a sensible set of reforms, which commend themselves to all those who work in the Health Service and, above all, meet patient needs.

My hon. Friend spoke without notes, with conviction and clarity. I am not so fortunate. The disciplines of office, my lack of eloquence and my comparative lack of experience in this matter dictate that, for the remaining minutes of this debate, I shall refer to my notes more copiously than my hon. Friend.

I shall commence by explaining how the NHS service operates. When people realise that there is something wrong with their hearing, their first step should be to consult their general practitioner. If, in the opinion of the GP, further advice or treatment is necessary the patient will usually be referred to a hospital. It is normal practice for a hospital doctor to examine the patient and, where this is appropriate, to refer the patient to a hearing aid centre, to be fitted with the correct hearing aid. In a significant number of cases the person referred for a hearing aid will also require specialist medical attention.

Hearing aids in the NHS are issued free on loan. Mersey regional health authority, as a national centre of responsibility, procures the aids, stores them at Runcorn and distributes them to hearing aid centres throughout the country on demand. I understand that around 470,000 hearing aids are issued each year to NHS patients in England and Wales.

A wide range of hearing aids are available under NHS arrangements and they are mainly worn behind the ear. Some are high-powered models. Most patients' needs can be met from the NHS range. I accept, however, that inevitably, the range of hearing aids is not as extensive as can be obtained in the private sector. Hon. Members will recall that that was the case when spectacles were manufactured by the NHS.

When new users are issued with hearing aids, audiology technicians usually provide advice and information on how to use and maintain them. They also provide all new users with a copy of the Department's booklet which explains how to use a hearing aid. Efficient follow-up after issue of a hearing aid is essential and that usually takes place at a hearing aid centre or involves a hearing therapist, where one is in post. The rehabilitation of people with hearing loss is not just a matter of providing a hearing aid. It can require time and special skills.

I am aware that there are long waiting times and lists to see consultants and to have hearing aids fitted in some districts, although not in all. I appreciate that there are significant waiting times in my hon. Friend's constituency. In many districts efforts are made to prioritise patients and in several general practitioners can refer patients direct to hearing aid centres. Despite those practices, I know that many people are dissatisfied with the present arrangements and would welcome improvements.

The main thrust of the Fair Hearing Campaign launched by the Royal National Institute of the Deaf in November was that adult hearing aid services should be transferred from hospitals to health centres or group practices. Children would still be referred to a hospital ear, nose and throat department, but only those adults requiring specialist treatment would be referred there. The dispensing of hearing aids would be done by a "community dispenser", who might be employed by the district health authority, general practitioners or a private company contracted by general practitioners.

Since November, those ideas have been discussed with the RNID and others involved. I must say that not all are content with what the RNID has proposed. For example, the British Association of the Hard of Hearing and the British Association of Audiology Technicians have different views. My hon. Friend has a more radical view than the RNID.

The British Association of the Hard of Hearing welcomed the fact that the whole question of hearing aid provision had been brought into the arena for discussion. It agreed, in principle, that a community-based audiology service would be a good step forward, but it is unhappy about the detail of the RNID proposals and feels that the existing NHS hearing aid service as a whole should be reshaped, rather than creating a completely new service.

The British Association of Audiology Technicians has submitted alternative proposals to my Department. It proposes a total review of the audiology services within the existing NHS system. Such a review would cover a number of issues, including staffing levels, salaries, career prospects, working conditions and funding. The BAAT also wants to retain existing audiology departments within district general hospitals, improve audiology technicians' pay and conditions of service, accelerate referral procedures and expand the NHS range of hearing aids. There are clearly a lot of important issues for consideration in each of those packages of proposals.

I stress at this point that I am talking about the provision of hearing aids for adults. I agree with my hon. Friend that the present procedures for referring children to consultants in hospitals must be right. Most people—including the Royal National Institute for the Deaf—agree that there should be no change in the procedures for the referral of children. I have explained that the NHS range of hearing aids should meet most people's needs and that special arrangements can be made for the others. Perhaps I should add that the NHS range of hearing aids is kept under constant review by a commodity advisory group advising Mersey regional health authority. The Department of Health is represented on that group. However, of course, within the constraints of the present system of procurement and distribution, my hon. Friend's criticism of the range of choice of products is accepted and understood.

I know that a number of organisations, including the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, have expressed concern about dispensers calling at the homes of potential purchasers. The Hearing Aid Council's own code of conduct rules out an unsolicited call and the Doorstep Selling Regulations which came into force on 1 July 1988 provide for a seven-day cooling-off period during which consumers have the right to cancel a contract entered into during an unsolicited visit by a trader to their home or place of work.

The Hearing Aid Council's code requires the consumer to send back a card declining a visit rather than seeking one. I am aware that this system has been the subject of particular criticism by the RNID, and no doubt the Hearing Aid Council will be considering the matter.

The private sector sells about 80,000 hearing aids a year. The Hearing Aid Council receives about 70 complaints a year, and I understand that the RNID has received 260 in the past four months. It is important that concerns of customers should be communicated to the Hearing Aid Council, so that the extent of any problems can be objectively assessed. The Government believe that home visits do have a part to play. They provide a service to some of the hearing-impaired, particularly the elderly and infirmed. Such visits should be conducted to the highest ethical standards. The House will have noted my hon. Friend's comments about practices in that area.

There is some disagreement among those who wish to see radical changes about how closely the fitting of hearing aids can be compared to the supply of spectacles. I am aware that my hon. Friend, for example, sees a direct comparison between the supply of spectacles and hearing aids, while the organisation behind the current Fair Hearing Campaign, the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, has emphasised some of the differences. Corrective lenses can return sight to near-normal, but a scientific evaluation of hearing is not sufficient to indicate the likely benefit to be gained from a hearing aid. With spectacles one immediately sees more clearly; with a hearing aid sounds are louder but, especially for speech, not necessarily easier to understand.

Subject to cosmetic considerations, people can take immediately to glasses, but it takes time and help to get used to a hearing aid. There are also differences in costs—private hearing aids can cost upwards of £400—and in the typical user, as most hearing-impaired people are elderly.

We are grateful to my hon. Friend, to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, and to all the other hon. Members and interested organisations for bringing these important issues to public attention. We are also grateful to all the organisations who have approached the Department about this for the concerned and constructive way in which they have taken part in discussions, and retained an open mind. We take their concerns about the present service—and those of my hon. Friend—very seriously.

This short debate has not been able to do justice to the complex issues involved, both for the private sector and for the National Health Service. I must emphasise to hon. Members that it will take time to consider them all, in the context of the important reforms which have recently been announced for the NHS.

I can tell the House, however, that I shall be visiting the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority, Sir Donald Wilson, on 3 April—as my hon. Friend knows, that authority is the centre of responsibility for the procurement and distribution of hearing aids—and I shall be raising those important issues with him. Before I meet him, I shall send him a copy of the Official Report of this debate. I am grateful to his authority for its considerable contribution to forward thinking about greater effectiveness in meeting the needs of all patients who require a hearing aid. I will also convey the feelings of the House on this matter to my right hon. and hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Minister for the Disabled.

My hon. Friend has asked for a working party. We have not one but several working parties already addressing some of the issues to which she has referred. This is an extremely important matter and, as I have said, we have sympathy with some of the arguments put by my hon. Friend and other hon. Members. I shall consult my colleagues and write to my hon. Friend concerning any issues that arise from my meeting with Sir Donald Wilson. I can assure my hon. Friend that our consideration of the case for reform will continue in earnest.

Housing (Newham)

1.30 pm

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-East): No Member of Parliament could represent a constituency in the London borough of Newham without living every day in the knowledge of the appalling housing of so many of its people, the gross overcrowding of 6,750 households, the chronic shortage of affordable rented accommodation, the thousands of desperate people on the council's waiting list —currently 9,511—the 4,541 people on the transfer list and the 600 homeless families living in squalid bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

The crisis hangs like a pall of misery over the borough. It is with us constantly, with every telephone call, every postbag and every weekend surgery. Sometimes I think that hon. Members should swap surgeries and, on occasion, I should take the surgery of a Conservative Member, perhaps in a leafy suburb, while he or she takes one of mine in the inner city. In that way, they would meet the frustrated people who come to see me. They would meet the families sleeping in one room, people with fungus growing on their walls, people with leaking roofs and without adequate heating, bathrooms or inside lavatories. They would meet people without hot water and with dangerous wiring and people who cannot find anywhere to live and whose lives are being destroyed, and families who are breaking up under the strain. They would meet the genuine people who have been on the waiting list for years and are losing hope of ever being rehoused.

I would like Conservative Members to meet those people because that is Britain in 1989 after 10 years of their Government. They are our fellow citizens. Conservative Members would come out of those surgeries, as I do, emotionally drained and, I hope, shocked, bewildered and ashamed that we permit such things in our country today.

The housing crisis is a scandal and disgrace. It has been intensified every year the Government have been in office. We sometimes talk of the freedoms our citizens should enjoy in our society such as the right to free speech, and the right to vote. I would add to that list the right to a job and, after GCHQ, the right to join a trade union. But perhaps the most basic right of all is the right to a home and a roof over one's head. That is recognised even in primitive societies where, when a couple marry, the tribe rallies round to build them a hut. However, in modern Thatcherite Britain that is thought to be beyond us.

The Government's policy has been to encourage home ownership. There is nothing wrong with home ownership. Aneurin Bevan said that there is nothing in Socialism against owning one's own home, but that what we were against was someone owning several thousand other people's houses and exploiting them à la Rachman. Perversely, the effect of the Government's policy has been to push up house prices to unprecedented levels, thereby preventing access to home ownership. Some people talk of a rising market or a boom in house prices as if it were a good thing. However, when the price of anything else rises, it is known as inflation. The Government are supposed to be against inflation but they have engineered the biggest house price inflation in history, making it impossible for first-time buyers to buy. Is it any wonder that we cannot find train crews for the Northern line or bus drivers, nurses and teachers? They cannot find anywhere affordable to live.

On top of that, those who mortgage themselves to the hilt to obtain somewhere to live, find themselves clobbered by the Chancellor's interest rate rises. The increases in August and October mean that the average home loan rate of 9·5 per cent. has rocketed to 13 per cent. That means that on a £30,000 mortgage over 25 years borrowers have to pay an extra £52·80 a month. On an endowment mortgage, they have to pay an additional £65·62 a month and it will be double that for a £60,000 mortgage. Is it any wonder that people are putting "For Sale" signs on their dream homes and many are becoming homeless as building societies foreclose? All that is under a Government who pretend to support home ownership.

We need affordable houses to rent. We have 1 million fewer homes for rent in the private sector now than in 1979. The Government's efforts to reverse that will fail because it is more profitable to sell with vacant possession than to rent. The people who come to see me want local authority housing. That is the popular demand. That is precisely what the Government are destroying as a deliberate policy. They want to get the councils out of housing, and have said so.

In 1977-78, the last full year of the Labour Government, 78,606 homes were started by local authorities in England and Wales, but by last year that figure had been cut by 79 per cent. to 16,193. There has been a relentless decline. New building is grinding to a halt. In Newham there were 1,079 new build starts in 1978-79, but in 1986-87, only 83, in 1987-88 only 31 and in 1988-89 only 66. At the same time, up until September 1988, 4,120 homes were sold under the right to buy. A further 3,287 applications to buy are outstanding. This represents a quarter of the total council stock, and the best three-bedroom houses at that.

The receipts from those sales cannot be used for new building because much of it goes to the Treasury. If the stock is sold, building is stopped, private renting diminishes and people are priced out of access to owner-occupation, what happens? There is an epidemic of homelessness. Newham has had a 12·5 per cent. increase in applications from homeless people each year since 1981. The cost of temporary accommodation to the council has increased from £52,000 in 1983-84 to £5·5 million in 1987-88. In the 1960s only 3 per cent. of lettings were to homeless people. In each of the past five years the majority of lettings has been to the homeless.

The council's 1989-90 housing investment programme bid—this is my main purpose in having the debate—was £100·65 million but the Government's allocation was only £14·432 million. That allocation was a cut in real terms of 24·3 per cent. over the previous year's provision and a cut of 69 per cent. over 1978-79. In other words, this year we shall get only 31 per cent. of what the borough got in the last year of the Labour Government. Housing has borne the largest cuts of all under the Government and it is destined to get even worse. Public expenditure plans show at national level a further reduction of local authority capital spending from £3·153 billion to £2·8 billion in 1990-91, an 11 per cent. cut and £2·65 billion in 1991-92, a further 5 per cent. cut.

It should be emphasised that the HIP allocation is not a Government grant but permission to spend and borrow. Virtually all housing, private and public, is financed by borrowing. Most of that expenditure is planned to be funded by capital receipts, much of it from the sale of council houses. Perversely, the new Housing Act 1988 will restrict Newham, along with other authorities, to only 25 per cent. of its capital receipts. That is astonishing. The council is prohibited from spending its own money. It cannot spend receipts from selling council houses or new buildings.

The council is asking not for Government money, but for freedom to spend its own, but that permission is refused because of crazy ideological dogma, because the Government want to push councils out of housing provision. The Government have said that they do not want councils to build any more houses and they want their existing estates sold off. In fact, at the launching of the Housing Bill, the Secretary of State for the Environment the right hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) said:

"We'd like to see council house building at a low level with local authorities composed of providing housing in certain categories such as hostels or sheltered housing."

If the councils cannot help the desperate people who come to my surgeries, who will? This basic need cannot be left soley to market forces. Millions of people cannot afford to buy or rent on the open market. What will happen to them? If the Government are not interested or do not care about them, why should they deliberately obstruct local councils in spending their own money to help people in acute need? That policy is not only evil, but economically illiterate, because councils are giving priority to void reinstatement, rehabilitating empty homes and new build. It costs twice as much to keep families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation as to build new homes.

The reduced housing investment programme allocation means that Newham cannot give much help to housing associations, although the original bid included £18·4 million for such projects, nor can it give discretionary grants to occupants of private housing. The reduction significantly restricts the programme of improving existing council stock. There is a huge backlog of repairs. The total expenditure necessary to improve existing stock is an enormous £120 million. The 1989-90 HIP bid asked for £6·5 million for security work, lift renewals and refurbishment for 20 tower blocks. The cut in allocation means that that has had to be reduced to £2·5 million. That means that work can only proceed on eight blocks. One of the results of that is that the residents of 12 blocks will continue to live in abysmal conditions. Only this week, an environmental inspector said that in his opinion, one block was unfit for human habitation. Pointing to the dangers, he said that the balconies were a "stepladder to oblivion". Six months ago, a 20-month-old toddler fell to his death from the balcony of his home in that block.

The borough is having to restrict the number of repairs it is able to carry out on council properties, laying up bigger and more expensive problems for the future. The inevitable and only conclusion is that the Government's decision will mean that the condition of housing in both the public and private sectors in Newham will continue to decline and homelessness will become worse. It is an appalling and evil policy. I meet the human consequences at every surgery I hold. Homeless applications are currently running at about 200 per month. The Audit Commission's recent report said that homelessness has been increasing "over a long period of time, across all types of authority, in different regions, under all types of political control and widely varying housing policies."

Newham has more than 500 families in often squalid bed-and-breakfast accommodation. They sometimes live in ill-lit, overcrowded rooms without tables or chairs for meals, with no privacy for parents or children, with no place for the children to play or do their homework and no readily available doctor, social worker or health visitor. Newham has another 500 families in other forms of temporary accommodation. The lunacy is that it costs more to keep families in such accommodation than to build new homes, but the Government will not allow the council to do that.

The Minister may mention Estate Action. Let me tell him that the council has had 11 Estate Action bids rejected. Furthermore, now that the Government are insisting that 50 per cent. of the capital cost of Estate Action programmes count against existing HIP allocation, the council is wondering whether the scheme is worth the paperwork. The £200,000 received under the area renewal initiative is too little to be significant.

The council has no ideological hang-ups about working with the private sector and housing associations. It has concluded a partnership agreement with Laing to demolish the eight remaining TWA tower blocks of the Ronan Point type and to develop the site. It has already sold, or is completing the sale of, a number of sites in its ownership to housing associations. All the council's sites are being reviewed with the option of disposal being considered. The problem is that the level of housing association grant for housing association schemes, coupled with the high price of land and construction costs, will put the level of rents of many of those schemes beyond the reach of most of the people in the most acute housing need in Newham. The truth is that, even with the fullest possible co-operation with the council, those high costs, the recent decontrol of rent, the limitation of security and the inadequate level of subsidy mean that housing association and private sector housing cannot be an adequate substitute for local authority housing in Newham.

The Government's policy of stopping council house building and pushing councils out of housing has caused and is exacerbating the housing crisis in the borough and even more human misery and family breakdown. The council's housing investment programme for 1989-90 was a carefully worked out, realistic and necessary programme, decided upon by those on the spot. By rejecting it, the Government have sacrificed the interests of the local community to ideological dogma and condemned thousands to more heartache.

I shall allow the Minister as much time as I have given myself. I hope that he will respond seriously and not take refuge in knockabout attacks on local government as he has on previous occasions—by pretending, for example, that the borough has a large number of voids. That is certainly not true of Newham, where only 1·5 per cent. of council stock is empty; indeed, a previous Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State congratulated the borough on its policy on voids.

Nor does Newham have large rent arrears compared with those in other boroughs. Rent arrears are being reduced in Newham. The figures tend to be misleading because Newham does not write off bad debt, as some boroughs do. It has a twin track policy on rent arrears: it actively counsels tenants whose rent is in arrears and it operates an active collection policy, including recovery through the courts. Its decentralised housing offices all have targets for the recovery of rent arrears. I hope that the Minister will not try to shelter behind that argument. He will know that the Government's housing benefit changes have caused problems in this regard. In my constituency some people are now spending 40 per cent. of their income on rent.

I hope that the Minister will address the housing crisis in Newham seriously. The Government now have a £14·5 billion budget surplus—a great opportunity to tackle the infrastructure and the housing backlog. I shall continue to raise this matter in the House and to keep it to the fore, and if I can get the Government to take it seriously, I shall have worked in the interests of my constituents.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. David Trippier): I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak about housing in Newham. In fact, I am pleased to be allowed to speak at all, Mr. Deputy Speaker—in complete contrast to your experience and mine in the early hours of Tuesday morning.

In Newham, as in many other areas—but in Newham in particular—we are entering a new period of promise, despite what the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) felt obliged to say. That promise has been built up over the past 10 years during which the tide has turned against years of neglect of a supposedly unfashionable part of London that has had to shoulder the legacy of a past that has sometimes been colourful but which has generally been weighed down by the burdens of industrial decline. Many housing difficulties remain to be overcome in Newham but they are now being confronted through Government policies which will transform housing in the area.

Let me respond directly to some of the questions that the hon. Member for Newham, North-East asked in his speech. There has been a significant decline in the private rented sector—from 50 per cent. of the total housing stock immediately after the war to 8 per cent. now. That is totally unacceptable. The amount of private rented sector housing has fallen for two reasons—first, because the Rent Acts have inhibited those who would be private landlords or potential investors in private rented stock, and secondly, because of the expansion of municipalisation. The problem that we face with large housing stocks—and no one denies that Newham has a large housing stock—is that it is impossible for local authorities to control and manage it effectively. I shall return to that later.

There will not be much political knockabout in my speech, and I assure the hon. Gentleman that I shall address myself to the questions that he raised. I must say, though, that I find it fascinating that, despite the Labour party's love of municipal housing, the last Labour Government reduced public expenditure in public housing in each of the three years before they were kicked out of office in 1979. Labour Members have never given me a suitable explanation of that—either because they cannot or because they know what Conservative Members suspect —that the Labour Government were forced to take such action through the IMF intervening. We are all familiar with that period in the Labour Government's chequered history.

I will concentrate on two main ways in which the Government are acting to improve the homes and lives of Newham residents. First, we are acting through the opportunities provided by the Government's policies for the regeneration of east London—docklands and the areas beyond. All will benefit from the increased wealth that those policies are bringing. Housing has a major part in that regeneration. Secondly, we are acting through the Government's housing policies which offer choice, effective targeting of resources, and the attraction of private resources along with public money, in place of the hopelessly monolithic and unimaginative solutions which have previously been tried with good intentions but with poor results.

Let me begin with the first, by explaining the benefits of the exciting programme of the London Docklands development corporation for the royal docks. Although the hon. Gentleman tried to convince the House that there is no ideological difficulty with the local authority of Newham working with the private sector, I have not seen much evidence of Newham council working with the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Leighton: I am surprised that the Minister should say that. Does he know of the memorandum of agreement between the borough and the LDDC? The LDDC has promised to provide 1,500 houses for rent in the royal docks. The LDDC is falling behind and not delivering on the promise. The borough is working. It has regular monthly meetings with the LDDC. It is anxious to work with it.

Mr. Trippier: The last part of the hon. Gentleman's intervention tends to devalue the currency of what he is saying. He and I know how many questions he puts down in the House, which he is fully entitled to do, on the LDDC. He loses no opportunity to have a swipe at it in any debate on the Floor of the House.

I welcome the fact that Newham is working with the LDDC better than it has done in the past, but I have pointed out to the hon. Gentleman—if not to him directly, certainly to other hon. Members who represent Newham —that I should like to see an opportunity being taken to fill the vacancy on the board of the LDDC. Other local authorities are prepared to have borough councillors sitting on the boards. The hon. Gentleman knows that, if they were to respond positively, I would welcome it and also respond positively.

The programme to which I was referring and which the LDDC has promoted has meant a huge transformation in an area which was a sterile part of the borough of Newham. The LDDC has already spent or contracted to spend about £200 million in that area on land reclamation and new roads and transport links and other infrastructure. A whole new community will soon begin to emerge from the previous dereliction, providing major new shopping and leisure facilities, thousands of jobs—they are important to the hon. Gentleman and to myself—and, importantly, thousands of new homes.

It is planned that 7,600 new homes will be built in the royal docks. They will include a substantial number of subsidised homes let at rents affordable to lower-paid families. The Winsor park scheme will, I hope, provide about 500 of them. I welcome the co-operation between the public and private sectors, including the local council, which should make that scheme possible.

[Mr. Trippier]

It is not only the homes directly within the new docklands community that will benefit from this massive new investment. I am confident that the benefits will spread far and wide throughout the borough and beyond. I remind the House that the Government's plans for the regeneration of east London include but do not end with the docklands programmes, massive though they are.

In February, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, announced new proposals which were welcomed by the hon. Gentleman for major new transport links between central London and east Thameside. Earlier this month, my right hon. Friend informed the House of the consultants' findings on the possibilities for providing up to 20,000 new housing units on five sites in east Thameside. Those sites would be able to benefit from improved transport links, and the Government have said that they hope that they can be developed. Three of these sites—at Stratford, the Beckton gasworks and the lower Lea valley—involve land in Newham, and another is immediately adjacent to the borough, at Barking reach. All of them have potential to breathe new life into the housing of east London.

All these exciting new opportunities for housing extension were taken into account when my Department published the draft strategic planning guidance for London on 6 March, which showed that the projected extra dwelling provision for Newham in the years 1987 to 2001 would amount to 14,000 units, the highest for any London borough. I am delighted that Newham is taking a lead in London housing in that way.

The hon. Gentleman has trailed a lot of figures purporting to show that many people in Newham could not afford to buy new homes in the area. I know that many people in Newham are not well off and that housing must be affordable to them, but the hon. Gentleman should not under-estimate the capacity of people to buy their homes. Look at the success of the right-to-buy policy on which many Opposition Members have poured scorn. Many Labour authorities are still trying to frustrate the policy. When hon. Gentlemen refer to the housing investment programme, they often fail to mention the amount of money that is drawn down in capital receipts. Of course, that makes a substantial difference to the money that is available for improved housing within borough boundaries.

The Government's policies will provide new wealth for the people of Newham and new capacity for them to buy their own homes, if they wish to do so. I assure the hon. Gentleman that I shall always be on the look-out for sensible and realistic ways to assist people in that endeavour.

I shall deal with the resources that are being invested in Newham's public housing and how those are being targeted to achieve most effect. Public housing forms about 36 per cent. of the stock in Newham. That stock needs resources to be drawn from all available sources, and used and managed effectively. Local authorities set their own priorities for housing within the total resources available to them. On 1 November, my right hon. Friend announced that the gross provision for capital expenditure by local authorities on housing in 1989-90 will be 13·5 per cent. higher than had been previously planned. This is the fourth successive year in which it has been possible to increase provisions, thanks to the continuing success of the right-to-buy policy. Through the receipts that that provides, local authorities have the growing resource of spending power to supplement capital borrowing.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned Estate Action. I announced on 14 December that allocations to local authorities through the Department's Estate Action programme would again be increased in 1989-90, by 36 per cent. to £190 million. Estate Action targets resources at rundown council estates.

We cannot accept all of the bids that are made by local authorities, but in view of the substantial increase in real terms, that we have given to the Estate Action programme, it is clear that we shall be able to accept those programmes more than ever before. We are only too delighted to work with local authorities, especially in London, using this means of delivering taxpayers' money to turn round those estates in the worst condition. The contribution of the local authority to which the hon. Gentleman directly referred, should match ours. In that way this would be a true partnership. I have heard of many successes in Newham's Estate Action programme.

Mr. Leighton: I am listening to the Minister with great interest and close attention. Because only two minutes are left for the debate, I hope the Minister will agree that this discussion must continue. Would he accept my invitation to sit down with us on the spot, in Newham, and continue this discussion?

Mr. Trippier: Yes, I am only too happy to go to local authorities to discuss things in that way, and I certainly accept the hon. Gentleman's invitation. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. A visit might help us to clear up some of the points that I was making earlier. Perhaps it might even lead to further improvements in the relationship between Newham and the London Docklands development corporation, which possibly both of us might welcome. Because of the time it is impossible for me now to cover all the points that were raised by the hon. Gentleman and in view of his kind invitation I shall be only too happy to continue the conversation as he suggests.

My difficulty—perhaps I can get this quickly on the record—is that despite what the hon. Gentleman says, Newham has the highest percentage of vacant dwellings in the whole of London. That must be looked at, and although he has tried to explain it to the House—[Interruption.] It is not a matter of conjecture; it is a statement of fact. I understand that there are special reasons relating to the empty TWA system blocks which push up—[Interruption.] Yes, this is part of it—which push up Newham's total, as do the dwellings on the Woodlands estate, where the council is in partnership with Laing in refurbishing vacant properties. Nevertheless, given the general problems of homelessness, local authorities could make far better use of their stock—this applies to all local authorities—and I look to Newham to make every effort to bring its vacant properties back into use wherever feasible.

2 pm

Mr. John Prescott (Kingston upon Hull, East): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for delaying colleagues for a few seconds, but today on ITN, we witnessed again a clear breach of air security at Heathrow. Three lads have taken film of themselves boarding a British Airways jumbo jet and getting into the cockpit. In view of those circumstances——

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): Where is the Minister?

Mr. Prescott: In view of those circumstances and of the warning received from the Federal Aviation Administration about the possible hi-jacking of a plane, have you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, received any notification from the Secretary of State for Transport to the effect that he can tell us anything about the latest breach of security, especially in the light of his assurance to us in the House less than 70 hours ago that security at Heathrow is okay? It is not, and the travelling public are concerned about it. It is outrageous. The Secretary of State should appear before the House to explain his position.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I have not received a request from the Secretary of State about a statement. The hon. Gentleman has put his point on the record.

Magistrates Courts (Clerks)

2.1 pm

Mr. Michael Shersby (Uxbridge): Just over 16 years ago, on 12 December 1973, standing in the place where I now stand, I raised in an Adjournment debate the status and salaries of clerks in the magistrates courts. I said:

"It is . . . quite clear that until proper recruitment and training schemes are available in the longer term the courts will be compelled to cope with an increasing amount of work with an inadequate complement of court clerks.

That situation is quite unacceptable. Urgent remedial action in the short term is therefore essential. The central problem is that the supply of court clerks has dried up because of the poor salary structure. In addition, the magisterial service does not offer career prospects which are attractive to the type of young man or woman it is hoped to recruit."

I hope that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will agree that I do not often quote my own speeches, but having made that speech 16 years ago, I must point out that it is still highly relevant because I now have to raise these matters once again.

Replying to that debate, the then Minister of State, Home Office, Mr. Mark Carlisle, who is now my noble friend Lord Carlisle and sits in the other place, said:

"I am aware of the overall problem, and particularly the problem of vacancies among positions for court clerks in the magistrates' court at Uxbridge, which has heavy lists and which has had to change and curtail sittings because of this shortage."

He then said that he appreciated that salary scales were important but that

"The Home Office is not represented on the committee"— that is, the Joint Negotiating Committee for Justices' Clerks' Assistants—

"and cannot take any initiative in questions relating to salaries."

Despite the fact that that debate took place 16 years ago and that I highlighted then the real problems of recruitment, training and salaries, it appears that nothing much has been done by the Home Office in that time and, as a result, today we are facing a crisis in the magistrates courts.

The recruitment crisis is now both real and immediate. In December 1988, there were at least 167 vacancies for court clerks. At least 294 court sittings were cancelled in England and Wales and much public money is having to be spent on agency fees—£120 to £150 a day for agency lawyers who have to be brought in to act as court clerks.

According to a massive telephone poll of justices' offices throughout the country carried out this month—nothing could be more up-to-date—magistrates courts in England and Wales, apart from inner London, have a total of 278 court clerk vacancies and 35 trainee vacancies. That resulted in 473 cancelled half-day sittings in February, giving a national average of five cases per sitting. That means that about 2,500 cases are unheard. In short, in the words of the famous statesman William Ewart Gladstone:

"Justice delayed is justice denied".

Of the 278 vacancies, 117 trainees are in some of those slots in temporary appointments. As a result, magistrates are not getting experienced advice, and that is serious.

In outer London, there are 16 court clerk vacancies. In other parts of the country the situation is giving rise to concern. Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire and Cambridgeshire have 13 vacancies; in Lancashire there are 19 vacancies; there are three in Slough, not far from my constituency; five in Luton; nine in Yorkshire; nine in Wessex; and in Manchester there are three vacancies, which are currently filled by trainees.

The shortage is acute because of continuing poor pay and the divisive award following the recent arbitration. Mr. David Simpson, clerk to the justices of Uxbridge magistrates court, tells me:

"The situation has become so serious now that unless action is taken urgently, the crisis will become even worse and the magistrates' courts will not be able to function properly in many parts of the country."

The Justices' Clerks Society is convinced that the separation of the functions of legal adviser and administrator would not be in the best interests of magistrates courts, or in the public interest. I therefore welcome the magistrates courts review of procedure which was announced in answer to a parliamentary question tabled by my right hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess). Can the Minister say when that review will be completed? Is it on schedule, and will it report to the Home Secretary in June, as was envisaged when the review was announced? Will the review of the management and control of resources in magistrates courts include the salaries, training, recruitment and status of court clerks?

Morale among those admirable men and women who clerk the magistrates courts has never been lower. The reason, simply, is that the magistrates courts service is losing out to the Crown prosecution service and to solicitors in private practice, who of course receive higher salaries.

There is today a crisis in law because of a shortage of lawyers. Is that because too few lawyers are being trained? An explanation given to me recently by an hon. Friend who is a barrister is that a number of women who qualify as solicitors do not subsequently practise for long or that their careers undergo long breaks for understandable family reasons.

I come now to the determination of salaries by the joint negotiating committee. My noble Friend Lord Carlisle said in 1973:

"The Home Office is not represented on the Committee and consequently does not and cannot take any initiatives in questions relating to salaries."—[Official Report, 12 December 1973; Vol. 866, c. 576.]

My hon. Friend the Minister made a similar point in answer to a parliamentary question from the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 13 March. That appears to be a very effective screen behind which Home Office Ministers can protect themselves from being held accountable for salary awards. I hope that my hon. Friend will not consider that a particularly unkind remark, but he will understand the frustration I feel after raising this matter in the House for 16 years and continually being told that the Home Office cannot intervene is not responsible and is not represented on the committee.

Is it not the case that every agreement negotiated by the joint negotiating committee or any award made on arbitration is subject to Home Office and Treasury approval? We all know that the Treasury has to provide the money, so why does the Home Office allow an apparently arms-length negotiating procedure to persist and deprive itself of the political initiative that is necessary if the long-running saga of underpaid, under-trained and under-motivated clerks is to be concluded satisfactorily?

The publication of the Andrews report on salaries for Government lawyers highlights the need for salaries to be pitched at a level which will attract and retain lawyers of the appropriate calibre. Some court clerks with whom I have spoken recently feel that the Government have wilfully engaged in depriving the magistrates courts of some of their principal assets—their clerks—to staff the Crown prosecution service. I cannot emphasise too much how bitter the magistrates courts clerks feel about the siphoning off of their best personnel to the Crown prosecution service.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has managed to persuade the Treasury to buy the Crown prosecution service out of its recruitment crisis, but that has been done mainly at the expense of the magistrates courts, and the arbitrators have now suggested that in future the backbone of the courts service must be the unqualified diploma holders. In other words there will be a second-class service. Does my hon. Friend believe that that will be satisfactory for the magistrates courts? Does the House consider that that is good enough for a very important part of the legal system? It will take at least three years from next autumn before the service receives any benefit from the influx of newlyqualified diploma holders.

Finally, may I draw to my hon. Friend's attention the report of the outer London working party on the recruitment, training, remuneration and retention of court takers in the outer London area? It concludes that there is concern about "the dilution in the quality of staff now available to advise lay justices. This, coupled with the incompetence of barrister agents employed by the Crown Prosecution Service to prosecute cases adequately before our Courts leads to the inevitable conclusion that unless the Government fully commits itself to supporting our service then the quality of decision making will eventually be the subject of adverse comment in the High Courts."

That is a very serious conclusion from such an expert working party and I look forward to my hon. Friend's comments when he replies to the debate.

J. Edgar Hoover said:

"Justice is incidental to law and order."

Not many hon. Members will disagree with that observation even if they disagree with the policies adopted by J. Edgar Hoover. It is vital for my hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to realise that lay magistrates, not just in my constituency of Uxbridge but throughout the country, are becoming deeply concerned that they cannot do their job effectively or discharge justice properly unless they have at their disposal properly qualified and properly paid court clerks who have a status in society which is respected and admired as it was in years gone by.

I do not believe that it is beyond the power of the Home Secretary or, indeed, my hon. Friend the Minister to persuade my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer before next year's Budget that additional resources should be made available to pay these people properly. Pay is at the centre of the problem. From a decently paid court clerks' profession would flow better justice, more satisfied magistrates and a more efficient organisation of the whole magisterial system.

2.14 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): I can assure my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I never stop talking to our right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer about these and other issues. Perhaps it has been the success of three Home Secretaries since 1979—Lord Whitelaw, Sir Leon Brittan who is now a Commissioner in Europe and my right hon. Friend the present Home Secretary—that those discussions have secured the most substantial growth of any Government expenditure programme, by some 52 per cent. on law and order services.

I am the first to recognise that certain parts of the law and order and criminal justice system feel that they have not benefited from the biggest increase in public expenditure in nearly a decade of Conservative Government, but the increase shows the great importance which the Government give to the workings of the criminal justice system. I want to reassure my hon. Friend that we talk regularly to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his brother Ministers about these issues.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for ventilating a tricky subject which it is not easy to discuss. I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) in the Chamber. He has a long-standing interest in these issues. I am not sure whether it is as long-standing as that of my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge, whose interest goes back 16 years, but my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst is a magistrate.

I was reflecting that 16 years ago I was pounding the streets of Oxford trying to become a city councillor—which I did, much to my surprise, by one vote. At that stage my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge was here, making the same point, which is why he is so angry at having to make it again this afternoon.

I share the concern expressed about the shortage of court clerks who support justices' clerks in taking courts. As I said, it is not an easy issue for me to brush under the carpet. The latest figures provided by the Justices' Clerks Society show a picture which is even more difficult for the service than that which my hon. Friend painted. On 28 February 1989, there were 278 vacancies—that is, about 23 per cent. of the complement—compared with 66 vacancies on 1 April 1988. The figures demonstrate the serious deterioration.

By no means all magistrates courts are experiencing the same problems. It is a particular problem in inner London, to which my hon. Friend did not address himself, and a substantial problem in the outer-London service, which is of considerable interest to both my hon. Friends. Where vacancies occur, damage is caused because delays in justice are caused. That is bad for justice and defendants, and bad in terms of value for money for courts. It is particularly disturbing when my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I are trying to encourage courts to reduce waiting lists of people to be brought to trial. In no sense would I attempt to under-estimate the seriousness of the problem; I hope that my hon. Friend recognises that.

The magistrates courts service is at the heart of the criminal justice system. A shortage of court clerks means not only that the delivery of justice is delayed but that knock-on problems are created through the whole criminal justice system. There has always been some movement in and out of the court service by those who are legally qualified.

My hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge referred to the fact that it appears that a good number of people may have left recently to go into the Crown prosecution service. That is undoubtedly the fact, although we have no clear statistics.

However, it is clear that the level of loss from the magistrates court service into other professions—be they to the Crown prosecution service or another career opportunity—is at present unacceptable. With some hindsight, it is clear that the inception of the Crown prosecution service—with its need for barristers and solicitors in quite large numbers fairly quickly and the levels of remuneration that they have recently been offered—has had a significant effect on the magistrates court service.

Of course, there have been more losses than ever before to private practice. It is interesting to reflect on why that should be. I am sure that some of those losses have been due to pay levels, linked to high housing costs in outer London areas, such as Uxbridge and Chislehurst. I believe too that there are some problems on the supply side. We are not getting enough legal graduates coming out of our universities and polytechnics who are prepared thereafter to follow the legal profession rather than, for example, going into business.

That is of course dependent on pay, which in turn relates closely to status. However, we can never leave it entirely to pay, and I shall now consider that aspect in some detail. We must ensure that the court service—here the Home Office must play its part—is marketing the profession as adequately as it can, possibly in a new way. I believe that that is a task for us all.

Mr. Shersby: It is a valid point that marketing that profession is important. Will my hon. Friend consider the proposition that it might be useful for the Home Office to have some discussions with the Law Society—possibly with the universities—about the training of suitably qualified lawyers, so that we can perhaps move in a direction that will ensure that more of those people who train as lawyers do actually practise law?

Mr. Patten: I welcome my hon. Friend's comments. There is considerable interest at present in the future of both legal professions, as brought forward in the three Green Papers of my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor. There are other issues that must be addressed besides possible reforms in the legal profession, and one of them is exactly that which my hon. Friend has mentioned. That was an extremely constructive suggestion.

Pay is obviously a critical factor. Court clerks are employees of magistrates courts committees and their salaries and conditions of service are negotiated alongside those for other court staff in the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff. However, settlements reached within the joint negotiating committee, in order to rank for grant, must be approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who will have due regard to the operational needs of the service and, of course, to affordability.

Alas, in the 1988 pay round it was not possible for the two sides to reach agreement, and the matter was referred to arbitration. The decision of the arbitrators, taking into account the level of vacancies at 1 April 1988, was that court clerks should receive a 7 per cent. pay increase, and that, in addition, the minimum scale point for professionally qualified staff should be point 10 on the 22-point scale on which court clerks and senior administrative staff are paid. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has recently approved the award for grant purposes. There is now no further delay in the payment of backdated sums to those in the courts service, who give such excellent help to that service. It is being put into effect now and thus puts an end to what has been a most undesirably long and protracted pay round.

The next pay round is soon to start and the settlement date is 1 July 1989. Once again, it will be for the joint negotiating committee to give full and careful consideration to the way in which the shortage of clerks has increased over the past year. I cannot believe that the joint negotiating committee will not take that into very close account. The Central Council of Magistrates Court Committees has sought a meeting with Ministers to discuss the present difficulties which my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge has raised. My right hon. Friend and I will be glad to participate in that meeting in the not too distant future.

Earlier, I referred to the fact that not all magistrates court committees are experiencing the same problems. There is some flexibility in the pay structure and I wonder whether all employers are using that flexibility to the maximum. Court clerks can be paid by committees which wish to match that pay to the needs of recruitment and retention. Court clerks are paid within five point bands on a 22-point scale. In some areas, that is sufficient, although I accept that, in some instances, committees will be constrained in their use of the upper points on the scale by the salaries paid to justices' clerks and their deputies at the top of the profession locally.

A number of committees have decided, with the agreement of the local authorities—they meet 20 per cent. of the cost and the Home Office meets the remaining 80 per cent.—to offer local pay supplements in excess of nationally agreed salary scales to retain legally qualified staff and to attract others. It is for the committees, as the employers, to take that decision. Those of us who value the magistrates court service as part of the intrinsic locally based system of justice will want, as much as possible, those decisions to be taken locally rather than by the Home Office. We shall seek to continue with such local decision-making as far as possible. It is for local committees to decide what arrangements best meet local circumstances.

We have also approved more trainee clerks and have created an additional 25 posts. We are actively encouraging committees to apply for more. We need such posts to encourage more people to come into the profession. They represent a medium-term investment for us as they will provide some relief while post holders are under training. Eventually, they will give us a pool of qualified staff who can join the main stream of the service.

A particular problem, however, is that the magistrates court service does not have a particularly high profile and it is not brought to the attention of many who seek to follow a legal career or who are coming to the end of their training in our universities and polytechnics. Such people may consider whether to go into the City, whether to become a solicitor or join the Crown prosecution service. I wonder how often they think, "Shall I go into the magistrates court service?" Perhaps the Home Office should do more in conjunction with the legal professions' representative bodies, such as the Law Society and the Justices' Clerks Society and others, to promote the magistrates court service as a profession.

I have had a look at our recruitment literature recently and it does leave a little to be desired. Perhaps we should take a leaf out of the Ministry of Defence's book, which always produces excellent recruitment literature. We intend to produce literature that has a wider appeal than some of the bureaucratic stuff that we have put out thus far. We intend to target that literature better at schools so that the magistrates courts service is considered as a possible career before people leave school. It is important that that career is considered by those going on to higher education.

We shall launch the booklet at the Sunday Times careers fair at Olympia from 8 to 10 June. We shall give it as much of a push as possible at that fair and at subsequent ones. We also intend to produce a second booklet aimed at those in higher education who are studying law.

We are conscious of the fact that the 1990s will see an increasing amount of competition to attract those entering the job market. We shall have to fight along with others to ensure that an adequate number enter the magistrates courts profession.

Interesting initiatives have been undertaken around the country. The Leicestershire magistrates committee is pooling its resources to set up a consortium of committees to recruit clerks from a considerable area instead of a number of court areas competing with each other locally. They are beginning to try to build up links with local schools, colleges, universities and polytechnics. We need to do a lot more of such positive recruiting.

To a certain extent, the future of the magistrates courts service is under discussion. It will be coming under even closer scrutiny in the next few months as the Home Office's scrutiny of the organisation and resources of the magistrates court service is completed. We will want to look carefully at the recommendations. They will be reported to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and me in June this year. The scrutiny will cover matters which relate broadly to the use and allocation of resources—a fairly large topic. It will not look at the pay structure since that is a matter for the joint negotiating committee.

However, the deliberations of the scrutineers will inevitably include salary and pay structure matters, and they will have to be taken into account as we look to the future of the magistrates courts service in this country. That service is suffering from problems that I hope that the pay negotiations which have just finished and the negotiations which are about to start will do a certain amount to alleviate, especially when linked to improved recruiting. We all wish to attract more people into the service.

British Aerospace

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Last week The Observer led with the story, "Tornado Rip-Off", the article purported to investigate Britain's biggest ever arms deal and the middlemen who fixed it. I have to admit that the article was well written and I tender no criticism of the journalist who wrote it, except to say that I am sure that he will find that the elusive Mr. Charles Langley resides at Lonrho headquarters.

The article alleged that the British armaments industry, backed by the Government, is fuelling the middle east arms race. In referring to arms orders potentially worth as much as £150 billion and while attacking the basis for the deals, the newspaper stated:

"behind the cheers for this most profitable defence deal in our history lie moral and financial problems."

The newspaper questioned what it called huge commission payments, the morality of selling vast quantities of sophisticated weapons to middle east and Third-world countries, the role of the Export Credits Guarantee Department in providing finance for the purchases and the risk to the taxpayer of default in the payment in the event of a change in regime. The bulk of the orders go to British Aerospace. It stands accused in The Observer—I shall repeat a comment in the French newspaper L'Express—

"of being willing to pay exceptional commercial expenses."

The Observer failed to spell out clearly the origin of the story it published and the reason why it was published. Unfortunately, the newspaper is owned by Mr. Tiny Rowland and the article was a Rowland plant. Mr. Rowland is not only a newspaper proprietor but an arms dealer. He has a direct interest in the fortunes of the Dassault company in France, the country's principal military aircraft manufacturer. It was Tiny Rowland who negotiated, directly and through a labyrinth of middlemen, a series of deals primarily in Africa but also in the middle east, involving the sale of luxury jets, jet trainers, fighter bombers including Mirage 2000 and F1 aircraft.

Tiny Rowland regards British Aerospace as a keen competitor. On a number of occasions he has set out to frustrate attempts by British Aerospace to sell aircraft. The most recent example of that involved the £150 million deal to sell Hawk ground attack aircraft to Kenya. In this case, he was pushing the rival Dassault Mirage aircraft.

Dassault was also a direct competitor with British Aerospace over the deals outlined in The Observer last week. According to the newspaper's report, when the company heard of British Aerospace's success in landing the Saudi deal, a Dassault spokesman said:

"What has happened is unexpected, incomprehensible and catastrophic. The decision to acquire Mirage 2000 had already been taken on technical grounds. This brutal change is of a political nature."

Of course, there is a great deal more at stake for Mr. Rowland than mere profit. He is a man obsessed. He loathes the chairman of British Aerospace, Professor Roland Smith, because he forced him off the board of the House of Fraser during Rowland's argument with the Al-Fayeds. He equally loathes the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit) for acting as an unpaid adviser to the professor and because of his failure to intervene during the Harrods takeover. The problem is that his obsessions are increasingly spilling over into the columns of The Observer, doing immense damage to a great national newspaper. For some years, he has used the newspaper to run his personal vendetta against the Al-Fayeds and he is now, with last weekend's article, launching a new campaign to undermine British Aerospace's sales efforts in various parts of the world by using the columns of his newspaper to foster his commercial interests.

In doing so, this man is undoubtedly compromising journalists. He has, in effect, become a gladiatorial, proprietorial tyrant who is manipulating his newspaper in a way that puts him on a par with the worst aspects of Murdoch control of Fleet street journals. This must stop, and he must be stopped. He is destroying The Observer. Its circulation has fallen dramatically from 900,000 in June 1989, when he took it over, to just over 700,000 last month. Meanwhile, its rival, the Sunday Times, has held its readership steady at 1,350,000 with marginal movement.

This man is undermining British industry, and in particular British Aerospace, with accusations that equally apply to himself with relation to his arms dealings. The time has surely come for him to divest himself of control of this newspaper. An excellent team of journalists at The Observer are increasingly the subject of criticism inside and outside the House of Commons, and surely see themselves as professionally undermined as they are forced to act on occasions as Lonrho hacks, furthering the dirty work of an obsessive Fleet street mogul and international arms dealer.

I wish to turn to a different aspect of British Aerospace's activities in balancing my contribution to the debate—its acquisition of Royal Ordnance and the Rover Group from the Government, a huge rip-off at the taxpayers' cost and, in my view, the rip-off of the century. In April 1987, as hon. Members have good cause to remember, British Aerospace paid the Government £190,000,000 for Royal Ordnance. Ironically, in pursuit of market ideology, the Government acting totally unlike any sensible private vendor; desperate to get rid of a public asset at any cost, they placed a ludicrous time limit on the date by which a sale had to be achieved.

The Government failed to consider the development value of land holdings by relying on an out-of-date, totally inadequate valuation which put the price of 380 acres of prime development land in Greater London at only £3·5 million. Subsequently, Warburg Securities valued the same land at £517 million, identifying a £500 million gift to British Aerospace's private shareholders at a direct cost to the taxpayer.

Understandably, the Public Accounts Committee, a Committee of which I am a member, concluded in October last year:

"We are concerned that BAe, owners of RO, could make a substantial gain on the sale or redevelopment of these sites without benefits accruing to the taxpayer."

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Defence insisted,

"We got a pretty good price for Royal Ordnance."

That was only half the story. We then found out that this asset, picked up on the cheap, managed miraculously to turn in a profit of £56 million last year. What had originally been acquired for reasons of speculative asset development had somehow and mysteriously been transformed into a honey pot of new trading profitability —a nice slab of trading profit to bolster British Aerospace's uninspiring trading performance.

Not content with one back-door subsidy to British Aerospace, the Government repeated the exercise with the Rover Group sale, producing an even more spectacular

"success". Lord Young was certainly not exaggerating when at the time he called it the deal of the century. Having failed in the summer of 1986 to split up and sell off Britain's last volume car manufacturer to multinational competition, the Government became desperate for a purchaser—preferably, given the recent public outcry, a British one. Of course, there was no suitable purchaser on the horizon, so to whom could the Government turn? Who owed them a favour? Why, of course, British Aerospace.

In keeping with his eccentric understanding of market discipline, Lord Young announced an auction with a difference: there was to be one bidder; the auctioneer would pay the commission; and the bidder would be paid to take the goods away. He asked £150 million for the job lot, approximately the value of the cars the Rover Group held in stock, but to sweeten the pill—just in case the removal truck broke down on its way from the auction—the Government would write off the company's debts and provide a gift of £800 million. Fortunately, the European Community, the only sane body of people around these days, moved in and forced the Government to reduce the handout to £547 million. Thank the Lord for the blessed bureaucrats from Brussels. Even so, British Aerospace was effectively given £379 million to take the Rover Group away.

Days after British Aerospace had agreed to the purchase, despite the assurances from Mr. Graham Day that the takeover would not lead to redundancies, it was announced that the Cowley, south and Llanelli plants were to close and that 3,400 people would have to lose their jobs. Promptly tackled on that squalid about-turn, Mr. Day cheekily responded that those redundancies were not the result of the merger, but of other trading considerations, including over-capacity. Only a fool could possibly swallow that explanation.

A few days ago, we all read with great interest reports that Rover made £65·7 million last year—£10 million per month, as the headlines said. The question is whether it was known that Rover Group would make such profits when it was taken over. Was that taken into account in the sale price? Was it known that, with projected profits of £100 million for Rover in the coming year, British Aerospace would recover the whole acquisition cost of their interest in Rover in little more than 18 months? That does not even take into account the asset value of the group.

Under cover of the Rover profits and the Saudi deal, British Aerospace announced that the Rover group had somehow been revalued at £829 million. That did not take into account the redevelopment land in the south. The empty site at Cowley alone had been valued by Warburg at £40 million. As was to be expected, we now hear rumours of a sale. What of its 40 per cent. share in Leyland-Daf, picked up at about the same time as the Rover group takeover? It is estimated that, when it is floated in the summer, it will net £160 million—more than British Aerospace paid for the whole of the Rover group.

In reality, Rover's performance since the takeover has been disappointing. With United Kingdom car sales at record levels, Rover has a reduced market share and looks as if it is about to lose more as its competitors bring out new models ahead of it this year. The jury is still out on whether Rover will remain in the volume car market. We now have to see whether those profits will go back into research and development or into the pockets of private shareholders.

How has the parent company, British Aerospace, been performing? As The Times put it:

"Without these two purchases, BAe would not be looking too clever."

The world's aircraft producers are working flat out, but the commercial aircraft division of British Aerospace made a loss of £49 million last year—£41 million on Airbus alone. What the real figure will be, must be anybody's guess. The weapons and electronics division is having difficulties despite every effort within the work force. Yet on paper, as a result of Government handouts, British Aerospace looks in good condition.

Shareholders' funds have doubled to £2·1 billion and net assets have doubled. Property holdings are up from £91 million to £234 million before any Royal Ordnance or Rover Group land development potential has been realised. Most importantly for some, no doubt, dividends are up 10 per cent. The private shareholders will make a killing at the taxpayers' expense as, inevitably, British Aerospace further diversifies into speculative property development on the back of land gifted from the taxpayer in complex dealings over privatisation.

It seems that Professor Roland Smith, the chairman of British Aerospace, has found, not unnaturally, easier ways of making money than making aeroplanes—land development and acquisitions. Since last January alone, British Aerospace has bought Ballast Nedham Groep NV, a Dutch construction company, for £48 million. It founded BAe Simulation Ltd., bought an option on Reflectone Inc., a United States simulator company, was rumoured to be in the market for GEC Avionics and, as recently as February this year, acquired De Moer, a Dutch civil engineering company, for an undisclosed sum. I am sure that Professor Smith is grateful to the taxpayer.

By next year, Royal Ordnance and Rover Group may have paid for themselves out of profits alone. British Aerospace's shareholders can then continue to enjoy the benefits of at least £1·3 billion—£1,300 million—of gifted capital, even before the full development potential is calculated. The cash cow has not even begun to be milked. The question is whether the profits will be generated by manufacturing activity or property speculation. I do not for one minute suppose that the shareholders of British Aerospace are concerned about where the profits come from, as long as they are there. One can only presume that they are rubbing their hands with glee, as the beneficiaries of the biggest rip-off of taxpayers' assets this century.

2.45 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. Tim Sainsbury): The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) has covered a wide area in a characteristically robust speech. I think I detect four or five main themes. We started with some extremely interesting observations about an article in The Observer. The hon. Gentleman linked that article to British Aerospace's export achievements, for which I was glad to hear him express his support.

Later in his speech, the hon. Gentleman returned to some other aspects of British Aerospace's activities, including some of its civilian work. In the hon. Gentleman's consideration of the profits achieved by companies under British Aerospace management, it would not be unreasonable for him to have regard to the quality of the management that is brought to bear on those companies and their performance, and to consider whether better management, which must be in the interests of everyone concerned, including the work force, is not something to be applauded, especially as it can be identified through higher profits. The hon. Gentleman talked also about the purchase by British Aerospace of Royal Ordnance plc and Rover Group.

I suspect that the hon. Gentleman will not be altogether surprised if I draw his attention to the fact that the subject of the debate is the relationship of the Ministry of Defence with British Aerospace. Tempted as I might be to say quite a lot about The Observer and its proprietor——

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): Go on; have a go.

Mr. Sainsbury: The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) tempts me further, but I must resist the temptation to discuss a matter that is not the responsibility of my Department.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): The Minister should let himself go for a minute; it is the last day, after all.

Mr. Sainsbury: We come back, I hope.

I am afraid that the same goes for some aspects of the civilian work of British Aerospace to which the hon. Member for Workington referred—for instance, the dealings with the Airbus consortium and the curious fact that it seems that the more Airbuses are sold the larger are the losses made by the participating companies. One hopes that the company will improve its performance under the restructured management of which we have read. The hon. Member for Workington will not be surprised if I do not say too much on that front.

Again, much to my disappointment, matters relating to Rover Group and its acquisition by British Aerospace are matters not for me but for my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I am sure that if the hon. Gentleman addressed his remarks to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster he would be given a robust response.

The hon. Gentleman also referred to the acquisition of Royal Ordnance plc. He made some fairly forceful remarks on the subject, as we have come to expect of him. In his approach, the hon. Gentleman seems to be liable to give as much credence to speculative reports and matters which are not valuations but views expressed by unqualified non-surveyors as he does to professional surveyors on aspects that have been thoroughly researched.

If I understand him correctly, he is saying that the purchase of Royal Ordnance plc. by British Aerospace was some sort of monstrous rip-off. In his view, the property value of the assets of that company was astonishingly high. He quoted a figure of £400 million, and said that it was based on a Warburg valuation. I do not know how familiar he is with the origin of that figure. It was not a valuation at all. It was a bit of pure speculation by some desk operator in a merchant bank, who may have been doing an in-house analysis of the value of British Aerospace, and, lacking any expert knowledge of the situation, looked at a large number of acres of land and put against them a large valuation per acre, assuming that all that land was capable of redevelopment.

The first weakness of that approach is that the land was in the metropolitan green belt, which immediately raises a presupposition against development. Secondly, it is not irrelevant that planning applications in respect of that land had not been approved and have since been refused. Thirdly, that speculative figure assumed that, even if planning permission were to be obtained, the whole area would be redeveloped and that, therefore, all those acres could have the high figure put on them.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Is the Minister assuring the House that, when, the matters go before the Secretary of State for the Environment on appeal, he will uphold any decision to refuse planning permission? Has the hon. Gentleman been told that?

Mr. Sainsbury: No. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware that that is not what I am saying. I am commenting on the source of the £400 million. Equally, I will not be tempted to speculate upon the outcome of any planning application. It would be quire improper to do so.

The hon. Gentleman will be aware that, even if planning approval were eventually to be forthcoming, the likelihood of it being for all the acres is nil. It just does not happen. Obviously, a certain amount of the area is required for access and amenity. It is my understanding that the planning applications that had already been put in envisaged substantial parts of the site being made available for public amenity and other uses. Clearly, immediately a far lower number of acres are capable of redevelopment than appears to have been assumed by the person who originated that valuation.

The next point that the hon. Gentleman seems to overlook is that, in obtaining that sort of figure per acre for developable land, great expense would be incurred. The land is low-lying, and there are canals and locks adjoining it. One matter that would have to be attended to before any redevelopment could take place would be new access roads. There may even have to be a new lock on one of the canals. Clearly, there would have to be a great deal of drainage and, in some cases, decontamination works. They are all costly. Much time will go by and much money will be spent before any return is obtained. That would tend also to reduce the net return.

If the hon. Gentleman is basing his supposition on the fact that it was some monstrous rip-off—to use his phraseology—and on the figure in what he called the Warburg valuation, it is not well-founded.

The other main point that the hon. Gentleman overlooks is that, in any case, the sale of Royal Ordnance plc was a highly competitive procedure. Several companies expressed interest. There was a lengthy bidding process. The Government were advised by merchant bankers throughout it, and, at the end of it, two bidders were left. The best price that could be obtained was obtained. As the hon. Gentleman knows, the Comptroller and Auditor General's report acknowledged that the sale to British Aerospace was achieved in a competitive situation. The evidence suggested that the competition was sufficiently widely based to secure the highest price likely in the prevailing commercial climate. I hope that I have reassured the hon. Gentleman somewhat on that aspect of the sale of RO plc.

With regard to The Observer article, I shall confine my remarks to aspects affecting British Aerospace.

Mr. Michael Marshall (Arundel): I do not think that I can fully appreciate why my hon. Friend is unable to deal with many of the matters that affect the Department of Trade and Industry. Would the Minister not take this opportunity to express his understanding of the positive case for diversification? Does it not present opportunities for greater job security and a future in defence, as, indeed British Aerospace now has wider interests?

Mr. Sainsbury: It is clearly in the interests of the work force, shareholders and customers, of which the Ministry of Defence is one, that British Aerospace is a strong and efficient company. Presumably the company sees advantages in the interaction between its various activities. In due course those might benefit the Ministry of Defence as a customer.

I very much agree with the hon. Member for Workington in his criticism of the article in The Observer as being based purely on speculation. As the hon. Gentleman says, some of the article had been printed before in French and American and indeed middle eastern publications. It is human nature, I suppose, that those losing a contract might seek to discredit the arrangements of the winners by spreading rumours based on speculation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Would the Minister confirm that Tiny Rowland is involved in selling military equipment to Governments in Africa and parts of the middle east?

Mr. Sainsbury: I cannot help the hon. Gentleman there. Mr. Rowland is associated with companies, not the Ministry of Defence. I cannot comment on their activities. Like the hon. Gentleman, I read the press. One has to judge what one reads for speculation or accuracy. But I suspect that we would agree that it is not surprising that the losers of a contract might seek to discredit the arrangements of the winners. I share the hon. Gentleman's concern that this sort of speculation could damage a very important project that means much to British industry.

The figure of £150 billion that was recently quoted as the value of Al Yamamah is fanciful speculation. However, this major project could extend into the next century and bring income and employment to a wide range of companies in this country.

The management and work force of United Kingdom companies have won these orders against intense overseas competition, through improving design and increasing productivity, with impressive labour relations and, perhaps most important of all, competitive pricing. It would be most unfortunate if all their efforts were damaged by ill-informed criticism.

UN Peacekeeping Operations

2.58 pm

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): I wish to draw to the attention of the House, as I last did in an Adjournment debate in March 1979, the considerable expansion and general success of the United Nations peacekeeping operations, to put forward some ideas on future developments and to probe the Government to find out what they are doing to match fine words with deeds.

I do so in the knowledge that an advance party of British troops is deployed today in Namibia, formerly South-West Africa, as part of the UN transitional advisory group, which is known as UNTAG for short. It is remiss of the House and the Government that we have not yet debated its participation in this important international operation.

I warmly welcome my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the debate. What a far beach has lost, the Front Bench has gained. His contribution will be listened to and read afterwards most carefully.

The renewed interest in this form of intervention and its part in the peaceful settlement of disputes, following the award in 1988 of the Nobel peace prize to United Nations peacekeeping forces, is to be welcomed and encouraged. As a former professional soldier I believe that peacekeeping by United Nations forces has become an essential part of the work done by the United Nations for international harmony and security. We must not under-estimate the problems, but here surely is one crucial area of United Nations activity in which major advances can and must be made. So far, well over 100,000 soldiers from a third of the world's armies have worn the pale blue beret or helmet—a remarkable fact.

Peacekeeping is the use of an international force, by invitation, to reduce violence. It has nothing to do with the use of force to impose order or suppress an opponent. It is an invention of the United Nations and nothing like it existed in history before 1945. For the past 30 years, at least one United Nations force has been on duty at any given time in some part of the world. United Nations forces watched over the two truces of 1948 between Israel and its Arab neighbours. In 1949 they watched over the ceasefire in Kashmir and demonstrated how a relatively small number of observers can successfully maintain a ceasefire. Then came Korea in 1950 and Suez in 1956, when they supervised the withdrawal of Israeli, British and French forces. In 1960 the Congo tied up 20,000 United Nations soldiers for four years at a cost of 126 lives and about £200 million. It has been argued that the intervention of the United Nations force in Sinai in 1973 may have prevented a world war.

Today in the Lebanon, on the Israeli border, UNIFIL faces the most complex and dangerous challenge since the Congo bloodbath. Since it was established in 1978, the force has suffered 170 fatalities. I should like its mandate to be strengthened. Israel is responsible for the South Lebanon army, which has been firing on UNIFIL soldiers —the SLA should be disbanded forthwith.

Since my last debate on peacekeeping, the most important change has been the resolve of the USSR at last to recognise the worth of United Nations peacekeeping and to pay its outstanding dues as a further show of confidence in this aspect of the United Nations' international responsibilities.

I like to think that the Foreign Office is privately pressing the Bush Administration to renew the commitment of the United States of America to the United Nations and to make up the deficit in the payment of its dues. That is a shameful legacy from the Reagan Administration, and my hon. Friend will agree that that shortfall in the United Nations budget resulting from the abstention of the United States of America affects the very existence of the United Nations.

The United Nations peacekeeping methodology has been shown, by experience, to be more effective than unilateral or bilateral interventions from outside the United Nations. Britain took part in the ill-fated multilateral force in the Lebanon, which itself became a party in the dispute. When that force was withdrawn in disarray, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, who had not previously shown much enthusiasm for the United Nations, offered the job to that world body.

British soldiers, I maintain, are good at peacekeeping. Years of using minimum force and giving aid to the civil power—from Borneo to Aden and Belize, culminating in Zimbabwe—have given them an enviable record. The 1988 Statement on the Defence Estimates reported:

"Our contribution to international peacekeeping forces has not changed: we provide contingents to the multinational force and observers in Sinai and the UN forces in Cyprus; and the Cyprus sovereign base areas give logistic support to the UN forces in Cyprus, Lebanon and on the Golan Heights."

A few years ago I spent a morning with 40 Royal Marine Commando who were on duty with the UN along the so-called green line in Nicosia, and most impressive they were. We play the main role in the UN force in Cyprus, with some 800 men attached to it, the largest single national element. I only wish that Britain's contribution to the UN was better known in this country and abroad.

Peacekeeping is also superb training for our defence forces, giving them overseas service outside Germany—all too rare—and vital experience of international co-operation. It has real value for the young NCO and the inexperienced but enthusiastic young soldier. It is excellent that we should be taking part in UNTAG and we look forward to Namibia becoming the UN's 160th member. The House has yet to be told of the exact composition of the British contingent, its likely tasks and responsibilities. We need to know what will be the rules for opening fire, how casualties will be evacuated, and to which hospitals, whether the bodies will be returned to the United Kingdom if there are any deaths, whether the Minister will be visiting our contingent in Namibia shortly, and if not, why not.

The size of the military component has been the subject of controversy. It is to comprise 4,650 persons initially, not the 7,500 originally authorised. Concern has been expressed on both sides of the House, at Question Time and in an early-day motion that I tabled, at the small size of this force in what is a large country. It seems that financial reasons, not unimportant in themselves, were the dominant reasons.

The Minister will have been told of the long list of individuals and organisations who have opposed the reduction of UNTAG, including, I am told, its commander, Lieutenant General Prem Chand. UNTAG's task is to monitor the disarming and dismantling of command structures of citizen forces, commando units and ethnic forces, South African counter-insurgency units, the confinement of SWAPO combatants to their Angolan and Zambian bases and the phased withdrawal of the South African defence forces. It is also responsible for border surveillance.

By definition, all those tasks—and there are many more—according to an internal UN document,

"require the military component of UNTAG to be very extensively deployed at strategic points along the length of the borders and to maintain a highly mobile reserve to react to any hostile acts."

There are good reasons to think that the size of the force is not sufficient to perform its assigned tasks. The discrepancy in numbers alone is enormous. The war zone in northern Namibia is one of the most concentrated areas of military personnel in the world, and about 50,000 Cuban troops will still be across the border in Angola.

Will my hon. Friend confirm that Britain will carefully watch the position and be prepared to press for the size of the force to be increased, should that become necessary? One wonders how difficult that might be in practice as new troops would need to acclimatise. Are British troops on standby for possible reinforcement of UNTAG in a few weeks' time?

The study of United Nations-style peacekeeping deserves greater attention by the British military. There appears to be very little training in peacekeeping for units or individual officers. The peacekeeping handbook should be the recognised training manual for that form of military duty.

The Nordic countries co-ordinate the training of staff and technical officers for specific duties within United Nations peacekeeping forces. Did our contingent in Namibia receive such training? Will the Minister tell us, either now or in a letter, how many hours are devoted to United Nations peacekeeping on British officer training courses and in cadet and staff colleges?

In 1979, the Government told the United Nations Secretary-General of their "readiness to share training experience in respect of peacekeeping".

Was that followed up? Is not the time ripe to look anew at machinery and conduct of United Nations peacekeeping operations and improve them?

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Will my hon. Friend note that Monday is the centenary of the death of John Bright, one of the greatest peacekeepers in British history? In the context of peacekeeping in the United Nations, it would be highly suitable for us to recall the work of that great man and note that there is a strong relationship between what he said in his own time and what my hon. Friend is saying now?

Mr. Townsend: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his interesting comment.

It would be excellent if our Government were to take an active part in the United Nations in bringing about a necessary review. When the United Nations is acquiring a new and brighter image it should expect the whole-hearted support of its founder members. Does the Government support the call from the Soviet Union for the reactivation of the military staff committee, with a wider membership and better terms of reference? Why should the membership of that committee be confined to permanent member states of the Security Council when other countries such as Ghana, Nepal and Fiji can boast of considerable United Nations peacekeeping experience?

What thoughts do the Government have for improving the standard operating procedures for UN forces? Should there not be a study of UN peacebuilding as a third lane alongside UN peacemaking and peacekeeping? In the Congo a UN civilian operation was mounted beside the military peacekeeping operation to assist in the reconstruction of the fabric of the Congo's administrative structure. It achieved excellent results. A peacebuilding element might become part of each UN peacekeeping operation, with its tasks dictated by humanitarian considerations. The peacebuilding role would precede and outlast peacemaking and peacekeeping.

In 1978 President Jimmy Carter called for "the creation of UN peacekeeping reserve composed of national contingents trained in peacekeeping functions?

Nobody wants a standing army, but a small reserve bringing together international experts might be a good idea. Such a reserve would have the very latest day and night surveillance equipment including infra-red aids and listening devices such as the Army uses in Northern Ireland, and drones. The application of highly sophisticated scientific techniques including the use of satellites could help the UN solve problems which have previously been insoluble, and thereby reduce tension. As an illustration, the electric monitoring of air traffic on a military base could help to reduce the possibility of a surprise attack in the region such as the Gulf, where the most uneasy peace prevails between Iran and Iraq.

That small reserve might include a United Nations disaster relief force which would be highly trained and mobile. It could tackle disasters, such as those following earthquakes, cyclones or a major chemical or nuclear radiation leak in a developing country. Why should the reserve not help carry supplies to the starving through hostile territory or physically protect refugees, such as those in the Lebanon, from mayhem and mutilation?

Recently the world had to sit back and watch while a Lebanese faction sought to starve the inhabitants of a refugee camp to death. In future it is possible that there will be more demands for UN forces than for resources. Will a force be required for Afghanistan or Kampuchea? If there should be a successful international conference on the Palestine-Israel issue in the next five years, it is likely that UN forces will be required as part of the security guarantees.

I hope that I have said enough in this brief debate to activate the Government to use Britain's privileged position as a member of the Security Council to strengthen the world body's peacekeeping role. Peacekeeping is no vague, woolly, over-idealistic notion. History suggests that a comparatively small UN force can reduce tension and aggression, thus facilitating a diplomatic settlement. UN peacekeeping is good news, offering hope to a violent world. It is a success and we should build on it. It would be wonderful to see the United Kingdom showing the way forward.

3.16 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Timothy Eggar): I know that the House recognises the long-standing and almost solo interest among hon. Members of my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) in this subject. He raised several interesting and somewhat detailed points which I cannot answer this afternoon, but I shall ensure that either I or my right hon. Friends in the Ministry of Defence will respond to them.

It is sad that it has taken 10 years since my hon. Friend's last debate on United Nations peacekeeping for UN peacekeeping to be accorded the international attention which both he and I think it deserves. Although inevitably the new demands on UN peacekeeping have thrown up several problems, not least that of managing the cost, I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that the current interest in peacekeeping is preferable to the general neglect of 10 years ago. Britain has long supported UN peacekeeping and I assure my hon. Friend that we shall continue to do so.

It is interesting for the House to recall the origins of peacekeeping. The United Nations charter envisaged using troops only to impose an international peace against aggressors. That concept soon proved unworkable. United Nations peacekeeping evolved in a variety of forms in relation to a variety of problems. Now United Nations forces patrol buffer zones, check troop withdrawals and will, in Namibia, supervise free and fair elections.

As my hon. Friend said, since 1974 the United Nations force in Cyprus has patrolled a buffer zone between the two communities. It is a prime example of Britain's commitment to peacekeeping. We contribute the largest contingency of troops, 741 men to be exact, at a cost last year of about £24 million. We believe that our participation in UNFICYP complements our continuing support for the United Nations Secretary-General's efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement of the problem. The force provides the background of stability against which he can pursue his initiative.

We also contribute a signals squadron to the United Nations transitional advisory group, the United Nations force in Namibia, for which the people of Namibia have waited too long. I shall ensure that more information about that force is made available to my hon. Friend.

Like my hon. Friend, the Government warmly welcome the award of last year's Nobel peace prize to United Nations peacekeeping forces. That was a fitting tribute to the courage of thousands of men and women who have worn blue helmets in the cause of international peace. Many of those men have died as a result. The House will wish to join me in extending our sympathy to the families of the three Irish soldiers who were killed earlier this week in the Lebanon.

My hon. Friend mentioned his concern about UNIFIL. In common with our European Community partners and others, we remain committed to UNIFIL as a force of stability in southern Lebanon. We deplore the recent increase in fighting and all attacks on UNIFIL. Shooting at UNIFIL is completely unjustified. We condemn punitive expulsion—despite UNIFIL protests—of old men, women and children from their houses in Israel's self-declared security zone.

The continued Israeli military presence in the Lebanon is provocative, destabilising and against Israel's own long-term interests. We have repeatedly urged the Israelis to complete their withdrawal from the Lebanon and to allow UNIFIL to deploy to the international border in accordance with UN security resolution No. 425. We share the concern expressed by the UN Secretary-General about the recent deterioration in the situation, and that concern was reflected in the European Community's declaration on 20 March.

The essence of successful peacekeeping is flexibility and, of course, the co-operation of the parties directly involved. The current arrangements for peacekeeping enable the UN Secretary-General and the Security Council to respond rapidly to any demand. The UN has been fortunate in being especially well served by two British international civil servants dealing with and having primary responsibility for peacekeeping in the UN secretariat. First, there was the almost legendary Sir Brian Urquhart and now there is his successor Marrack Goulding. Their contribution to the efficient planning and implementation of UN peacekeeping operations has been and continues to be of enormous importance. In our view, and in the view of others, informal arrangements for peacekeeping have worked and will continue to work best.

I note my hon. Friend's call for a more active role for an enlarged military staff committee. The military staff committee is a body established under that section of the charter dealing with the enforcement of the peace. It is not immediately apparent that its involvement would improve the arrangements for UN peacekeeping as against enforcement. The composition of any peacekeeping force is often a delicate political matter. It is unlikely to prove possible to enlarge the military staff committee to take account of every possible circumstance.

It is a matter of regret that UN peacekeeping has not always enjoyed the whole-hearted support of the international community. Every member of the UN is called upon to contribute to the funding of UN peacekeeping. In the case of most major peacekeeping operations—of which UNTAG is a good example—all members of the UN pay according to a scale based on their nation's gross domestic product, but that scale is adjusted to require slightly more from the permanent members of the Security Council—including, of course, the United Kingdom—in order that the poorest members of the UN may pay rather less. We—and the other permanent members of the Security Council—have not objected to this scale of levy in recognition of the key role that peacekeeping plays in the maintenance of international peace and security, but the overall record of payment is not good. At the last count more than half the members of the UN were in arrears and the amount owed to the UN was staggeringly more than $372 million. That regrettable state of affairs risks undermining UN peacekeeping more than anything else.

In our view withholding peacekeeping dues for any reason is unacceptable. The fact that both super powers are among the long list of debtors is a cause of great concern. The Soviet Union—one of the more reluctant converts to UN peacekeeping—began withholding its dues in 1976. By 1987 it owed more than $197 million. Despite an assurance in October of that year that it would repay its arrears over the following five years, the amount currently outstanding is still $143 million. My hon. Friend rightly drew attention to the United States decision to withhold or delay its full due in respect of peacekeeping. Currently, United States' arrears amount to $103 million. We have made clear to the United States Administration our severe reservations about that policy. I am glad to say that, in January this year, the Americans announced that they hoped to resume full funding of all their UN-assessed contributions from October 1989.

The rather precarious financial position of UN peacekeeping must be seen against the background of rising demand. Last year three new peacekeeping forces were created and others are in the pipeline. Inevitably, members of the UN have been obliged to take more interest in the overall cost of the peacekeeping efforts. It would be short-sighted to do otherwise. The accent now —thanks in part to our efforts—is on both effective and cost-effective peacekeeping.

In that context we must consider the recent negotiations on the total size of UNTAG. My hon. Friend mentioned a number of countries that he said opposed the final decision of the Security Council, but I must remind him that all five permanent members of the Security Council were united in their approach. I must emphasise, however, as my hon. Friend implied, that the overall ceiling for the size of UNTAG remains as originally proposed. The Secretary-General has the power to request the Security Council to authorise reinforcement up to this limit at any time should the circumstances require it. We and other members of the Security Council have assured the Secretary-General that we shall respond promptly to any such request that he may make. UNTAG will, of course, have a medical unit supplied by the Swiss Government. I will ensure that my hon. Friend gets an answer to the other detailed points that he raised regarding UNTAG.

It would be wrong, however, to leave the House with the impression that our main concern with peacekeeping at the UN has been to reduce its cost. In company with members of the European Community, we recently submitted to the Secretary-General some practical proposals on how United Nations peacekeeping operations might be made more effective. This was in response to a resolution passed at last year's General Assembly inviting member states to submit their observations. In their reply, the 12 members of the Community made clear their full support for United Nations peacekeeping, as well as conveying suggestions for improvement.

One idea was that greater use might be made of smaller-scale observer-type operations to perform certain tasks such as those in Afghanistan, and possibly, soon, in central America. The Twelve also suggested that it would be useful for member states to notify the Secretary General of their willingness, in principle to participate in peacekeeping operations and to state in what particular area they would be prepared to help, for example, by contributing troops, observers, civilian personnel, equipment and so on. In other words, there would be a potential list—a reservoir—of potential areas of help on which the Secretary-General could draw at fairly short notice.

The European Community also made proposals on the training of peacekeeping personnel—my hon. Friend is right to stress the importance of that. New demands on soldiers result not only from the new concept of soldiers being involved in peacekeeping—that is a new concept for many armies—but because each situation that they are required to face tends to differ depending on the particular task that the United Nations has given to them.

As my hon. Friend has said, the Scandinavians already provide some training—they run courses for peacekeeping. I assure my hon. Friend that the EC suggestion on training will be discussed with the Secretary-General and we shall have to await the outcome of those discussions.

I shall try to deal with all the points that I have not covered today by letter to my hon. Friend.

[Mr. Timothy Eggar]

During the past year the improvements in East-West relations and the Soviet Union's decision to end some of her overseas adventures have led to major progress in the resolution of regional conflicts in many parts of the world —a process in which the UN has had an important role and from which its standing has gained. The presence of a UN peacekeeping force is often the first step for parties who wish to find their way from the battlefield to the negotiating table. The Government are proud of their support for UN peacekeeping and we urge all members of the UN to demonstrate their support too.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Before we adjourn, may I wish all hon. Members and our officials and staff a very happy Easter recess.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at half-past Three o'clock till Tuesday 4 April, pursuant to resolution [13 March].

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 13 March 1989

HOME DEPARTMENT

Court Service (Clerks)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the salary structure for justices' clerks, their deputies and court clerks.

Mr. John Patten: The salary structure and scales are as determined by the joint negotiating committees for justices' clerks and magistrates' courts staff, and are subject to review by these bodies.

D Notices

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to submit any new D notices to the defence, press and broadcasting committee.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Attitudes to Crime Survey

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department consulted women's organisations and others with expertise in rape, sexual assault and domestic violence before deciding to include questions on rape, sexual assault and domestic violence in his Department's survey on attitudes to crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The questionnaire for the survey was devised by a team of international experts on victimisation surveys. The survey in England and Wales was supervised by the Home Office research and planning unit the members of which have had considerable experience of victimisation surveys and research.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the interviewers who conducted his Department's survey on attitudes to crime and who telephoned women at random to ask questions about rape, and other sexual and domestic violence, were women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: About half of the interviewers used by Burke Marketing Research Ltd, who conducted the telephone survey of experience of crime for the Home Office, were women.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether women's organisations, or others with expertise in rape, sexual assault and domestic violence, were consulted or asked to contribute to the training programme for interviewers who conducted his Department's survey on attitudes to crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Interviewers underwent a full training programme for telephone interviewing and operated under the Market Research Society's code of conduct. There was also a full briefing for inerviewers by a female Home Office survey expert.

Information (Unauthorised Access)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the potential deleterious effects of information obtained by unauthorised means about current Home Department casework on (a) police matters, (b) passport/immigration, (c) deregulation and (d) criminal justice.

Mr. Hurd: The potential effects are indicated by the security classification or privacy marking given to the material.

Police (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the police officers interviewed by the inspectorate on their visit to Leicestershire in February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the course of its inspections of police forces under the Police Act 1964 Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary may interview such police officers as it considers necessary in connection with its duties. It would not be right to disclose the names of those interviewed.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the duration and date of the visit from the inspectorate to Leicestershire in February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary carried out the formal annual inspection of the Leicestershire constabulary under the Police Act 1964 from 27 February to 2 March 1989.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations concerning the investigations which are currently being conducted by the assistant chief constable of Derbyshire into the activities of the Leicestershire constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest waiting time for any applicant to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to have waited for their case to be resolved and for an appeal to be decided.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not keep information about waiting times in cases now disposed of. The oldest application still outstanding was received on 22 March 1974, and was the subject of a hearing in 1978. The case concerns injury to a young child who is still a minor. It is kept under review and a number of interim payments have been made.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in the last five years were rejected because a battered wife did not inform the police of the assault;

(2) how many applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last five years relate to domestic violence; and what proportion were successful.

Mr. John Patten: Collation by the board of information on applications arising from violence within the family was discontinued in 1985. The information given in the following table is taken from the board's annual reports for the years 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85. In these years, 10, 32 and 22 cases were rejected on the basis that the circumstances of the injury had not been reported without delay. It is not known how many of these applications were from wives.

1982-83	46	114	5	165	95	67	3

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last five years; how many and what proportion of these were successful; how many of the unsuccessful ones appealed; and what proportion of appeals was successful.

Mr. John Patten: The following tables give the information which is kept by the board and published in its annual reports. Decisions made within the year concerned relate in many cases to applications made in previous years.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Metropolitan police; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 84 staff of all grades are currently employed in the directorate of public affairs of the Metropolitan police office. Of these 45 are in information officer grades and 39 are support staff. The complement is 89 posts. No major change in complement is proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Home Office; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are at present 19 press officers and four support staff employed in the Home Office press office. There are no vacancies. During 1989-90 these numbers are expected to increase to 20 press officers and five support staff.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The full cost of staff and other costs of the Home Office press office is estimated at £647,500 for 1988-89. The expected cost for 1989-90 is £731,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Metropolitan police on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the latest estimate of staffing and accommodation cost and spending on press and public relations by the directorate of public affairs is £5,321,000 for 1988-89. Provision for 1989-90 is £5,470,000.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Home Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Hurd: The latest estimate of Home Office spending for 1988-89 is as follows:

	£ million
(a) Television advertising	1·8
(b) Radio advertising	0·1
(c) Press advertising	3·2
(d) Other promotional activity (including poster advertising; printing and distribution; film/video/TV filler production; displays/exhibitions and market research).	3·3

It is not yet possible to say how the publicity budget will be allocated in 1989-90, but total expenditure is likely to be about £9·7 million.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Metropolitan police on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the latest figures for 1988-89 are as follows:

Television advertising	Nil
Radio advertising	6,000
Newspaper advertising	1,151,000
Other promotional material	1,469,000

Expenditure for 1989-90 has not yet been decided.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Metropolitan police; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the end of February 1989, the complement and strength figures by grade for the statistics branch of the Metropolitan police office were:

	Complement	Strength
Grade 7	1	1
SEO	1	1
HEO	3	3
EO	8	8
AO	60	54
Support Grade Band 1	1	1
	80	74

Only the grade 7 post is filled by a statistician, the remaining posts being filled by executive, administrative and support grades staff, who undertake a mixture of statistical and administrative duties. An additional grade 7 post filled by a statistician is located in the management support department. No change to the complement is proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Home Office; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is given in the table. During the course of the forthcoming year the responsibilities of statistical department are to expand and the staff complement is to change in consequence.

Blackwall Tunnel (Closure)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what notice was given to the Metropolitan police concerning the closure of the southbound bore of the Blackwall tunnel on Saturday and Sunday 4 and 5 March; what steps the commissioner took to minimise congestion to traffic in east London and as to how many additional police officers, vehicles, or motor cyclists were deployed in order to ameliorate predictable traffic problems.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner that the two bores of the Blackwall tunnel are closed for essential maintenance, individually and on separate occasions, at certain times of the year agreed by the Department of Transport, the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Greenwich and tunnel management. The police are informed well in advance of the dates of closure, as are the local media and the motoring organisations, and the approach roads are signed in advance.

The congestion arising from the closure of the southbound bore on 4-5 March was exacerbated by a number of other incidents in the area which could not have been foreseen. The situation was handled by local officers and no additional manpower was deployed.

English Wine

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give consideration to granting a special licence for the English Vineyards Association to charge for samples of English wine at the Festival of Food and Farming to be held in Hyde park on 4 to 7 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no provision in law under which the Home Secretary may grant a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor.

Senior Police Officers (Press)

Mr. Vaz To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library details of any guidelines which he has issued concerning contact between senior police officers and the press.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Apart from guidance in December 1982 on the implications of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 my right hon. Friend has issued no guidelines on this subject to the police. It is an offence under the police discipline code for any police officer, without proper authority, to communicate to any person any information which he has in his possession as a member of a police force.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the immigration service at Hull received a request for information about Mr. Mushtaq Ahmed from an entry clearance officer at the British Embassy at Islamabad; whether the request was acknowledged; whether acknowledgement of such requests for information is standard immigration service procedure; when a reminder from Islamabad was received; and when the information is to be sent to Islamabad.

Mr. Renton: The immigration service at Leeds/Bradford Airport received the request for information about Mr. Mushtaq Ahmed on 23 December 1987. The request was not acknowledged. No reminder was received from Islamabad. Regrettably, after an initial inquiry on 2 January 1988 the matter was overlooked in the Leeds/Bradford immigration office. I understand that the entry clearance officer in Islamabad has now taken a decision in Mushtaq Ahmed's case which will be conveyed to him shortly. Steps will be taken to improve the monitoring of outstanding action in the Leeds/Bradford immigration office.

Latchmere House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultation he has had with the legal, welfare and other organisations who are required to visit Latchmere house about the relocation of Latchmere house; what representations he has received about the relocation of Latchmere house; what facilities will be provided at the remand centre near Portsmouth for legal, welfare and other representatives; and whether staff from Latchmere house will be required to transfer to the relocated remand centre;

(2) to what purpose Latchmere house in London will be put when it is closed as an immigration remand centre; what consultation he has had with appropriate trade unions about the relocation of Latchmere house; what arrangements he is making for those held on remand near Portsmouth to be visited by relatives and friends; and by whom staff employed at the relocated Latchmere house will be employed;

(3) when Latchmere house, the London immigration remand centre is going to be closed and relocated near Portsmouth; how many people are currently held at Latchmere house; what is its capacity; what is the remand centre near Portsmouth to be called; what facilities will be provided; how many people it will hold on remand; and what is the total cost of relocating Latchmere house to Portsmouth and of any alterations or other necessary works.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office is planning changes at two prison service establishments, Her Majesty's remand centre Latchmere house at Richmond, Surrey, and Her Majesty's young offenders institution Haslar at Gosport, Hampshire. The certified normal accommodation of Latchmere house is 127. Its total population on 10 March was 157, including 94 persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971. Her Majesty's young offenders institution Haslar provides accommodation for 100 sentenced young offenders.

The aim, for which detailed plans are being prepared, is that the young offenders should be removed from Her Majesty's young offenders institution Haslar so that the Immigration Act detainees may be transferred there from Latchmere house. This, in turn, would allow the prison service to use the accommodation at Latchmere house to hold remand prisoners from the London area, many of whom are now held in police cells owing to overcrowding in the London prisons. The establishment at Haslar would remain under the control of the prison service and would be manned by prison service staff.

We informed many interested parties of this plan, including the relevant trades unions and the local authorities. Representations in response have been received from my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) and from Richmond borough council. Officials are to meet representatives of advisory agencies which specialise in immigration matters later this week.

It is not possible at this stage to answer all of the hon. Member's detailed questions, but I shall write to him when the answers are available.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to collect statistical data on the severity of various forms of animal experimentation along the lines of the scheme of monitoring under the Dutch Animal Experimentation Act 1977; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The "Statistics on Scientific Procedures on Living Animals", which are published annually (1987; Cm. 515) are the most factually detailed of those produced by any nation. There are currently no plans to incorporate in these annual statistics assessments of the severity of procedures which have been carried out, because of the inevitably subjective nature of such assessments.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to ensure that abuse of the hormone erythropoietin, does not become widespread in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: If there were evidence that this substance was being misused in the United Kingdom in such a way as to have harmful effects sufficient to amount to a social problem, it would be possible to consider bringing it under the control of the Misuse of Drugs Act, but we have so far received no such evidence.

Broadcasting

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the widening of the Broadcasting Standards Council remit to cover a code on anti-social behaviour does not result in overlap with that of other regulatory bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: When the Broadcasting Standards Council was set up, part of its remit was to draw up, in consultation with the broadcasting authorities and the other responsible bodies in broadcasting, cable and video, a code on the portrayal of sex and violence and standards on taste and decency. We see such a code as contributing to the work of the broadcasting authorities in this area, not overlapping or undermining their responsibilities for programme standards.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Murders

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders, classed as sectarian and non-sectarian have (a) been committed and (b) resulted in prosecution and conviction between October 1969 and October 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information in the form requested is not readily available from existing records and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs. The relevant data which are available are given in the following table:—

Year	Number of murders[1]	Murders cleared	Persons proceeded against[2]	Found guilty[3]
1969	5	4	4	—

1988	111	79	24	17

[1] 'Number of murders'—includes all murders in Northern Ireland; it does not include cases classed as manslaughter nor infanticides.

[2] Only shows the number of people who were proceeded against for murder. Some cases initially dealt with as murder were dealt with in the High Court as manslaughter.

Less Favoured Areas

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland farms have been classified as less favoured areas since the extension of the boundaries was agreed in 1983.

Mr. Viggers: The less favoured areas were last extended in Northern Ireland in 1984. Just over 13,000 farms in whole or in part were included in the area designated.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the tribunal established to consider appeals from farmers who felt that their land ought to have been included within the revised boundary after the extension of the Northern Ireland less favoured areas in 1983 completed its task; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The independent panel completed its work in August 1987. Since then, it has been necessary to extract and analyse detailed statistical data in order to apply the exacting economic and demographic tests, specified in EC legislation, before land may be designated less favoured.

Veterinary Students

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to ensure the future availability of places for Northern Ireland students in veterinary schools in the United Kingdom generally and in Scotland in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The University Grants Committee set up a working group under Sir Ralph Riley in 1987 "to consider the provision of veterinary education in the six veterinary schools in Great Britain and the scope for its rationalisation and to make recommendations". It reported in January 1989. Officials of the Department of Agriculture are considering the implications of the report for Northern Ireland's future needs on veterinary manpower and training.

Electoral Registers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision he has made to make available the annual electoral registers to (a) Members of Parliament and (b) Members of the European Assembly.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under regulation 53(1) of the Representation of the People (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1986, a Member of Parliament for a constituency in Northern Ireland is entitled, on request, to one copy of the register for that constituency free of charge from the Chief Electoral Officer. Similar provision exists in respect of Members of the European Parliament under the European Parliamentary Elections (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1986. In the latter case, the constituency is, of course, the whole of Northern Ireland.

RUC and Army Raids

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) in how many homes in Northern Ireland raided by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Army weapons have been discovered during the last 12 months;

(2) how many homes in Northern Ireland have been raided by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Army in search of weapons during the last 12 months.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answers 23 February 1989]: I refer the Hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) on 2 March 1989 at column 310-11.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Cambridge University Veterinary School

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what savings it is estimated will arise from the closure of the Cambridge university veterinary school.

Mr. Jackson: The rationalisation recommendations of the University Grants Committee's review of veterinary education, currently out for consultation, do not envisage net savings. The intention is to strengthen existing national provision by making yet more effective use of existing resources.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the proposed closure of the Cambridge university veterinary school.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the Answer I gave the hon. Member for St. Helens South (Mr. Bermingham) on 6 March at column 397.

Veterinary Students

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many veterinary students from abroad came to (a) study and (b) work in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: The total number of full-time and sandwich veterinary science students with overseas domicile in universities in Great Britain in each of the last five years, is:

	Undergraduate	Postgraduate
1984	51	117
1985	61	126
1986	77	134

While students "see practice" as part of their veterinary courses, they may actually practice only after qualification and subsequent registration with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest figures for estimated spending by the Department on advertising, publicity and publications for the current financial year (1988-89) are as follows:

Television	nil
Radio	40,000
Newspapers (including magazines and directories)	475,000
Other expenditure (publications, videos, exhibitions etc.)	3,400,000

Figures for 1989-90 are not finalised.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the privatisation of the National Seed Development Organisation and some of the assets of the Plant Breeding Institute, the fees and other sale expenses totalled about £0·6 million, as stated in the published appropriation account for class XII, vote 13 for 1987-88. This is the only privatisation conducted by this Department in the period referred to.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Estimated.

Note:

Information for earlier years could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89, and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest estimated expenditure for the current financial year on press, public relations and departmental publications, including staff costs, is £4·9 million. Figures for 1989-90 are not finalised.

Drama

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for drama as an educational tool in the national curriculum for children in (a) primary, (b) middle and (c) high/secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Drama has an important part to play both as an element contributing to various national curriculum subjects and as a non-foundation subject in its own right. It is included in the terms of reference of the national curriculum English working group in connection with dramatic works of literature and as a medium for the development of a range of oral skills. These aspects will be taken into account in the development of the relevant national curriculum statutory orders.

Health Education

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to amend the national curriculum to include health education; and if he will make a statement about the role of health education in all schools.

Mr. Butcher: Health education has been identified by the Government as an important cross-curricular theme to be covered within the national curriculum. When the order for national curriculum science is laid this will include explicit requirements for pupils to cover relevant aspects of health education. Other foundation subjects will cover different aspects of health education, as appropriate. My right hon. Friend has also asked the National Curriculum Council to advise him on the place and content of personal and social education, including health education, within the curriculum as a whole. The council has been asked to submit a progress report on its work by the end of March.

Down's Syndrome

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning centres which are currently undertaking research into the therapeutic and remedial treatment of Down's syndrome.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is currently funding five centres where research of relevance to the therapeutic and remedial treatment of Down's syndrome is being carried out. The details are as follows:

Centre and project title

MRC Human Genetics Unit, Edinburgh
- Consequences of chromosome abnormalities in the newborn: the Edinburgh Longitudinal Study.

MRC Cognitive Development Unit, London
- Development of cognitive abilities of the mentally retarded.

MRC Social Psychiatry Unit, London
- (1) Camberwell Mental Retardation Case Registers.
- (2) Evaluation of the rundown of a mental handicap hospital and of the alternative services provided.

Department of Psychology, University of Edinburgh
- (1) An investigation of differences in cognitive development in Down's syndrome and normal infants.
- (2) Early learning and development in infants with mental handicap.

Department of Psychology, Institute of Education, London
- Special abilities in gifted and handicapped children.

In addition, university departments and medical schools and regional health authorities support a range of basic research, from public funds, which may be relevant to the therapeutic and remedial treatment of Down's syndrome.

Mr. Paul Scruton

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his Department's letter to Mr. Paul Scruton, Secondary Examinations Council, 45 Notting Hill Gate, W11, of 9 February, designating him for transfer to the SEAC by parliamentary order effective from 7 March, in the light of the statement in the Official Report, 16 January, column 186.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under section 15 of the Education Reform Act 1988, my right hon. Friend designated for transfer to the School Examinations and Assessment Council all SEC staff who did not by resignation indicate their unwillingness to serve in suitable posts. Mr. Paul Scruton was duly transferred to a post in SEAC to which he was eminently suited.

Cancer Treatment (Animals)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure the continuation of radiotheraphy cancer treatment for animals and the close collaboration with research work on human cancer in the event of the Cambridge university veterinary school closing.

Mr. Jackson: The Universities Funding Council will wish to take matters such as these into account in its decisions on the recommendations of the review of veterinary education, which is currently out for consultation.

Violence in Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the report of the inquiry under the chairmanship of Lord Elton into violence in schools; and if he will make a statement on its conclusions.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am arranging for the committee's report to be published today. Copies of the report are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. I am grateful to Lord Elton and his colleagues for carrying out a thorough and wide-ranging inquiry.

The Government believe that immediate action should be taken to deal with indiscipline in schools and violence, wherever it occurs. It fully supports teachers in their efforts to establish good order in the classroom. It welcomes the contribution which the committee's report makes to solving these problems.

The Government have decided to act immediately on the following recommendations in the report:

I have accepted the committee's recommendation that in future all initial teacher training courses should include separate, compulsory elements of practical training in how to manage pupil behaviour, and that these skills should be a key factor in assessing a student's performance and competence to teach.

I propose to set a clear national standard for the amount of time which teacher trainers must spend in school, so as to ensure that they have sufficient recent practical experience. I shall take action forward through the review which I am conducting of the criteria for approval of initial teacher training courses.

Subject to the necessary consultation, I propose to accept the committee's recommendation that the management of pupil behaviour should become a national priority in the local education authority training grants scheme for in-service training of teachers in 1990-91.

I accept the committee's conclusion that the procedures for excluding pupils from school should be monitored closely. I propose to institute a monitoring scheme for two years, rather than the five years recommended in the report. I will require reports in all cases where a head teacher's decision to exclude a child from a school is overruled by either the governing body or the local education authority. At the same time I shall require full details of incidents leading to exclusions, so that we have a national picture. At the end of that period I shall decide on the future of the existing statutory provisions.

Subject to the necessary statutory consultations with the local authority associations, I propose to make an education support grant available to encourage local education authorities to work up coherent plans to address the problem of difficult pupils, whether on-site or off-site. I also propose to support through education support grants a programme to encourage local education authorities and schools to take positive action to tackle truancy. Both grants would be made available in 1990-91, and would be targeted on inner-city areas in the first instance.

I intend to require all local education authorities to introduce teacher appraisal schemes covering all their teachers within the next few years; and I shall expect these schemes to pay close attention to classroom management.

I am asking the school management task force to act on the committee's recommendation that management training programmes for headteachers and other senior staff should give emphasis to the skills required to motivate and lead staff, and to manage institutional change.

The National Curriculum Council is already considering the place and content of personal and social education in the curriculum. I have asked the council to report progress to me by the end of March.

The committee's recommendations are addressed not only to Government, but to local education authorities, teachers, governing bodies, parents, the police and others. I look to all those groups to play their part in responding to the report. In particular, I hope that governing bodies and schools will look hard at what they can do to win parents' active support and partnership for their policies on discipline. I hope they will find opportunities to emphasise to parents the key role which they play in promoting good discipline in schools through the example they set and the control and guidance they provide in the home.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is considering similar action in Wales on those matters falling within his responsibilities.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the inquiry into violence in schools was established; when its report was received; and what was the cost of the inquiry.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I announced the establishment of the inquiry into discipline in schools on 18 March 1988, in reply to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) at column 687. The committee's report was received on 31 January. The cost of the inquiry is approximately £70,000. This includes the cost of the survey commissioned by the committee from Sheffield university but excludes the costs of publishing and distributing the committee's report.

ENERGY

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has contact at both ministerial and official level with groups interested in energy matters and, when appropriate, initiates more formal consultations. There are no arrangements for routine consultation.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ascertain from the major oil companies why they are not prepared to ensure that their tied garages are supplied with unleaded petrol if they wish to sell it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The supply of unleaded petrol is a commercial decision for the oil companies. The number of garages selling unleaded petrol is growing steadily. The latest available figures, for the end of January, were a weekly conversion rate of over 200 garages and over 4,300 already converted.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: The table gives the latest figures for complement, staff in post and vacancies in the Department's economics and statistics division. No decisions have been made to change the complement for 1989-90.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisation in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: Total expenditure on fees paid to outside organisations in relation to the privatisation of Amersham Interntional, Britoil and Enterprise Oil could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost. Fees paid to outside organisations in the case of the privatisation of British Gas and in the preparation for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales are:

£ million

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Parkinson: The information requested is no longer available for the financial years 1979-80 and 1980-81 and is only available for 1981-82 to 1983-84 at disproportionate cost. The cost of administrative consultancies for 1984-85 onwards is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1985-86	31,209
1986-87	30,101
1987-88	35,451

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: The staffing of my Department's press office, including the public inquiry point and support staff, is currently 13. There are no vacancies and no decisions have been made to change the complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 is £475,000. This figure includes:

(i) forecast expenditure by the press office;
(ii) staff costs (salaries, accommodation and common services) for all permanent information service and support staff currently in post in the press office including the public inquiry point.

Currently proposed expenditure for 1989-90 is £575,000.

Drinking Water

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the drinking water supply in his Department's head office building meets the European Economic Community standard.

Mr. Parkinson: Water for the Department's head office building is supplied from a borehole and the quality does not meet the requirements of the EC directive. The premises are to be refurbished later this year and I understand that the water supply then will be taken from Thames water authority's public mains supply.

In the meantime, point of use filters have been installed to improve the quality of the drinking water.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Parkinson: The latest estimates of expenditure by my Department in 1988-89 in the following areas are:

	£ million
(a) Television advertising	nil
(b) Radio advertising	[1]—
(c) Press advertising including newspapers	2·4
(d) Other promotional material	1·3

[1] £3,504 has been spent on radio advertising.

Currently proposed expenditure for 1989-90[1] is:

	£ million
(a) Television advertising	nil
(b) Radio advertising	nil
(c) Press advertising including newspapers	0·5

[1] Departmental expenditure on electricity privatisation will include expenditure on advertising although at present no decision has been taken on its size and timing.

West Burton B

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what communications he has received from (a) the Bassetlaw district council, (b) the Nottinghamshire county council and (c) the Central Electricity Generating Board on the fulfilment of planning conditions for the proposed West Burton B power station; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what factors are now preventing him announcing his permission for the construction of the West Burton B power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 3 November 1988 at column 713.

My Department has recently been advised by the Bassetlaw district council that agreement has now been reached, in principle, between the local planning authorities and the CEGB on the outstanding matters concerning the construction and operation of the station.

My right hon. Friend will wish to receive confirmation of this, together with copies of the separate agreements between the councils and the CEGB, before proceeding with his consideration of the application.

Sulphurous Emissions

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct the Central Electricity Generating Board to continue to test systems for cleansing sulphurous emissions from large fossil-fuelled power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In order to meet the requirements of the EC large combustion plant directive the Central Electricity Generating Board will wish to appraise both the technical and cost efficiency of various methods of reducing sulphur emissions. The type of process chosen for future plant as well as that retrofitted to existing power stations will be a matter for the commercial judgment of the CEGB and its successors.

Fiddlers Ferry

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct the Central Electricity Generating Board to fit a regenerative flue-gas desulphurisation system at Fiddlers Ferry power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board and its successors will decide the order in which large coal-fired power stations should be retrofitted and the type of flue-gas desulphurisation process to be used.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Foreign Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Eggar: Latest Foreign and Commonwealth Office estimates of expenditure on advertising and other promotional material for 1988-89 and their 1989-90 budget provision are:

A disaggregation of these figures to identify the medium used is not available.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign Office diplomatic wing—nil.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar: No such fees have been paid for the period in question.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Eggar: Foreign and Commonwealth Office expenditure on management consultants in the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and estimated expenditure in 1988-89 is as follows. The figures include expenditure for both the diplomatic and aid wings.

Year	Amount
1986-87	68,329
1987-88	257,272
1988-89	62,512

Prior to 1986-87 consultancy expenditure was not separately identified in the FCO's accounts.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Foreign Office; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Eggar: The full complement of staff in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic wing's news department and the aid wing's administration press office is 18. There are presently no vacant posts. The complement for 1989-90 will depend on the workload during the year.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Afghanistan

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy considerations underlie the continuing absence of a British ambassador from Afghanistan; and what arrangements are made for United Kingdom nationals such as Red Cross workers when in need of diplomatic assistance.

Mr. Eggar: We withdrew Her Majesty's ambassador from Afghanistan in 1980 to register our disapproval of the installation of an unrepresentative regime by the Soviet army. Before the temporary withdrawal of the remaining embassy staff in February this year, we informed British nationals that consular assistance would no longer be available.

British nationals who travel to, or stay in, Afghanistan now do so in the knowledge that this is so.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's ambassador will return to Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The then British ambassador was withdrawn in 1980 shortly after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. We have since then had no ambassador in Kabul. It is too early to predict when it would be appropriate to appoint an ambassador again.

PLO

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek clarification from the Palestine Liberation Organisation about the public support for the use of petrol bombs expressed by Salah Khalaf (Abu Iyad) in a published interview in Abu Dhabi on 1 March.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. We have already made clear to PLO representatives that the intifada should be pursued with the utmost restraint.

Angola

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the United Nations has been directly involved in mediation between the MPLA-PT and UNITA;

(2) when the situation in Angola will next be discussed in the United Nations;

(3) when was the last occasion that the United Nations Security Council or other United Nations for a discussed the civil war in Angola; and what resolutions were passed;

(4) what contacts have been made in the last year between Her Majesty's Government and African countries concerning the civil war in Angola;

(5) whether he has made representations through the United Nations or other international organisations in order to facilitate national reconciliation in Angola and the holding of free and fair elections;

(6) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards UNITA, its leader Dr. Jonas Savimbi, and its stated objectives of national reconciliation and the holding of free and fair elections in Angola;

(7) when he last met representatives of the Angolan Government; and what was discussed;

(8) what contacts have been made by him with other governments concerning the holding of free and fair elections in Angola;

(9) what representations he has made to the MPLA-PT Government of Angola concerning the holding of free and fair elections in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We meet regularly with representatives of the Angolan Government in the normal course of diplomatic relations. The Angolan Ministers of the productive sector, foreign affairs and justice have all visited the United Kingdom since the beginning of 1988. In February this year my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development visited Luanda for the annual SADCC meeting and called on President dos Santos. A wide range of international, regional and bilateral matters was discussed.

We are in regular touch with African leaders in the region, who are best placed to mediate, about moves towards internal peace in Angola. We would welcome any move to establish internal peace which had the support of both sides, but it is not for us to prescribe how elections should be conducted in another sovereign state. We have made no representations through international bodies on this subject.

We maintain contact with UNITA at official level. Mr. Savimbi is free to visit Britain as a private individual but is not received officially.

The mandate of the United Nations Angola verification mission (UNAVEM) is to verify the redeployment northwards and the phased and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola according to the agreed timetable which is due to start on 1 April. The internal political situation in Angola is not the subject of discussion at the United Nations.

Departmental Officials

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the officials in the Civil Service box during Foreign Office questions on 8 March.

Mr. Eggar: The officials present were appropriate for the business before the House. I see no reason to give names of officials in the officials' box on such occasions.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will meet the Secretary General of the Arab League to ask him to press member states and organisations to repudiate the statement on 5 March by Ahmad Jibril, secretary-general of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine General Command, threatening to murder Mr. Salman Rushdie.

Mr. Waldegrave: We condemn threats to murder Mr. Rushdie from any source, and welcome all statements by other states and organisations which repudiate such threats.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mushtaq Ahmed, ref. GV100/4412, was interviewed at the British embassy at Islamabad in connection with his entry clearance application to enter the United Kingdom; when the entry clearance officer who interviewed him wrote to the United Kingdom immigration service requesting information about Mr. Ahmed; when the entry clearance officer sent a reminder as no reply to his request had been received; and when he expects to take a decision on Mr. Ahmed's application.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Mustaq Ahmed was interviewed at the British embassy at Islamabad on 30 November 1987. The entry clearance officer wrote to the immigration service on 7 December 1987 requesting that Mr. Ahmed's fiancée be interviewed. Due to an oversight, no reminder was sent to the immigration service until 6 March 1989. The entry clearance officer has now taken a decision on this application, which is in the process of being conveyed to Mr. Ahmed.

Mr. Madden To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mushtaq Ahmed, ref. GV100/4412, first made an entry clearance application to the British embassy in Islamabad to come to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: On 11 June 1986.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report on Hong Kong will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Eggar: I am laying the report before Parliament today. It is also being published today, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Consultation Papers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost in (a) real and (b) cash terms for each of the last five years to his Department and its predecessors of producing and distributing printed material pertaining to consultation exercises on matters within his present responsibilities as (i) Green Papers and (ii) White Papers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Green and White Papers are generally published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The Department, like its predecessor the Department of Health and Social Security, purchases the number of copies it requires of each paper for distribution internally, and to certain other recipients, from Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The information on the costs of such purchases can be produced only at disproportionate cost. Records of distribution are not retained and retrospective distribution costs cannot therefore be calculated.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate, by area, how many people in the Northern region in receipt of transitional payments will have no overall increase in their incomes from pensions and social security benefits this year as a result of being placed on transitional payments since April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available, but refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March at column 445.

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consideration he has given to the potential risks of social security fraud under a computerised system; and if he will take measures to minimise these risks;

(2) if he will quantify the risks posed to individuals from computerisation of the Department's files;

(3) what measures he intends to take to protect, from unathorised internal or external entry, newly computerised elements of the social security network.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 15 December 1988 at columns 693-94. I add that the introduction of new computerised systems for administering social security will substantially reduce the risk of certain types of social security fraud.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will quantify and qualify progress made in the provision of the computer network for his Department's social security files; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This year's Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm. 615) sets out the progress made in the development of our huge computerisation programme, the operational strategy. We are happy to add another achievment to that list, the largest and most ambitious system yet, namely the local office project which deals with the processing of income support, which was successfully introduced in Bolton and Edinburgh, South local offices on 27 February.

Benefits (Monitoring)

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce the outcome of his monitoring of the benefit system for 16 and 17-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Our policy is the correct one for the vast majority of 16 and 17-year-olds; it would be irresponsible to provide a perverse incentive for people of this age to leave home needlessly. However, our monitoring and our discussions with representatives of the voluntary sector and the local authority associations reveal that a minority are facing real difficulties.

We recognise that young people on income support who, for good reason, have to live independently, will have extra and unavoidable expenses. We have therefore decided that these 16 and 17-year-olds should receive a higher personal allowance in income support. They will qualify for the allowance payable to young people between ages 18 and 24 which, from April, is £27·40 a week. The increase will be available to those genuinely estranged from their parents and those who would meet the qualifying conditions for income support which already apply during the child benefit extension period.

We will also introduce a similar relaxation in the rules governing housing benefit. Young people living independently can find that they are worse off taking a YTS place or job than on income support because of the effect of housing costs and expenses such as travel costs, associated with their training or work. We therefore plan to increase the housing benefit applicable amount for all 16 and 17-year-olds.

We also plan to introduce some further minor changes. First, we will wholly disregard payments made by local authorities under the Child Care Act 1980 and the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 to young people leaving care.

Secondly, we shall extend entitlement to income support during the child benefit extension period to young people genuinely estranged from their parents, in line with the proposal for increasing the level of benefit paid to this group.

Thirdly, 16 and 17-year-olds who seek emergency accommodation in night shelters need time to sort out their affairs before taking up a YTS place. These cases will automatically be considered by the Secretary of State under the severe hardship provisions.

Fourthly, young people who have become estranged from their families or who have had to leave home for some other good reason are usually in a very vulnerable condition. Officials who deal with their claims need to do so sensitively and I plan to introduce special training to help them to carry out their task in an understanding way.

The total cost of these changes to the income-related benefit rules will be some £3·7 million in a full year. subject to the necessary consultations with the Social Security advisory committee and the local authority associations, we intend introducing the changes this July, except that the new arrangement for people in emergency accommodation will take effect from April. I believe that this package of extra help for 16 and 17-year-olds is well targeted towards those most in need. Our wider policy, of encouraging such youngsters to stay in the parental home and, if they are not in education or employment, to take up the offer of a YTS place, remains appropriate for the vast majority of young people of this age.

Staff

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to begin to monitor customer service and efficiency at local social security offices following staff changes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department monitors customer service and efficiency in two main ways. First, clearance times for claims and accuracy of payments are monitored on at least a monthly basis in order to remedy problems when performance falls below target levels. At present 50 per cent. of local social security activity is monitored in this way and from April 1989 this will increase to 75 per cent. Secondly, the Department also monitors the quality of service in several other key areas such as caller waiting times, telephone service, correspondence, and interviewing, and additionally does local customer opinion sampling about service standards.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details by local office of changes in staffing for social security in the north-west region between March 1988 and now and planned cuts over the next 12 months.

Access Committee for England

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Access Committee for England's future status and role.

Mr. Scott: This matter is under consideration.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Expenditure by the Department in 1988-89 is estimated as:

	£ million
Television advertising	3·281
Radio advertising	0·199
Newspaper advertising	1·999
Other promotional material	6·521

The budget for publicity in 1989-90 is £16·3 million.

Detailed decisions on expenditure by media have not yet been taken.

Income Support

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest figure for the total annual amount paid in income support to residents of private residential homes in Derbyshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90;

(2) what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Functions commonly associated with press and public relations are carried out by the Department's information division.

The latest figures for the combined information divisions of the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security are:

	Numbers
Staff presently employed	77
Full complement of staff including vacant posts	80

Note: 38 of the above staff are Information Officers.

The estimated expenditure for both Departments on press and public relations manpower and running costs during 1988-89 is £1·344 million.

Discussions on the proposed complements and budgets for 1989-90 are not yet complete.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staff in post and vacancies in the Department's statistical branches at 1 March 1989 are shown in the table:

Grade	Staff in Post		Vacancies
	Administrative	Statistical	Administrative	Statistical
3	—	0·33	—	—

Total	75·50	15·33	5	1

The staffing complement for 1989-90 is expected to be as shown above but some adjustments may be made following the split of DHSS.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such fees have been identified and no such expenditure is planned for 1989-90.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Moore: The estimated expenditure from 1984-85 onwards on fees and expenses for management consultants on social security matters is as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	0·959
1985-86	1·722
1986-87	0·959
1988-89	1·020

The figures are approximate since expenditure up to and including the 1988-89 financial year is from a joint Health and Social Security budget. In some cases expenditure has been apportioned where consultants have been engaged on both health and social security matters. The figures include some computer consultancy where this cannot be separately identified.

The information for years prior to 1984-85 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Approved Training (Refusal)

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people in Halifax have been referred to an adjudication officer for consideration of refusal of approved training.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of claims referred to the adjudication office covering the Halifax area for consideration of refusal of approved training during 1988 were as follows:

		Decision on refusal or premature termination of approved training
Quarter ended	Claims referred to adjudication officer	Disallowed	Allowed
31 March	29	11	18
30 June	27	13	14
30 September	20	12	8
31 December	7	5	2

Note: Figures refer to the number of claims, rather than to the number of individuals claiming. Some individuals may have had more than one claim referred for adjudication.
Source: 100 per cent. count of adjudication officer decisions.

Severe Hardship Rule

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people have been refused benefit after applying to him or his officers under the severe hardship rule.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period 12 September 1988, when general entitlement to income support was withdrawn from 16 and 17-year-olds, to 3 March 1989, a total of 5,127 decisions have been made under the Secretary of State's discretionary power to avoid "severe hardship". A direction to enable income support to be paid was refused in 1,799 instances. These figures relate to the number of decisions made, not to the number of young people involved. Some young people have made more than one application.

Income Support

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people who had been in local authority care during the previous 24 months have lost entitlement to income support since September 1988 (a) nationally, (b) in Halifax and (c) in Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants currently placed in board and lodging accommodation by local authorities and entitled to income support will have to make a second, separate, claim for living expenses from local Department of Social Security offices and will have to start claiming money for their housing costs from local authority housing benefits sections after April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Claimants in this group already recieving income support will not have to make a new claim for income support in April. Local offices are sending them the necessary forms to claim housing benefit from April. The number placed in board and lodging by local authorities is not available.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Visitorial Jurisdiction

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Lord President of the Council, in exercising visitorial jurisdiction over universities, in connection with petitioners referred to him, what procedures are adopted; whether there are any plans to change the procedures; to what categories of persons petitions are delegated before any decision is promulgated; how many petitions have been referred to him since 1979, with what type of matters, breaking the answer down between substantive and procedural matters, these petitions dealt; what procedure is adopted for disseminating the results of visitorial decisions amongst universities; how many visitorial decisions have been referred to the court for review since 1979; and what were the results.

Mr. Wakeham: The procedure adopted is informal and matched to the circumstances of the individual case. Where it appears that the visitor has jurisdiction, the process begins by obtaining the university's comments on the petition and, where appropriate, giving an opportunity to the petitioner to comment on the observations of the university. The opportunity is sometimes given to the parties to appear at an oral hearing.

There are no plans to change the procedures themselves, except that, under the Education Reform Act 1988, when the relevant provision comes into force, matters relating to the employment of staff will no longer fall within the visitor's jurisdiction.

The decision in relation to petitions for which the visitor has jurisdiction is always taken by the Lord President personally and no decision is delegated to another person.

The number of petitions submitted since 1979 in respect of universities for which the Lord President exercises responsibility is 65.

The majority (42) were complaints by students about various aspects of their academic assessment, 11 concerned complaints by academic staff about their employment or dismissal, six concerned complaints by students about disciplinary proceedings and the remainder concerned various matters relating to the Government or administration of the university.

The decisions are normally disclosed only to the parties and are not disseminated to other universities.

Two decisions have been the subject of applications to the courts for judicial review. One such application was dismissed by a Master of the High Court and the other by the Court of Appeal.

WALES

Artificial Limb and Appliance Service

(2) if he will list the location of wheelchair assessment centres in Wales; if he has any plans to expand this provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Since 1 April 1988, management and operational responsibility for the artificial limb and appliance service in Wales has rested with the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. I have asked the general manager of the authority to respond directly to these inquiries.

Medical Treatment (Travel)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reduce the need for patients from Wales to travel long distances to England for medical treatment; what effect the White Paper proposals will have on this travelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Patterns of patient referral for treatment or diagnosis are only in part related to the location of the relevant services. Clinical and patient choice also influence such decisions. In the case of some specialised procedures, notably those designated as regional or supraregional services, the catchment population is necessarily so large or the availability of the specialist expertise so limited that only a small number of centres have been established. Although some of these are in Wales, where they are not it is desirable to refer Welsh patients to centres in England, in the same way as patients in England are sometimes referred to Wales.

The Welsh Office keeps under review the access which Welsh patients have to specialist health care services. As a result in-patient services are being expanded to improve patient access. Examples include renal dialysis, radiotherapy and oncology in south Wales, medical genetics, bone marrow transplantation and cardiac services. A report on the future development of radiotherapy and oncology services for patients in north Wales is expected shortly.

The arrangements for the management of regional services in Wales following the publication of the White Paper "Working for Patients" will be decided in consultation with district health authorities, within the Department's policy of developing in Wales as full a range of health services as is consistent with the clinical viability of the units concerned.

Mr. Grist: If a suitable research proposal were put to the Department, then it would certainly be given careful consideration. Their work may help to establish how many people in the Principality have problems associated with the use of benzodiazepines.

Mr. Neubert: This building is supplied with water by Thames Water and since no drinking water is stored on the premises PSA does not take samples for analysis unless there is reason to suspect the quality of water. Mr. Archie Hamilton: The activities of the hackers in West Germany are being investigated. If this investigation indicates an increase in the threat to, or vulnerability of, British or NATO defence computer systems sufficient to warrant changes in our security policy, we will take the appropriate action to ensure that MOD information handled by these systems is adequately protected.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the armed forces; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations of the armed forces; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90;

(2) what the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is a total of 217 posts on the strength of the Defence public relations staffs. These include staff in single service headquarters as well as in joint headquarters and in central staffs in the Ministry of Defence. Latest available figures show there to be 213 staff in post and four vacancies.

The proposed complement for 1989-90 is 221.

Both the tender and the order for SSBN08 will follow in due course.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the setting up of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Cope: In launching training and enterprise councils on 10 March the Prime Minister underlined the need for and the benefits of this important initiative which will re-shape the way this country approaches training and help for growing business.

We have had already an excellent response to our proposals from business leaders throughout the country. Groups are even now preparing their applications to become training and enterprise councils and I shall award the first development contracts in early July.

The first training and enterprise councils will be operational in early 1990.

Training (Expenditure)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the funds spent by employers on training in 1986-87 was spent on training women, and how much was spent on child care provision allowing (i) parents and (ii) women to attend training.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available.

Child Care Facilities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the provision of child care facilities is one of the stringent criteria which he states in the White Paper. "Employment for the 1990s", every organisation that participates in the youth training schemes has to satisfy to secure approved training organisation status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The provision of child care facilities is not one of the criteria used in assessing suitability for YTS approved training organisation status and there are no plans to introduce such a criteria.

Retail Prices Index

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the components of the retail prices index of the member states of the European Community.

Mr. Lee: The prices index for the European Community is a simple average of the consumer price indices produced by individual member states. In each case the coveragte of goods and services in the national index conforms broadly to the classification of household consumption established by the Community's Statistical Office (the European System of Ingegrated Economic Accounts, ESA), the main components of which are:

Food, beverages and tobacco.
Clothing and footwear
Gross rent, fuel and power.
Furniture, furnishings and household equipment and operation.
Medical Care and health expenses.
Transport and communication.
Recreation, entertainment, education and cultural services.
Miscellaneous goods and services.

However, the precise definition of the component categories differs from one country to another. In particular, in the "gross rent" category most of the national indices include imputed rents to represent the "shelter" costs faced by owner-occupiers, whereas the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland include mortgage interest payments for this purpose.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to whether any country other than the United Kingdom includes mortgage interest payments in their retail prices index.

Mr. Lee: Mortgage interest payments are included in the consumer price indices of the Republic of Ireland, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and a number of smaller countries throughout the world.

Hotels

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of hotels of over 15 bedrooms in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: The national tourist boards' records currently show 5,376 hotels with more than 15 bedrooms in England, 530 in Wales and 1,098 in Scotland. Comparable figures over a period of years are not available.

European Tourism Year

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to promote European Tourism Year in 1990 (a) nationally and (b) on the south coast.

Mr. Lee: In conjunction with the British Tourist Authority, my Department is actively promoting the objectives of the Year. The British Tourist Authority is organising a conference to launch the idea to industry representatives and to encourage their participation in the Year. This will be held on 25 May. It is intended that the Year will highlight the importance of the tourism industry throughout the country including the south coast.

Income Support (Claims)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the computer paying unemployment benefit is programmed to draw to the attention of those claimants whose benefit is about to expire the need to make a separate claim for income support.

Mr. Lee: The unemployment benefit computer is programmed to notify claimants automatically of their right to claim income support. A letter is normally sent two weeks before entitlement to unemployment benefit is due to exhaust allowing a claim for income support to be made before payment stops.

Working Hours

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to advise unemployment benefit offices of the decision R(U)5/88: requalification for UB—hours of work of school teachers; and what steps he proposes to take to identify other part-time workers whose contract of employment requires hours of service or availability that are not directly remunerated.

Mr. Lee: All unemployment benefit offices were given written notice of the implications of R(U)5/88 (previously CU/009/1986) in March 1988. These instructions were subsequently updated in October 1988 and continue to apply.

The decision specifically applied to part-time teachers and their contractual arrangements. It has no implications for other groups of part-time workers. There are no plans at present to change the rules applying to other groups.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Cope: Sixty people are presently employed, with five posts vacant. The proposed complement for 1989-90 is 68.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89, and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Cope: The estimated expenditure by the Department of Employment on press and public relations for 1988-89 is £1·458 million. The budget for 1989-90 is £1·627 million. The figures represent general administrative expenditure relating to costs for staff, accommodation and for regional services.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Manpower Services Commission on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Cope: The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 by the Training Agency (formerly MSC) on press and public relations is £715,000.

Privatisation

Fees to the value of £526,212 have been incurred in 1988-89.

No firm estimates for 1989-90 are yet available.

Working Women

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual percentage change in the number of full-time working women since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Between September 1979 and September 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, the annual percentage changes in the female full-time work force in employment in Great Britain were as follows:

September of each year
Percentage change since preceding year

	Per cent.
1980	−3
1981	−4
1982	−2
1983	+1
1984	+3
1985	+1
1986	+1
1988	+5

The estimates have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed, Her Majesty's Forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes. In classifying the work force in employment between full and part time, all programme participants are counted as in part-time employment.

Bridging Allowance

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in Halifax have applied for bridging allowance since September 1988.

Mr. Cope: As at 9 February the benefit-related payment system shows that 289 young people had received bridging allowance in Halifax since September 1988. There may also be a very small number who received clerical payments.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Halifax have lost benefits since September 1988 because they are unemployed or have been unable to take advantage of their guaranteed YTS place.

Mr. Cope: The guaranteed offer of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds not in full-time education or employment means that there is now no need for young people to be unemployed. I am satisfied that the Training Agency has more than sufficient YTS places available in Halifax for those who apply for one.

Restaurants

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total number of restaurants categorised as such in each of the last 10 years in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Lee: The information available relates to numbers of businesses, which may include more than one individual restaurant. For the years 1980 to 1986 the table below shows the available estimates for numbers of businesses in Great Britain which were classified as restaurants, snack bars, cafes, etc., supplying food for consumption on the premises only. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Short Sea Trades

70. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest available estimate of the fiscal advantages available to shipowners in the short sea trades in (a) West Germany, (b) the Netherlands and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am advised that in the Federal Republic of Germany shipping companies can benefit from delayed taxation of profits carried forward from the sale of a vessel. Similar arrangements apply in the Netherlands. These are generalised provisions not specific to shipping.

United Kingdom shipowners benefit from relatively low rates of United Kingdom taxation and generous writing down allowances. In addition investment in shipping attracts favourable treatment in the timing of depreciation allowances and in the business expansion scheme.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been paid in corporation tax in the United Kingdom by lower rate small companies in each of the last five fiscal years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of mainstream corporation tax paid at the small companies rate are as follows:

1985-86	0·6
1986-87	0·7
1987-88	[1]0·8

[1] Provisional.

Over the same period, total receipts of mainstream corporation tax are estimated to have risen from £4·1 billion to £10·8 billion.

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the adequacy by safeguards of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise computer system against unauthorised entry.

Mr. Lilley: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise completed a thorough review of information systems security arrangements in 1988. As a result, existing measures have been strengthened including the establishment of a computer security committee and the development of an information system security strategy in accordance with CCTA-approved methods.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give consideration to the potential risks of unauthorised entry into the Customs and Excise computer system.

Mr. Lilley: These risks are kept under regular review by a computer security committee which uses the CCTA-approved risk analysis and management methodology.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in view of the computerisation of Inland Revenue files, what steps he proposes to take to ensure the safeguarding of these files from unauthorised entry by internal or external computer hackers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Appropriate safeguards are built into the Inland Revenue's various on-line computer systems from the earliest design stages to prevent unauthorised access and ensure the integrity of the computer files. In particular, data transmission takes place over private circuits which denies external hackers the opportunity of calling up the systems. Terminals used by staff to access the on-line systems are subject to password control, and transactions are recorded in audit trails.

The Inland Revenue's computer systems are continuously monitored for possible abuse, and reviewed whenever either a significant change is made to an existing system or a new security threat emerges. The Department has in place a structure of security committees to oversee and monitor this control process.

Village Halls

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with organisations and others responsible for village halls on the question of short-term relief from the possible effect of value-added tax on non-domestic construction work by way of grant aid or a special reclaim scheme.

Mr. Lilley: Customs and Excise officials are currently engaged in discussions with representatives of village halls about the implications of the European Court of Justice judgment on VAT zero rates.

Clothing Industry (Liquidations)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many clothing industry liquidations there were in London in 1986, 1987 and 1988 reported to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue does not have a record of the number of liquidations specifically reported to it. The numbers of clothing industry liquidations extracted by it from the London Gazette were:

Calendar year	Number
1987	1,284
1988	456

Tax Informers

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax informers were there in 1987-88; how many of those were subsequently proved to be giving true information; and how many were subsequently proved to be giving false information.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue does not have records on informers from which such information could be obtained.

Cigarettes

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will express in real terms the ratio of the price of an average priced packet of 20 cigarettes to the average weekly wage in each of (a) 1959, (b) 1969, (c) 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The ratio of the average price of a packet of 20 cigarettes to the average weekly wage in the relevant financial years is shown below:

	Per cent.
1959-60	1·1
1969-70	1·0
1979-80	0·6
1988-89	0·6

Income Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish estimates of the tax yield from a 1p increase in (a) the basis rate and (b) the higher rate of tax, in each county, metropolitan district and London borough area.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that estimates by county of the effect of increasing the basic and higher rates of income tax by 1p in 1989-90 are not available.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by the Treasury in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The gross expenses incurred by Her Majesty's Treasury in connection with the sale of shares in Cable and Wireless and British Petroleum were as follows:

Thousands

	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1987-88 £
British Petroleum	22,108	656	—	—
Cable and Wireless	12,011	440	—	—
Cable and Wireless	—	—	21,400	—
British Petroleum	—	—	—	[1]146,707

[1] Excluding subscription for new shares and expenses of the Bank of England share purchase arrangement.

These expenses include fees paid to outside organisations, but these fees could be identified separately only at disproportionate cost.

Any costs incurred by Her Majesty's Treasury in connection with the privatisation programme in 1989-90 will be announced in due course in the usual way.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of Central Office of Information; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The press office of the Central Office of Information is staffed by one information officer. No increase is proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Central Office of Information on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The latest estimated cost of the press office of the Central Office of Information for 1988-89 is £44,350. The budget figure for 1989-90 is £48,200.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent estimate of spending on advertising by the Central Office of Information in 1988-89; and what is the estimated spending for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated spending on advertising through the Central Office of Information on behalf of other Government Departments for 1988-89 is £97 million.

Detailed decisions on estimated expenditure on advertising through the Central Office of Information on behalf of other Government Departments for 1989-90 are for departmental Ministers.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total staff of the Central Office of Information; what it was in 1987-88; and what it is estimated to be in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is as follows:

Permanent staff in post

1 January	Number
1987	815
1988	804
1989	787

Value Added Tax

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest position regarding European Community proposals for imposing value added tax on goods and clothing sold in charity shops.

Mr. Lilley: Discussions on the Commission's proposals for the approximation of VAT rates are continuing in the Economic and Finance Council. The Government's position, which has been repeated on numerous occasions, is that we are not prepared to accept proposals which would restrict our ability to retain VAT zero rates. Our position is safeguarded because changes to EC tax law require unanimity.

Tax Forms

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of people who receive a tax form; and what percentage of the taxable population this represents.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 March 1989]: The total number of people receiving income tax returns and claims forms is 9·5 million which represents around 37 per cent. of the taxable population for whom records are held.

Earnings

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many employees' earnings, including the value of benefits, exceed the rate of (a) £8,500 and (b) £17,000 per year;

(2) how many employees earning more than (a) £8,500 and (b) £17,000 a year, in each case including the value of benefits, are assessed on benefits;

(3) how much tax is raised in a year from assessing for benefits those earning as employees more than £8,500 a year, including the value of benefits; and what is his estimate of how much tax would be forgone if the figure of £17,000 was to be substituted for that of £8,500.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 9 March 1989]: Provisional estimates of the number of employees in each of the categories specified are given in the table. Figures exclude directors because benefits received by directors are taxable irrespective of the level of their earnings.

Number of employees (million)

	Annual rate of earnings £8,500	£17,000
Number of employees whose earnings in 1988-89 (including any benefits received but after deductions of contributions to approved pension funds) exceed each rate	9·8	1·9
liable to tax on benefits received	1·5	0·7

The direct revenue yield, in 1988-89 terms, arising from the taxation of expenses and benefits received by employees (excluding directors) with earnings above the £8,500 threshold is estimated to be about £510 million. A further £370 million arises from the taxation of benefits received by directors. The direct revenue cost of an increase in the earnings threshold used to determine whether an employee is liable to tax on benefits is estimated to be about £150 million in 1988-89 terms.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff in each grade resigned in (a) London and (b) the south-east in the last 12-month period for which the figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The information, in relation to the main grades concerned, for the period from 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989, is as follows:

Number of resignations: 1 February 1988 to 31 January 1989

Note: "London" and "South East" refer to the Inland Revenue's four London regions and South East regions respectively.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received from the Heating and Ventilating Contractors' Association about the case for fiscal incentives for investment in plant required for recycling and safe destruction of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The association suggested the introduction of fiscal incentives for such investment.

Charities

Ms. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount paid by registered charities by way of value-added tax.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that this information is not available.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of abortions performed to save the life of the mother in Basildon health authority area from April 1968 to the latest available date; and what percentage this represents of all abortions performed.

Mr. Freeman: There were no abortions performed under ground 5 of the Abortion Act 1967, which permits an abortion in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman, upon women usually resident in Basildon and Thurrock district health authority or its equivalent areas prior to 1982 between 1968 and 31 December 1987.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Mellor: Ministers and officials have regular contact with representatives of all spheres of health service activity, seeking contributions towards improving quality of patient services, policy development and on technical issues. Meetings are also held on health matters with voluntary organisations and their representatives. In addition to individuals making representations either to the Department or their local health organisations, since 1974, the consumer voice has been represented by community health councils. These bodies contribute towards the planning and standard of local services and have an input when changes in the pattern of service delivery is being produced.

Smoking

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings he, his Ministers and his Department's officials have had with representatives of the medical and health professions on the subject of smoking since 1 January 1988; if he will list the dates, venues and purpose of each meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Department of Health Ministers or officials have not met with representatives of the health professions specifically to discuss smoking. There have, however, been frequent meetings with our expert advisory committees, including the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health, with the Health Education Authority and with bodies with an interest in the health aspects of smoking such as ASH. Ministers receive advice on the medical aspects of smoking from the chief medical officer and his staff.

Seaham Harbour Dental Unit

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Seaham Harbour school dental unit will close as a result of the recent reorganisation of community health services for the Easington district carried out by the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may, however, wish to contact the chairman of Sunderland health authority, the authority which, from 1 April 1989, will be responsible for the management of community health services for Seaham.

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what precautions are taken to ensure the confidentiality of computerised individual personal Health Department files from unauthorised internal and external penetration.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health has taken a number of precautions against unauthorised internal and external breaches of the confidentiality of personal files held on computer. There is a continuing programme aimed at raising the awareness of staff of possible threats to this confidentiality and approximate countermeasures most of which involve additional physical security. Department of Health computer systems that contain personal details of indentifiable individuals are registered in accordance with the Data Protection Act.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been considered to protect computerised departmental waiting lists from internal or external penetration.

Mr. Freeman: The responsibility for guarding against unauthorised access to information held on hospital computer files rests with individual health authorities all of which have been made aware of the requirements of the Data Protection Act.

The issue of specific guidance to hospitals on the security of computer systems, including those holding waiting list information, is currently under consideration.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what techniques are used to protect on-line computer-held departmental systems from unauthorised internal or external access.

Mr. Freeman: Currently, most Department of Health computer systems cannot be accessed on-line by other systems. Where on-line access is possible security measures appropriate to the sensitivity of the data held and the possible consequences of data corruption are taken. These include procedures for the security copying of computer-held information and physical checks of cabling and communications equipment.

All Department of Health computer systems are subject to physical security measures. The exact measures employed relate directly to the physical vulnerability of both the system type and its location.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given by his Department to relevant health authority offices to secure their computer terminals against unauthorised penetration of the Health Department mainframe in London.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health mainframe computer in London has linked terminals within its own location and at two more Department of Health central London offices. No other terminals have access to the system.

Access from the linked terminals is controlled by use of suitable physical and logical security measures for the mainframe itself and for each terminal with validated access to information held on it.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what record is kept of the use made of Departmental computer files.

Mr. Freeman: For Department of Health computer held information registered in accordance with the Data Protection Act, the rules of the Act apply. Where it is considered necessary, further controls are maintained relating to permitted access and regular checking of system usage.

Mr. H. W. Williscroft

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will examine the correspondence from Mr. H. W. Williscroft of 6 Hill street, Rugeley, Staffordshire, to his Department's agency benefit unit at Long Benton, Newcastle upon Tyne, to ascertain the reasons for the delay in determining his entitlement to help with National Health Service costs.

Mr. Freeman: I have made inquiries of the agency benefits unit of the Department of Social Security and I understand that Mr. Williscroft's claim has now been determined.

MMR Vaccinations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were administered MMR vaccinations in the year 1988-89; in how many cases contra-indications were reported after the administering of the vaccine; and how many cases of mumps, measles and rubella occurred in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Immunisation uptake figures for 1988-89 will not be available until later this year. However, from the launch of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine last October to the end of January, 1·2 million doses were made available. The number of children in the recommended priority groups (aged 15 months and 4 to 5 years) who became eligible for the vaccine in that period was 400,000.

Contra-indications are reasons for not administering vaccines and are not therefore reported. Mumps and rubella became notifiable only from 1 October 1988; since then 13,140 and 8,876 cases respectively have been notified. Notifications for measles for the last five years were:

	Numbers
1985	97,408
1986	82,061
1987	42,065
1988	[1]85,642

Medicines (Review Bodies)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of those who serve on review bodies under the Medicines Act; how many medicines have been reviewed, and with what result; and what is the nature of the criteria used to assess risk/benefit ratios.

Mr. Mellor: The current membership of the Committee on the Review of Medicines is given in its annual report for 1987, a copy of which is available in the Library. This and previous annual reports of the Committee on the Review of Medicines from 1975 give details of the progress of the review. Of the approximate 3,360 medicines which have been reviewed so far some 3,205 were permitted to remain on the market and some 160 have been removed. The latest figure excludes medicines withdrawn by companies themselves: an estimated 39,000 medicines subject to the review were on the market when it began in 1975. Risk/benefit ratios are assessed on the available evidence in relation to the uses for which medicines are claimed to be effective. Particular guidance on herbal medicines was issued in 1985 in the herbal information sheet, a copy of which is in the Library.

Cunliffe Evans Report

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Cunliffe Evans report on alternative medicine was submitted to his Department; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. Mellor: The report of the study on the control of medicines (the Evans Cunliffe report) was published in January 1988. Its main thrust was on the management and organisation of the general arrangements for licensing medicines. Only one of its 54 recommendations concerned alternative medicines. This was that product licensing was not appropriate for the control of homoeopathic and similar alternative medicines. However, the Medicines Commission in its annual report for 1987 expressed a preference for a product licensing system for homoeopathic medicines addressing safety and quality but not efficacy, which the Commission acknowledged would not be possible under the Medicines Act 1968 as it stands. The Commission of the European Community has a commitment to a directive on homoeopathic medicines. When a proposal is made to the Council of Ministers, we shall consider it carefully. It would serve no useful purpose to pursue meantime in the United Kingdom either the Cunliffe Evans or Medicines Commission views until we have Commission proposals for European Community law on this matter.

National Health Service Funding

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the National Health Service provision, excluding boards of governors and special health authorities, that is currently funded, completely or partly, directly by his Department;

(2) if he will list the services, now funded by districts, which were started in the National Health Service with either direct central or supra-regional funding;

(3) if he will list the National Health Service provision, excluding boards of governors and special health authorities, that has been funded completely or partly by direct central funding in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The services for which revenue funding has been specifically provided to regional health authorities in 1988-89 are:

Waiting Lists and Times
AIDS
Breast Cancer Screening
Measles Mumps and Rubella Vaccine
Services for Drug Misusers
Supra Regional Services:
- Spinal Units
- Cranio-facial Services
- Liver Transplants
- Chorion-carcinoma Services
- National Poisons Information Unit
- Neonatal and Infant Cardiac Surgery
- Specialised Liver Services
- Heat Transplantation (including Heart and Lung Transplants)
- Endoprosthetic Services for Primary Bone Tumours
- Psychiatric Services for Deaf People

United Kingdom Transplant Service
Quality Assessment of Clinical Laboratories

Other services funded in this way since 1983-84 are as follows. Information for previous years is not readily available.

Local Dental Health Survey and Education Programme
Psychiatric Rehabilitation
Renal Services Expansion
Transplant Advisors: Kidney Donors
Rural Practice Payments for Dispensing
Hearing Aids
Cervical Cytology Kits
Community Medicine Register.

Note: Each year the Department reserves centrally a small proportion of resources to fund developments in the hospital and community health services where central intervention is considered both desirable and cost effective; for example, specialised new activities arising from research which needs to be tried under central oversight.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the National Health Service services which receive supra-regional funding.

Mr. Freeman: The following services have received supra-regional funding in 1988-89 and will continue to do so in 1989-90;

Chorioncarcinoma Services
Craniofacial Services
Endoprosthetic Services for Primary Bone Tumours
Heart Transplantation (including Heart and Lung Transplantation)
Liver Transplantation
National Poisons Information Services
Neonatal and Infant Cardiac Surgery
Psychiatric Services for Deaf People
Specialised Liver Services
Spinal Injury Services

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of totally and profoundly deaf people who get no benefit from hearing aids but who might be helped by a cochlear implant.

Mr. Mellor: Estimates from those units which currently provide a cochlear implant service suggest that between 5,000 and 6,000 profoundly deaf people in England might get some benefit from a cochlear implant.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is currently issued by his Department to people with a hearing loss.

Mr. Mellor: All National Health Service patients issued with a hearing aid are given a copy of the Department's booklet HA1 "How to use your Hearing Aid", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of hearing aid users in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Figures provided by the Institute of Hearing Research suggest that around 1·3 million people aged 17 and over in England and Wales use a hearing aid. We have no precise information about the number of children using hearing aids.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last reviewed the adequacy of the range of hearing aids available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: The range of hearing aids available under the National Health Service is kept under constant review by the commodities advisory group advising Mersey regional health authority, which is responsible for the procurement and distribution of all National Health Service hearing aids.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations currently govern cigarette advertisements in duty-free areas at ports, airports, and other similar areas under United Kingdom jurisdiction under current agreement with the tobacco industry; whether he will be taking steps in his negotiations with the tobacco industry to include such areas under new regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The current voluntary agreement with the industry requires companies to "continue to include a health warning in cigarette or hand-rolling tobacco brand advertising posters for display in lounges, corridors or shops of land duty free areas".

Other forms of advertising in duty free areas are not covered by the voluntary agreement. The Government will consider whether to seek any appropriate extension or clarification of the agreement as regards duty free areas when renegotiating the agreement. Cigarettes sold in United Kingdom duty free shops are however, intended for consumption outside this country.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Mellor: Expenditure in respect of Department of Health in 1988-89 is estimated as:

	£ million
Television advertising	1·724
Radio advertising	0·161
Newspaper advertising	1·176
Other promotional material	7·413

The budget for publicity in 1989-90 is £19·586 million. It is not yet possible to say how this sum will be divided between categories of publicity.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Freeman: No expenditure of TV advertising, radio advertising and newspaper advertising is planned by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1988-89 or 1989-90. The expenditure on other promotional material in 1988-89 is estimated to be £105,000. The corresponding budget figure for 1989-90 is £210,000. These figures include expenditure on or planned for the 1989 census test and 1991 census.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The number of staff presently employed in the press and publicity section of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is seven. There are no vacancies. The figure includes four staff who have been employed on a temporary basis to work on publicity activities for the 1989 census test and the 1991 census. An additional temporary post is to be added in 1989-90 to work on the 1989 census test and 1991 census.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in press and public relations offices in (a) the Health Education Authority and (b) the National Health Service generally; and what are the proposed complements for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: The Health Education Authority currently employs three people in its press office and has a vacancy for one public relations officer on the "Look After Your Heart" campaign. In 1989-90 one additional post is planned to deal with the new teenage smoking campaign.

The employment and numbers of press and information officers in the NHS is a matter for regional and district health authorities and not for the Department of Health. The hon. Member may care to write to the individual regional health authority chairmen.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: Functions commonly associated with press and public relations are carried out by the Department's information division.

The latest figures for the combined information divisions of the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security are:

	Number
Staff presently employed	77
Full complement of staff inlcuding vacant posts	80

Note: Thirty-eight of the above staff are information officers.

Discussions on the proposed complements for 1989-90 are not yet complete.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by (i) the Health Education Authority and (ii) the National Health Service as a whole on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what are the 1989-90 budgets for each of these categories of spending by (1) the Health Education Authority and (2) the National Health Service as a whole;

(2) what are the latest figures for (a) the estimated expenditure on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90 for both (i) the Health Education Authority and (ii) the National Health Service generally.

Mr. Mellor: A large proportion of the Health Education Authority's expenditure is related to advertising, and promotional work. Expenditure is as follows:

Health Education Authority

1988-89
TV advertising	2,000,000
Radio advertising	400,000
Newspaper advertising	4,450,000
Other promotions and material	1,548,000
1989-90
Advertising (media spit not yet determined)	7,850,000
Other promotions and material	741,000

For the National Health Service as a whole, this information is not collected separately.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have the information in the form requested. However the estimated expenditure for the combined Departments of Health and Social Security on press and public relations during 1988-89 is £1·344 million.

The budget for the Department of Health for 1989-90 has not yet been agreed.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The total estimated expenditure by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on press and public relations activities in 1988-89 is £190,000. The corresponding budget figure for 1989-90 is £340,000. These figures include the salaries of staff employed on these activities, including those working on the 1989 census test and plans for the 1991 census.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table. This covers all the staff employed in the statistical divisions of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys including the medical statistics and social survey divisions. It excludes staff employed in the finance personnel and administration division and staff employed in the information technology division. Staff complements as such are no longer used since expenditure is controlled by financial rather than manpower limits. The planned staff figures for 1 October 1989 are therefore less rigid and subject to change.

Blood Transfusion Service

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what developments have taken place in the organisation of the blood transfusion service in England and Wales following publication of the study by the National Health Service management consultancy services branch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We announced on 28 July 1988 that new arrangements would be made to manage the supra-regional and national dimension of the national blood transfusion service (NBTS). Operational responsibility at national level is now exercised on behalf of Health Ministers for England and Wales by the NHS management board and undertaken by its director of operations, in consultation in respect of Wales with the director, NHS Wales. Day-to-day implementation of the national strategy is delegated to the national director of the NBTS and a small supporting staff.

HEALTH

Stastistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions of (a) the Health Education Authority and (b) the National Health Service as a whole; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: In 1988-89 the Health Education Authority employed one statistician, in its public health division. There are also 20 professional posts and one administrative post in the division, and a current vacancy for a statistical assistant. The complement will remain the same for 1989-90.

The number of whole time equivalent staff in post in the statistics and information area of work within the administrative and clerical staff group in the NHS (England) at 30 September 1987 was 867 whole time equivalent staff. Of these only four could be separately identified as being statisticians.

We do not collect information on staff vacancies centrally. Staff complements for specific areas of work are a matter for local determination.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: Staff in post and vacancies in Department of Health statistical branches at 1 March 1989 are shown in the table:

	Staff in post		Vacancies
	Administrative	Statistical	Administrative	Statistical
Grade 3	—	0·66	—	—

Personal Secretary	6·0	—	—	—
Total	176·0	37·66	5

The staffing complement for 1989-90 is expected to be as shown but some adjustments may be made following the split of Department of Health and Social Security.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Mellor: No expenditure on fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation of health-related areas of work prior to 1986-87 has been identified. Expenditure in 1986-87 and each year to date, and the estimated expenditure in 1989-90, are as follows:

Year	£
1987-88	61,000
1988-89	202,000
1989-90	250,000

All expenditure up to and including 1988-89 has been from a joint Health and Social Security budget.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated expenditure from 1984-85 onwards on fees and expenses for management consultants on health matters is as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	0·613
1985-86	0·479
1986-87	2·103
1988-89	1·347

The figures are approximate since expenditure up to and including the 1988-89 financial year is from a joint Health and Social Security budget. In some cases expenditure has been apportioned where consultants have been engaged on both health and social security matters. The figures include social services consultancy and some computer consultancy where these cannot be separately identified.

The information for years prior to 1984-85 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health Service (Annual Returns)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for health (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of annual financial and statistical returns made by district and regional health authorities to his Department;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report, for each statistical and financial return, a list showing which regional and district health authorities did not return such information on time;

(3) which health authorities did not return their financial returns for 1987-88 by the published deadline.

Mr. Freeman: 1987-88 was the first year for the new Körner data sets for hospital activity, patient transport, manpower and finance; 1988-89 the first for the community and paramedical services. A list has been placed in the Library showing the statistical and financial returns required for 1987-88 ad 1988-89 including those which existed before the implementation of the Körner review recommendations.

Apart from the financial data which are currently submitted by each health authority, the general responsibility for submitting returns to the Department is on regional health authorities, who collate the returns from their districts; special health authorities submit their returns direct.

There are more than 50 annual returns required for each district to target dates given in the list. It is not practical to expect all these returns to arrive by the appropriate target date (some are at site level and there are nearly 2,500 sites for which returns are made) nor to list, for each, those authorities that missed it. A full analysis would incur disproportionate cost. It is estimated that 93 per cent. of all district-level aggregated returns about hospital patient activity and facilities, 70 per cent. of all manpower returns and some 90 per cent. of all finance returns had been received within three months of the target date. On returns at site level, performance varied between 50 and 80 per cent. completion within three months of the target.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will next publish an edition of the Health Service costing returns.

Mr. Freeman: We intend to publish an edition of "Health Service Costing Returns" for 1987-88 during the summer.

Capital Expenditure (North West)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of capital expenditure work by the North West regional health authority during 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: Capital expenditure work has progressed as expected during 1988-89. The regional health authority has recently approved its major schemes capital programme for 1989-90 and it is expected that approval for capital projects up to 1991-92 will be given later this year. This is in line with the region's policy of only issuing a firm capital programme on a rolling three-year basis.

Residential Care

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will identify the groups which have carried out studies of the costs of residential care and the full costs to public funds of private residential care of which his Department is aware.

Mr. Mellor: I am aware of the following studies of the costs of private and voluntary residential care:

Title and Organisation

Survey of Private and Voluntary Residential and Nuring Homes for the Department of Health and Social Security—Ernst and Whinney.

Residential Care Homes Reasonableness of Charges. Reasonableness of Nursing Home Charges—University of York Social Policy Research Unit.

National Survey of Independent Residential Care and Nursing Homes—University of Kent Personal Social Services Research Unit/University of York, Centre for Health Economics.

Evaluation of Very Sheltered Housing—Department of the Environment.

Copies of the Ernst and Whinney study and that into the reasonableness of charges in residential care homes are in the Library. The reports of the remaining three studies are awaited. As my reply of 6 March to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) at column 421 indicated, none of these studies enable us to draw general conclusions about the full costs to public funds of care in either sector and only limited comparisons have been possible.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are made for the care and well being of residents of private homes during change of ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is for registration authorities to see that adequate arrangements are made by those running a home for the continuing care of residents during a change of ownership. The code of practice for residential care, "Home Life", advises that proprietors notify the registration authority of any intended change of ownership. Advice to health authorities is that home owners be asked to make completion of sale conditional upon, and not effective until, the home is re-registered. This will avoid the nursing home having to cease operations until the new registration is granted.

Benefit Payments (Delay)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will adequately compensate the 8,809 claimants waiting for financial help with National Health Service costs for the delay in payment.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 7 March at column 491 regarding claims for refunds of charges paid while claims have been delayed at the agency benefits unit.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there is a risk to the consumer of cook-chill food when his Department's 1980 guidelines are not followed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 27 February at column 69.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cook-chill products examined recently by the public health laboratory service were found to contain salmonella.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The survey conducted recently by the public health laboratory service was to test for the presence of listeria monocytogenes and not for salmonella. However, out of 197 retail ready to eat cooked-chilled poultry and chilled and frozen retail ready-to-eat meals four were found to be positive for salmonella.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has conducted or commissioned into why so many cook-chill products contain listeria monocytogenes; and with what results.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has not carried out any research into why listeria monocytogenes is contained in some cook-chill products. We are working with the food industry to produce a code of practice designed to minimise the possibility of contamination of cook-chill products with listeria monocytogenes.

Waterborne Diseases

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total numbers of incidents and cases of waterborne disease in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 February 1989]: The figures are not available in precisely the form sought, but during the ten years 1977-86 there were 15 recorded outbreaks of waterborne disease in the United Kingdom comprising 5,955 cases and no deaths. Subsequent observations have indicated that this is likely to be an underestimate.

During the years 1987 and 1988 a further four outbreaks in England and Wales were reported to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre. Three of these were due to campylobacter; two outbreaks affecting over 36 people were associated with consumption of stream/spring water and in the other incident, when several people were taken ill at a youth hostel, organisms were found in the well water. The fourth outbreak, comprising at least 77 cases, was due to cryptosporidium and was associated with a swimming pool.

I am sending to the hon. Member an extract from a published paper which gives further details of outbreaks of waterborne disease in the United Kingdom from 1937.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Scrapie

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will break down the 16 cases of incidence of scrapie in goats in the last five years by year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scrapie is not a notifiable disease but from samples submitted to the Ministry's veterinary investigation centres disease was confirmed in goats as follows:

	Cases
1985	0
1986	1
1987	1
1988	10

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the future incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to predict the future course of the disease with any accuracy. However, having banned the use of feed, which is the most likely cause of the disease, and provided it does not pass from cattle to cattle, the incidence should start to decline after 1992.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further action he intends to take in the light of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 27 February at columns 89-91.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has commissioned research to test the infectivity of bovine spongiform encephalopathy on human cellular material.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No, but trials are under way using marmosets, which are primates.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to follow up recommendations contained in the report of the working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 27 February at columns 89-91.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any recent representations from food manufacturers on the issue of food hygiene.

Mr. Ryder: We have received a number of such representations and will be considering these with the Department of Health in the developing of our policies.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Ministry on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figures for estimated spend by my Department in 1988-89 are as follows:

(a) television advertising—nil;
(b) radio advertising—nil;
(c) newspaper advertising—£111,000 in the trade press only and £269,000 as MAFF's contribution to press advertising about salmonella in eggs;

(d) other promotional material—£992,000.

Detailed decisions on expenditure by media have not yet been taken but we expect the overall publicity spend for 1989-90 to be £1·3 million.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Ministry; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of staff and the complement in the press branch of information division and related posts in the regions is 29 and 31, respectively. The complement of staff is expected to be the same in 1989-90.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Ministry; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Grade	Staff in post 1 March 1989	Complement 1 March 1989
Grade 5	2·0	2·0
Grade 7	10·0	11·0
Senior Assistant
Statistician/Assistant	10·0	10·0
Statistician
Support staff	127·5	136·5

It is expected that the staffing complements for 1989-90 will be similar to current levels.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has not paid any sums to outside organisations for this purpose in the period 1979-80 to date. I keep continually under review the contribution that my Department might make to the Government's privatisation policy.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total fees paid out by my Department to management consultants, excluding computer consultants, for 1984-85 to 1987-88 and the estimated expenditure in 1988-89 are as follows:

1984-85	27,110
1985-86	174,724
1986-87	135,279
1987-88	44,015
[1]1988-89	164,846

[1] Estimate.

Information for earlier years is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Press and PR

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Ministry on press and public relations during 1988-89, and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest figure for the estimated expenditure by my Ministry on press and public relations during 1988-89 is £900,000. The latest estimate for the budget for 1989-90 is £1 million.

Festival of Food and Farming

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he is proposing to make to help ensure that the produce of 550 hectares of English vineyards and of English and Welsh agricultural land is exhibited at the festival of food and farming in Hyde park on 4-7 May;

(2) whether he will make a grant to the English Vineyards Association to cover the cost of the planning and organisation which the English Vineyards Association is incurring to enable vineyards to exhibit at the festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park from 4 to 7 May.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park from 4 to 7 May is being financed by sponsors in the industry, and by the many individual companies and organisations that have taken up exhibition space. It will be a fine opportunity for British producers to display the products of their enterprise to the general public. I am sure that it is right for such an event to rely on private initiative rather than on public subsidy for its success.

Bacteriological Testing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider setting up an accreditation scheme to control the quality of bacteriological testing of food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have a well-established national measurement accreditation service (NAMAS) for all types of testing and calibration laboratories, which is managed by the Department of Trade and Industry. My Ministry is represented on the NAMAS advisory committee. Accreditation is open to any laboratory carrying out objective testing, including bacteriological laboratories and NAMAS has produced a guidance document covering the specific interpretation of the accreditation criteria for laboratories carrying out bacteriological testing.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the general conclusions of the European Community inspector's current visits to abattoirs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy of the letter which will be sent to all operators of export approved plants summarising the main points of the 1989 inspection visit.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 533-4, how many of the abattoirs which received suspension warnings in each year since 1982 subsequently received suspensions in the same year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of plants which received warnings and subsequently were suspended within a year is as follows:

1982	1
1983	4
1984	—
1985	9
1986	6
1988	1

Suspension warnings specify a period within which the deficiencies must be rectified. Where changes to practices are required the period may be one or two weeks. For structural work up to six months may be permitted, depending on the work required and its urgency. Exceptionally, the Ministry may grant a further extension of the time for structural work if satisfied with the progress which is being made.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what inspection of animals is carried out in non-European Community approved abattoirs prior to slaughter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The feeding to ruminants of animal protein derived from ruminants has been prohibited. The prohibition will remain unless and until it is possible to identify processing methods which are capable of destroying the agent which causes bovine spongiform encephalopathy and which are widely available.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to prevent salmonella contamination in imported feedstuffs containing vegetable matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A very small proportion of compound animal feedingstuffs is imported. The majority of imports comprise raw materials including vegetable protein which are incorporated into feedingstuffs. Detailed codes of practice will be introduced shortly for the control of salmonella in feedingstuffs and their ingredients, including measures for monitoring.

Near Market Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the organisations he has consulted about near market research; and how many times each one has been consulted.

Mr. Ryder: The following organisations were sent a consultation document on agriculture and food listing the work identified as near market. Further meetings are due to take place in the near future.

My hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) has consulted the following organisations on fisheries research and development:

1 United Kingdom Association of Fishmeal Manufacturers
2 Worshipful Company of Fishmongers
3 Food and Drink Federation
4 National Federation of Fish Friers Ltd.
5 Scottish Fisherman's Federation
6 Shellfish Association of Great Britain
7 United Kingdom Association of Frozen Food Producers
8 Association of Fish Canners
9 Scottish Fish Merchants Association
10 Sea Fish Industry Authority
11 Herring Buyers Association

In addition, many of these organisations will have had meetings with my colleagues and me at which near market research and development will have been one of the issues discussed.

Pigs

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to prohibit the inclusion of animal products in feedstuffs for pigs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The use of animal products in feedstuffs is already subject to the strict statutory controls laid down in the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1983, the Diseases of Animals (Protein Processing) (Amendment) Order 1989.

Tropical Oils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to encourage food manufacturers to voluntarily remove tropical oils from their products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No sir. The real issue is not between tropical or temperate oils but between saturated and unsaturated fats. United Kingdom traders and consumers are aware of the medical advice in the COMA report on diet and cardiovascular disease that overall fat consumption, and particularly saturated fat consumption, should be reduced and our nutrition labelling guidelines provide for the indication of fat and saturated fat contents of food products.

Rivers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of funding allocated to field trials of the system of concrete deflectors for flow and flood control in meandering rivers currently being conducted on the River Roding and the River Wensum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Thompson: I am aware of the field trials carried out on the rivers Roding and Wensum which were undertaken by the University of East Anglia with funding from the Thames water authority and the Anglian water authority respectively. There has been no funding from this Department for these trials.

Sheepmeat Regime

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: The regime that we negotiated in 1980 has served the United Kingdom well. Expenditure on the regime is, however, increasing rapidly and measures to restrain costs are needed.

Official Secrets Act

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all his advisory committees where members are required to sign the Official Secrets Act declaration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no precise definition of my advisory committees, but in the following cases we ask members to sign the Official Secrets Act declaration in order to bring it to their attention;

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service Commercial Management Board (formerly Agricultural Development and Advisory Service and Regional Management Board).

Review of the Organisation of Horticulture Research Group Steering Group on Food Surveillance.

Sheep Remains

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has made any changes to the regulations covering the treating process of sheep remains which are included in animal feed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Inspection of animals prior to slaughter in non-EC approved abattoirs is not yet a requirement of legislation in England and Wales. In October 1987 the Government announced that it is to be made so. We have since agreed in the Council of Agriculture Ministers in Brussels that ante-mortem inspection should be introduced in non-exporting abattoirs from 1 January 1991.

Veterinarians

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinarians from (a) each of the European Community countries and (b) elsewhere overseas are currently practising in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 March 1989]: The numbers of veterinarians from overseas currently registered with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and believed to be practising in this country are:

Public-house Tenants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the current conditions of tenure of public-house tenants, and in particular about the desirability of making the current voluntary code of practice on this subject enforceable in the courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I met the National Licensed Victuallers Association on 20 February and took note of the association's views on this matter. It was agreed that there should be a further discussion after the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the supply of beer has been made public.

ENVIRONMENT

Unleaded Petrol

69. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he will take to promote unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Measures to promote unleaded petrol are co-ordinated by the unleaded petrol group, which I chair. The Government provide a range of information and publicity material. On Friday, I launched Tyne and Wear lead-free petrol week, one of a series of national and local weeks which we support. Other initiatives are being pursued. Motability has responded to our request for help in encouraging the wider use of unleaded petrol: its campaign has the full support of Government.

Water Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pollution control officers with responsibility for water pollution under COPA are currently employed; and how many posts are vacant.

Mr. Howard: The information is not available in the form requested. At present, the 10 regional water authorities in England and Wales are responsible for the control of pollution from industrial, agricultural and domestic sources. When these functions transfer to the National Rivers Authority, approximately 450 staff working directly on these functions will transfer to the NRA, along with some 210 support staff. This excludes laboratory staff and others who also deal with other functions, and also excludes staff who will continue to work on pollution control and related functions for the PLCs.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution employs 11 inspectors on water pollution control activities mainly in connection with consents issued on behalf of the Secretary of State for water authorities' own discharges. There are no vacancies.

Lowermoor Treatment Works

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any claim for damages has been received from any reputable source in relation to the production by a farm animal of deformed offspring in the Lowermoor treatment works distribution area as a result of the contamination incident in July 1988.

Mr. Howard: I understand that the South West water authority has received no such claims.

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent his Department's water inspectorate remains in contact with the South West water authority in conjunction with the supply of water from the Lowermoor treatment works; and if it continues to monitor the authority's performance in supplying water in the Lowermoor distribution area.

Mr. Howard: The Department maintains regular contact with the South West water authority and receives a weekly summary of results of sampling in the distribution system served by the Lowermoor treatment works.

Tree Planting

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding for tree planting has been given following the hurricane of 15 and 16 October 1987; to which bodies it has been given; how many trees have been planted; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the period to 1991-92, we are providing some £13 million for replacement planting of amenity trees following the storm. Most grants are being allocated through Task Force Trees, a special unit of the Countryside Commission; others are administered by English Heritage. The bulk of aid from Task Force Trees has been given to local authorities, either in respect of their own trees or to assist planting by landowners; Task Force Trees have also assisted conservation bodies. In the last planting season Task Force Trees estimated that some 500,000 trees were planted with their help, and surgery had been carried out on 30,000 trees. There is assistance from English Heritage for the restoration of parks and gardens of outstanding architectural or historic interest; grants for parks and gardens of special historic interest are available from Task Force Trees. Other programmes of aid for replacing trees destroyed in the storm are administered by the Forestry Commission and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Robert Banks To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his Department's priorities for protecting the environment.

Mr. Ridley: We will be following up this month's highly successful conference by continuing to take a lead internationally on the protection of the ozone layer. We will continue investing in research into the greenhouse effect. We will take forward our plans for establishing an integrated system of control over industrial pollution and reforming waste disposal legislation. We will further the implementation of the package of measures to protect the United Kingdom's marine environment agreed at the second North sea conference. We will continue to take steps to clean up power station and vehicle emissions and to promote the use of lead-free petrol. We will continue to support a high level of investment in sewage treatment and disposal in order to improve the quality of our rivers and beaches.

Bathing Waters

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department's recent announcement that in 1988, 254 out of the 380 designated British bathing waters met European Economic Community standards used the same basis of evaluation as his written answer on 5 May 1988 that 262 out of 374 bathing waters met European Economic Community standards.

Mr. Moynihan: No. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Water and Planning explained in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) at column 572, the 1988 results reported on 21 February were assessed on a more stringent basis.

Drinking Water

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the drinking water supply in his Department's head office building meets the European Economic Community standard.

Mr. Chope: The Marsham street building is supplied with water by Thames Water, and since no drinking water is stored on the premises, the PSA does not take samples for analysis unless there is reason to suspect the quality of the water.

I am advised by Thames Water that in 1988, the last year for which complete records are available, the supply generally complied with the European Community directive.

Press and Public Relations and Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90;

(2) what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff, including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90;

(3) what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Ridley: Estimated outturn for paid publicity and associated staff costs for my Department, including PSA, is £6·4 million for 1988-89. The budget for 1989-90 will be some £7·5 million. Expenditure is not broken down between different publicity media. The current complement for my Department's press office is 56·5, including three vacancies. The complement for 1989-90 has not yet been finalised.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each charging authority in England (a) the financial provision made for the administration of community charge registrations and collection preparations in 1989-90, and (b) the Government allocation aid grant for the same period.

Mr. Gummer: I have today laid in the Library a table setting out the resources the Government have made available to charging authorities towards their costs in preparing for the community charge. In addition, a further £55 million of expenditure will be supported through RSG in 1989-90.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are to be issued to community charge registration officers with regard to the exemption of hospital patients from payment of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: Preliminary advice was included in a practice note No. 2, "The Community Charge: Exemptions from the Personal Community Charge", published in June last year. More detailed advice will be included in a further practice note on exemptions, a draft of which is under discussion with the local authority associations.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all written representations he has received in response to the draft community charge regulations.

Mr. Gummer: No, since we do not have the permission of those making the representations to do so.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances a community charge registration officer may refuse exemption to a severely mentally impaired person who has been issued with the relevant certificate by a medical practitioner.

Mr. Gummer: I would not expect a community charge registration officer to question the clinical judgment of a medical practitioner that an individual is severely mentally impaired.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are to be issued to community charge registration officers with regard to how they establish relevant factors, such as where each member of the household works, in establishing sole or main residence for the purposes of community charge registration.

Mr. Gummer: Community charge practice note No. 9, published in November last year, contains guidance for registration officers on establishing a person's sole or main residence. Copies of all community charge practice notes are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: The numbers and grades of staff and complement of the statistical divisions[1] of DOE(C) at 1 March 1989 are as follows:

	Staff in post as at 1 March 1989	Present complement
Chief Statistician	5	5

[1] The statistical divisions in DOE(C) comprise Housing Data Statistics, Construction Industry Statistics, Local Authority Statistics, Land and General Statistics, and Environmental Protection Statistics.

There are also statisticians employed throughout the Department in posts of a largely administrative nature; these number 13 at 1 March 1989.

Complements for 1989-90 have not yet been finalised.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: Following is the information for DOE(C):

Year	£ million
1986-87	1·1
1988-89	[1]5·0

[1] Provisional O/T.

No expenditure was incurred on privatisation advisers prior to 1986-87. Cost incurred in 1989-90 will be announced in due course in the usual way. For PSA, expenditure in 1988-89 is £50,000.

Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Ridley: Information relating to the financial year between 1979-80 and 1984-85 inclusive is not readily available and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. Following is the information relating to the remaining financial years for my Department including PSA:

Year	£ million
1987-88	5·3

Waveney (Pipeline Scheme)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce approval for the Waveney district council pipeline in-out scheme at Holton, Halesworth, Suffolk, Ref: FLAZ/10/32/T3535.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The council was informed on 10 March that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not propose to issue an additional capital allocation for this scheme. It will, however, be open to the council to carry it out as part of its normal capital programme if it considers it to be of sufficient priority.

Low-cost Rural Housing

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of his answer to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) of 3 February, Official Report, columns 433, on the role of the planning system in releasing land for low-cost housing in rural areas, he will incorporate his answer into "Planning Policy, Guidance" of 7 January 1988, paragraph 16, in order to allow local authorities to establish permanent low-cost rural housing.

Mr. Chope: We shall be incorporating my right hon. Friend's announcement into revised versions of PPG3 (land for housing) and PPG7 (rural enterprise and development) later this year. However, local planning authorities in rural areas are already entitled to treat local needs for low-cost housing as a material consideration in appropriate cases, on the strength of the recent announcement.

Montreal Protocol (Ozone Layer)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the countries which have so far ratified the Montreal protocol of 1987 on the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The following had become Parties to the protocol before the London "Saving the Ozone Layer" conference held on 5-7 March:

Belgium

At the conference some 20 further countries said that they would become parties and another 14 said that they would seriously consider doing so.

Festival of Food and Farming

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that at the festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park on 4-7 May English food and the produce of English farming are both on display and available for purchase;

(2) when his Department was advised of the forthcoming festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park on 4 to 7 May;

(3) in view of the cost of producing English wine, whether he will ensure that charging is permitted for samples of English wine at the festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park from 4 to 7 May;

(4) what steps he is taking to ensure that at the festival of food and farming to be held in Hyde park on 4 to 7 May English wine will be both on display and available for purchase.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department was first approached about this event in March 1986. Approval for it to be held in Hyde park was given on 6 May 1988. Exhibitors may display and sell a range of agricultural goods, including food. Exhibitors may display English wine and take orders for later delivery or collection. They may also give away small free samples. I have accepted the advice of the Metropolitan police that alcohol should not be on direct sale to the public on site.

Leeds UDC

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has issued any guidelines to the urban development corporation in Leeds as to the length of time it should take to process planning applications; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will provide information as to the total number of planning applications received by the Leeds urban development corporation; and how many of those have been determined within (a) four weeks, (b) six weeks and (c) eight weeks;

(3) whether he has given any guidance to the Leeds urban development corporation in relation to consultation on planning applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: UDCs are required to operate within the same statutory framework as any local planning authority when considering planning applications. This includes requirements to undertake consultations in accordance with article 18 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. All the relevant guidance has been provided to the corporations.

All local planning authorities, including UDCs, are expected to provide quarterly returns giving details of the number of planning applications received and the number determined within the statutory eight-week period. These statistics are published by the Department. Figures for the final quarter of 1988 will include the first return from LDC. By 31 December 1988, LDC had received 51 applications, 14 had been determined and of these 12 (86 per cent.) were determined within eight weeks. This is substantially better than the national average.

Working Groups and Working Parties

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library papers produced for recent meetings of the (a) new systems working group, (b) rates working party, (c) community charge working group, (d) community charge implementation sub-group and (e) capital programmes working party; and if he will undertake to do so for future meetings of these working groups and working parties.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Severn-Trent Water Authority (SSIs)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites and acreage of special scientific interest in the ownership of the Severn-Trent water authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is currently being assembled by the Nature Conservancy Council. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Capper Pass Works, North Humberside

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has yet received Her Majesty's inspector of pollution's report on the subject of the emission of radiation from the Capper Pass works in north Humberside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The report on emissions from the Capper Pass works completed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has been received by the Secretary of State and will shortly be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Water Authorities (Capital Debt)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to write off part or all of the capital debt of any of the English water authorities.

Mr. Howard: The Water Bill contains powers which will enable National Loans Fund and Public Works Loans

Board debt, inherited by the new companies from the water authorities, to be replaced by a combination of equity and debentures. These powers will be used to put in place capital structures appropriate for the new companies.

Water Industry, Derbyshire

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much capital investment was made in Derbyshire's water industry in 1979; and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: Information in the form requested by my hon. Friend is not available.

Assured Tenancies

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances it is intended that the new assured tenancy replaces retrospectively a statutory tenancy under the Landlord and Tenancy Act 1954 (PL1) or the Rent Act 1968.

Mr. Trippier: Under part 1 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 most long leaseholders of residential property at a low rent can convert to a statutory tenancy under the Rent Act 1977 when the lease comes to an end. Clause 137 of and schedule 9 to the Local Government and Housing Bill would replace this right with a right to convert to an assured tenancy under the Housing Act 1988. These new provisions would apply to such leases entered into after clause 137 comes into force, and also to such leases which come to an end on or after 15 January 1999. The provisions would have no retrospective effect on statutory tenancies which arise before they come into force.

House Prices

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each county, metropolitan district and London borough area estimates of average prices for (i) all houses, (ii) flats, (iii) terraced houses, (iv) semi-detached and (v) detached houses.

Mr. Trippier: I have today arranged for a table giving figures for building society mortgages for 1988 to be laid in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the longevity of the HIV AIDS virus in untreated sewage sea outfalls.

Mr. Howard: I am advised that there is no evidence to suggest that the HIV AIDS virus survives in the sea.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insider Dealing

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in chronological order all the cases of suspected insider dealing which have been, or are being, investigated by his Department, the date the investigation started, the sum involved in each case, the date of the suspected offence, the action taken on conclusion of the case, and the penalty imposed, if any.

Mr. Maude: In the interests of efficiency and justice, the fact that an insider dealing investigation is being considered or has been started, the details of the possible offence or possible offender, and the progress of the investigation and its outcome, are not normally announced or confirmed. However an announcement of an investigation may be made if it is considered to be in the public interest to do so, and the fact of a prosecution becomes known when the matter first comes before the court. It has been possible to appoint inspectors to carry out investigations into possible insider dealing offences since November 1986 (though not all investigations of insider dealing have involved inquiries by inspectors). Since then, 28 such appointments have been made. The following investigations have been announced:

Possible insider dealing offences related to:	Date of appointment of inspectors
(a) Certain actions by Mr. Geoffrey Collier	15 November 1986

Prosecutions have been instituted in relation to cases (a), (b) and (c), and it has been decided to take no further action on case (f).

Information about completed prosecutions for insider dealing offences, and about cases where criminal proceedings in respect of such offences have begun but are not completed, is as follows:

Information Technology

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to reply to the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report on information technology.

Mr. Forth: The Government's response to the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report on information technology was published on 9 March.

UK-EC Development

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the major joint industrial projects now being developed between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Atkins: We keep no central record of such projects. However, the indications are that there is increasing collaboration between United Kingdom companies and those in other member states as evinced by such projects as the Channel tunnel and the Airbus and the by the United Kingdom participating in the EC R and D framework programme.

Hearing Aid Council

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what review he has made of the effectiveness of the Hearing Aid Council.

Mr. Forth: I am content that the Hearing Aid Council fully discharges its responsibilities set out in the Hearing Aid Council Act 1968.

The Bill promoted by the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) would make changes to the Act. The Government will seek to ensure that the best possible Bill for all concerned emerges.

I am also considering with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health the suggestions made by the RNID in its "Fair Hearing Campaign" document.

Oil Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been for each year since 1981, the total contribution of oil exports, in 1989 terms, to the balance of trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is as follows. Figures are expressed in 1988 prices as 1989 prices are not yet available.

£ billion constant 1988 prices

	Visible trade balance	Exports of oil

New Businesses

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate for each of the past 10 years of the number of new businesses established in (a) Suffolk, (b) Norfolk and (c) Waveney.

Mr. Forth: The table gives the numbers of new businesses registering for VAT. Reliable estimates are not available prior to 1980 or for 1988.

Over the period of total numbers of businesses registered for VAT increased by 21 per cent. for Suffolk, 15 per cent. for Norfolk and 19 per cent. for Waveney.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Department of Trade and Industry on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure under the Department's paid publicity budget is expected to total some £29 million in 1988-89. Of this, some £13·5 million will have been spent on television advertising, about £4·3 million press advertising, £75,000 on radio advertising, and the balance on other publicity activities. Expenditure in 1989-90 is expected to be some £25 million; detailed allocations by media have not yet been made.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Department of Trade and Industry; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: The manpower allocations for 1989-90 will be set by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State later this month in the light of the Department's annual activity and resource management review. The number of staff currently employed in the Department's press office is 37 (including 16 on clerical and other support duties). The current manpower allocation is 41.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Department of Trade and Industry; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: The manpower allocations for 1989-90 will be set by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State later this month in the light of the Department's annual activity and resource management review. Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: The following table, based on information already published, shows gross expenditure incurred by the Department of Trade and Industry in connection with the sale of shares in British Aerospace, British Steel, British Telecom, Rolls Royce, and Rover Group plc since 1979-80, together with an estimate for expenditure in 1989-90. The figures exclude subscriptions for new shares and injections of funds for capital restructuring but include commission and some relatively minor items (including stamp duty) which were not paid as fees to outside organisations. The Department also incurred expenses in 1986-87 under a single contract in connection with the sale of certain British Shipbuilders' yards, but these are excluded on the ground of commercial confidentiality:

Company	Year	Amount £ thousands
British Aerospace	1980-81	4,635

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the total fees paid out by the Department of Trade and Industry to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Forth: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the fees paid by the Department of Trade and Industry for general consultancies from 1984-85 to the current financial year are given in the table. In addition to management consultancies the figures also include procurement of other specialised services by the Department to improve its efficiency. The apparent decrease from 1986-87 indicates a shift of consultancy expenditure from general to programme-related consultancies for which separate consolidated records are not kept.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the total fees paid out by the Duchy of Lancaster to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Newton: Fees paid out by the Duchy of Lancaster to management consultants in 1979-80 and subsequent years were as follows:

1979-80	34,097
1985-86	10,524
1986-87	28,629

The forecast payment for 1988-89 is £4,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: Estimated expenditure on press and public relations in 1988-89 is £1,426,000. The detailed budget for 1989-90 has not yet been agreed but is expected to be broadly the same in real terms.

Care Homes (UK) plc and Anglo Dutch Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what action he proposes to take in respect of the failure of Care Homes (UK) plc and against the original directors of the company;

(2) what information he has given the professional bodies of which the shareholder trustee accountants, auditors, lawyers and certain directors of Care Homes (UK) plc and Anglo Dutch Limited are members about the circumstances concerning the collapse of those two companies; and whether he has requested those professional bodies to take any action;

(3) if he will examine a copy of the prospectus of Care Homes (UK) plc, dated 6 March 1986;

(4) if his Department is aware of any misleading or untrue statement made in the prospectus issued by Care Homes (UK) plc;

(5) whether he proposes to take any action with regard to the prospectus issued by Care Homes (UK) plc, on 6 March 1986.

Mr. Maude: I am aware of the proposal to place Care Homes (UK) plc in liquidation. It is not my right hon. Friend's practice to comment on the affairs of individual companies.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what basis his Department decided to grant a licence to Anglo Dutch Ltd in 1983; and whether his Department received the information required to renew the licence in subsequent years.

Mr. Maude: A principal's licence issued under section 3 of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 was granted to Anglo Dutch Limited (then known as Hay Hill Securities Limited) in 1983 following the submission by the company of the information required at that time from applicants for such licences and the carrying out of the checks then made to establish whether the applicant was a fit and proper person to hold a licence. Further applications were submitted in 1984 and 1985. In both cases these were submitted late, but the relevant forms and supporting documents were properly completed and licences were issued on both occasions. The company's licence lapsed in September 1986.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action his Department is to take in respect of the failure of the licensed dealer in securities, Anglo Dutch Ltd.

Mr. Maude: Anglo Dutch Limited was wound up by the High Court of Justice on 8 December 1986. Accordingly, the Official Receiver has a statutory duty to investigate its affairs and his inquiries are nearing completion.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the country in which the shareholders of Anglo Dutch Ltd resided; and who were the ultimate beneficial shareholders in the company during the period of the licence to deal in securities.

Mr. Maude: Anglo Dutch Limited is a subsidiary of Anglo Dutch Holdings Limited which is also in liquidation in this country. The shareholders of the holding company appear to be resident in the Channel Islands, although information as to the identities of the ultimate beneficial shareholders is not available.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the directors of Care Homes (UK) plc, at the time the prospectus was issued, are still engaged in business activities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: This information is not available.

Companies (Investigations)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to improve the speed, efficiency and effectiveness of investigations into companies where there are allegations of wrongdoing.

Mr. Maude: The present Companies Bill contains proposals to amend and strengthen the investigation powers contained in the Companies Act and related legislation. The subjet is kept under constant review within my Department.

Scientific Collaboration (Japan)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the results of talks between his Department and the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry on scientific collaboration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department and Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry regularly exchange information on science and technology matters. The most recent opportunity for such exchanges was the latest round of annual DTI/MITI talks held in Tokyo on 28 February and 1 March 1989. Both sides reviewed the growing number of opportunities for exchange of scientists and engineers between the United Kingdom and Japan and reaffirmed the value they attach to such exchanges. The opportunity was also taken to hold an exchange of views between experts in the fields of biotechnology, ocean technology, superconductivity and software engineering.

JESSI

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to support the joint European submicron silicon intitiative following the project's adoption by the Eureka programme of applied science; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A definition phase for JESSI (the joint European submicron silicon initiative) has been carried out in the EUREKA initiative. United Kingdom companies have been associated with this work and are considering their further involvement. JESSI needs clarification by its proposers before any decision can be made on the provision of suport from public funds.

Turkey (Association Agreement)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent discussions have taken place between his Department and the European Economic Community Committee to discuss breaches of the association agreement with Turkey; what progress has been made in reducing Turkish breaches of the agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 9 March 1989]: A group of experts drawn from the Commission and Turkey has met twice since last November to discuss problems impeding the achievement of free trade as laid down in the EC-Turkey Association agreement. The Department of Trade and Industry submitted a note of the United Kingdom's concerns about import taxation and state aids to the Commission in preparation for these meetings and we shall continue to give full support to the work of this group.

TRANSPORT

North-West Region

7. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on recent plans to invest in the rail network in and to the north west region in order to maximise the benefits to this region.

Mr. Portillo: BR is spending a total of nearly £50 million on new locomotives and driving van trailers on the west coast main line, and another £35 million on the Windsor link and the resignalling and remodelling of Piccadilly station in Manchester. The area is also benefiting from BR's substantial rolling stock investment.

Fast Trains (Continental Travel)

13. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department is (a) carrying out and (b) sponsoring on potential demand for fast trains for passengers and freight to the continent after 1992.

Mr. Portillo: Forecasts of potential demand have been produced for BR, SNCF and Eurotunnel. BR is taking account of them in preparing the plan required by the Channel Tunnel Act, setting out its proposals for Channel tunnel rail services.

Channel Tunnel

15. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received (a) in support of and (b) in opposition to the proposed high-speed Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a large number of letters, mainly from people who were opposed to British Rail's original proposals. BR has announced a revised route proposal which takes account of the comments received.

17. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information on the proposed level of investment in the north-west region by British Rail intended to maximise the benefits to that region of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is still working on its proposals for Channel tunnel passenger and freight services and any associated investment. It is required by the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 to publish a plan by the end of this year.

22. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the north-west regional managers of British Rail to discuss the implications of the Channel tunnel for the north-west.

Mr. Portillo: I meet regional managers from time to time on regional visits. I look forward to the plans for freight and passenger services from the north-west to the Channel tunnel which British Rail is obliged to publish by the end of the year.

23. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent his Department has been consulted to date by British Rail in reaching their decision as to the route of the proposed Channel tunnel high-speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail has kept us in touch with the progress of its work on the rail link proposal.

24. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what discussion he is having with those London borough councils whose areas would be affected by the high-speed train services connected to the Channel tunnel development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail consulted all those boroughs which would have been affected by its original proposals. It will now enter detailed consultations with those affected by the revised proposal even though its impact would be much less.

27. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a research programme into the investment needed by British Rail and other transport operators if the port of Liverpool and the north-west region are to take full advantage of the Channel tunnel.

29. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will undertake an urgent research programme into the needs of the north-west region with respect to the Channel tunnel.

42. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that (a) the port of Liverpool and (b) the north-west region are able to take advantage of the Channel tunnel.

34. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further assessment he has made of the transportation advantages of the development of the port of Liverpool to coincide with the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: A partnership of public and private sector interests in the north-west, led by chambers of commerce there, is already carrying out a study into the region's requirements arising from the single European market and the Channel tunnel. Government Departments will assist with information and advice as necessary.

The plan that British Rail is required to prepare under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 on international passenger and freight "Services" will cover all regions.

The impact of the Channel tunnel is one of the many factors taken into account in planning the national trunk road programme. There is already a number of schemes in the programme that will improve north-south links. A review of the trunk road programme is in progress, and we expect to make an announcement in the spring.

31. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the regional impact of the Channel tunnel.

36. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the regional impact of the Channel tunnel.

56. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the effects of the Channel tunnel on the north-west.

Mr. Portillo: There have been some representations from right hon. and hon. Members, local authorities and other organisations, mainly about improvements to road and rail links between the regions and the Channel tunnel.

On rail, these points are best made to the British Rail working groups which have been set up in each region as part of its planning services.

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals to improve existing railway lines from Kent, around London, and through the north-west of England, to Glasgow, to create a high-speed rail link from the Channel tunnel to Scotland.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's proposal for a new rail link between the Channel tunnel and London will make possible improved links from the tunnel to the north of England and Scotland. BR will be setting out its proposals for Channel tunnel rail services to the north of London in the plan which it will publish later this year, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

40. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek a meeting with the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment plans for the north-west in the years prior to the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I will want first to see the plan that BR is due to publish later this year, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

41. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on plans to protect the environment along the Channel tunnel high-speed rail link route.

Mr. Portillo: The revised proposal which British Rail has now announced includes a number of very significant changes designed to protect the environment.

45. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with British Rail about the Channel tunnel and related investment in the north-west.

Mr. Portillo: The importance of direct freight links from the regions to the Channel tunnel is raised in our discussions from time to time. British Rail is still working on the plan which it will present to Ministers later this year, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

48. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of investment is currently planned to be spent by British Rail in the north-west region to coincide with the opening of the Channel tunnel.

50. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British Rail's investment plans will maximise the benefits to the north-west region of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is still working on the plan which it will be publishing later this year, in compliance with section 40 or the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

53. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussion he has had with his French counterpart regarding transport links to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet French transport ministers and discuss transport links to the Channel tunnel when necessary.

54. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for the environment of the proposed rail link for the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The revised proposal which British Rail has now announced includes a number of very significant changes designed to protect the environment.

P and O

18. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times he has met representatives of P and O since 1979; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Channon: I meet representatives of P and O and other shipping companies from time to time.

British Rail

12. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

25. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Channon: I shall be meeting the chairman of British Rail on Thursday, to discuss a variety of railway matters.

19. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Channon: I shall be meeting the chairman of British Rail this Thursday, 16 March, to discuss a variety of railway matters.

Highway Maintenance

20. Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet the Association of District Councils to discuss highway maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Association of District Councils last week. Highway maintenance was among the issues they discussed.

Light Rail Proposals

21. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what light rail proposals he has received in the last 18 months.

Mr. Channon: Promoters of light rail schemes for Manchester, Avon, South Yorkshire, west midlands, Leeds and an extension of the Tyne and Wear metro have had discussions with us. Light rail schemes are also being considered in the east London rail study, as well as for Croydon, Nottingham and Southampton.

Bus Industry

26. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the bus industry to be fully privatised.

Mr. Portillo: Once the Scottish Bus Group subsidiaries have been privatised, only London Buses Limited and the local authority-owned bus companies will remain in public ownership. Four of the latter have already been sold and I hope that others will follow shortly.

Airline Punctuality

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the timing of the publication of a league table of airline punctuality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such a meeting would not be helpful at present. The authority will be collecting information on airline punctuality from 1 April, but has yet to devise the form of publication of punctuality statistics, or to decide the timetable for publication. The Department is being kept informed as the proposal is developed.

British Rail (Privatisation)

30. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on his plans with regard to the eventual privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: Privatisation is being considered. It will be some time before we are ready to reach any conclusions.

London Underground (Policing)

33. Mr. Hary Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many police are stationed on Underground trains and stations at any one time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of police officers on Underground trains and stations varies according to the time of day, but at 6 o'clock in the evening, on an average day, there would be about 80 British Transport police officers and 45 officers of the Metropolitan and City police forces on duty on the Underground.

British Rail (Investment)

35. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent investment he has recently approved for British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: Since 1 January my right hon. Friend has approved investment for 138 class 158 Sprinter express DMU vehicles for the provincial sector, 77 class 165 networker DMU vehicles and the electrification of the Cambridge-King's Lynn line, at a total cost of some £113 million.

M40

37. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the completion of the M40.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer to my answer earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry).

Motorways (Business Traffic)

38. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the estimated increase in the flow of business traffic on Britain's motorways over the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no direct estimates of the amount of business traffic on roads in Britain. The flow of traffic by vehicle type can be a guide to business use, and the data are summarised in the following table.

Percentage increase from 1983 to 1988 in the annual average daily flow per kilometre of motorway in Great Britain by type of vehicle

Type of vehicle	Percentage
Heavy goods vehicles	44
Light goods vehicles	88
Buses and coaches	30

For all cars and taxis growth has been 55 per cent. A proportion of this traffic will be for business purposes, but such traffic cannot be separately identified in the traffic census.

During this period, the length of motorways open to traffic has risen by 9·5 per cent. This means that the total number of kilometres travelled on motorways has risen more quickly than the flow per kilometre. The details of total traffic are:

Percentage increase from 1983 to 1988 in kilometres travelled on motorways in Great Britain by type of vehicle

Type of vehicle	Percentage
Heavy goods vehicle	58
Light goods vehicle	106
Buses and coaches	42

Notes:
For cars and taxis as a whole the growth has been 70 per cent.
1. Light goods vehicles covers goods vehicles up to 30 cwt unladen weight.
2. Heavy goods vehicles are goods vehicles with an unladen weight greater than 30 cwt.
3. Buses and coaches covers vehicles with nine or more seats.

Drawbar Trailers

39. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to increase the weight restrictions for drawbar trailers from the present 32·520 tonnes gross to 38 tonnes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to increase drawbar weights to 38 tonnes.

In discussing these vehicle weights in Brussels we would expect to argue to have a drawbar limit in the United Kingdom at no higher than 35 tonnes, together with a derogation for the 10·5 tonne axle loading.

Railway Stations

43. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway stations have been opened in the last 10 years.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 132 stations have been opened or re-opened since the beginning of 1979.

Airport Services

44. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received in 1989 from airlines and passengers, respectively, on the services provided at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received one such representation about the portering service at Heathrow. He has also received many letters about aviation security, some of which contain representations about services provided at various United Kingdom airports. The number relating to Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted could not be established without disproportionate cost.

London Underground (Automatic Ticket Barriers)

46. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the new automatic barriers on the London Underground system.

Mr. Portillo: In addition to two early-day motions, about 30 representations have been received from Members of Parliament and members of the public since 1 January.

Kent County Council

47. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of Kent county council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Channon: I have had no recent requests to receive a delegation but we are frequently in touch with county council representatives about a wide range of transport matters.

Burscough-Rufford Bypasss

49. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his intentions for the Burscough-Rufford bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Proposals for a bypas of Burscough and Rufford have not been abandoned, although the orders considered at the 1986 public inquiry will be withdrawn shortly. Further consideration is being given to the trunk road network in the Preston to Liverpool corridor.

I have written to my hon. Friend.

Taxi Trade

51. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to discover the needs of the taxi trade and its passengers.

Mr. Portillo: I have recently asked the Department's transport and road research laboratory to conduct a survey of taxi journeys in London to provide information on the current demand for and pattern of taxi journeys. The main survey will be in May with a pilot run on 21 March. TRRL has in the past reported on taxis in provincial towns and I am arranging for this work to be updated. We also recently conducted a consultation exercise to seek the views of all interested parties on possible changes to taxi and private hire vehicle legislation.

West Sussex (TSG)

52. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of transport supplementary grant paid to West Sussex county council in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant of £1·526 million will be paid to West Sussex county council in support of capital expenditure on roads of more than local importance in 1989-90.

This sum includes support of over £1·3 million for major schemes, including the newly accepted A259 Rustington bypass, and over £200,000 for minor works.

Grant is less than for 1988-89 because four major schemes are expected to have opened to traffic by the end of March and so expenditure on them in 1989-90 will be small.

Central London Rail Study

55. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to announce a decision on the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: We hope to announce decisions later this year once the views of the interested parties and the results of the further work currently in hand have been considered.

Airport Security

57. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in the light of the recent international conference on aviation security in Montreal, what action he intends to take to improve security at British airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attended the ministerial meeting of the ICAO council on 15-16 February. We explained to my hon. Friend for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 21 February at column 556 that the purpose of that meeting was to agree work which member states will take forward through ICAO rather than individually.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of reported (a) violent crimes and (b) other crimes on (i) London Underground, (ii) British Rail and (iii) all public transport in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground and British Rail figures for 1979 and 1987 are as follows; comparable figures for 1988 are not yet available. Information on crimes on other forms of public transport is not held centrally.

	1979	1987
London Underground
(i) violence against the person	646	1,045
(ii) other crimes	15,645	18,952
British Rail[1]
(i) violence against the person	1,365	1,908
(ii) other crimes	58,354	64,375

[1] includes Sealink services.

Select Committees (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been three inquiries completed by the Select Committee on Transport since June 1987:

(i) The decline in the United Kingdom-registered Merchant Fleet;
(ii) The Government's Expenditure Plans for Transport 1988-89 to 1990-91;
(iii) Airline Competition: Computer Reservation Systems.

The Government's responses to these reports have been published by the Committee as HC681, HC128, and HC61 respectively.

Consultations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department consults extensively on all aspects of its work and decision-making. It issues many consultative documents ranging from specific surveys of customer attitudes to Green Papers. It fully complies with all statutory obligations to hold public inquiries and goes beyond these obligations in consulting the public at an early stage on road scheme proposals. Few consumers fail to offer their experience, views, advice and comments.

Computer Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the potential security risks of the computerised driving licence systems; and what steps he intends to take to guard against these risks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are bound to be potential security risks in any system. We would prefer not to publicise them or our counter-measures. We are satisfied that the regular scrutiny of the DVLC driving licence system both by the Department and by Government experts in computer security, coupled with firm management controls and staff training, represent a good level of security.

If my hon. Friend has any particular potential security risk in mind, perhaps she would tell me or write to Mr. P. G. Collis, Head of driver licensing division, Room 27, D9, Department of Transport, Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, Longview road, Swansea SA6 7JL.

Roads (Hampshire)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all road schemes in Hampshire which he is financing directly and those which he is helping the Hampshire county council to finance for each of the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following trunk road schemes to be financed by the Department are in preparation.

M3	Bar End-Compton
M3	Compton-Bassett
A339	Basingstoke Northern bypass stage 3 dualling
A3	Liphook and Petersfield bypasses
A36	West Wellow bypass
A339	Headley bypass
A31	Picket Post junction improvement
A31	Stoney Cross junction improvement
A36	Maureys lane, West Wellow junction improvement
A339	Black Dam roundabout, Basingstoke improvement

19 minor improvements
8 schemes to install central reserve safety fencing.

Information cannot be provided on an annual basis as timing of construction depends generally on progress of design and statutory procedures.

Transport supplementary grant is available for the following Hampshire county council schemes:

A3	Market way, Portsmouth
A33	Six Dials, Southampton
A326	West Totton bypass (Stage 2)
A331	Blackwater valley route
A335	Portswood/Swaythling bypass
B3340	Hook bypass underbridge

Minor schemes to the value of £511,000.

No decisions have yet been made about transport supplementary grant for county council schemes starting in 1990-91 and subsequent years.

Merchant Shipping

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking in the Council of Ministers to ensure that there is a level playing field within the European Community in respect of merchant shipping, and that other member Governments abandon their fiscal preferences to their own ships.

Mr. Portillo: We press at every opportunity for the liberalisation of shipping cabotage. Substantive discussions are scheduled for the June Transport Council. We are still waiting for the Commission to produce proposals on the harmonisation of state aids and ways of improving the competitiveness of Community fleets. In the meantime we have registered with the Commission our strong opposition to any preferential treatment for intra-Community shipping.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current size of the United Kingdom-owned trading fleet; how it is distributed between mainland United Kingdom registration, Crown dependencies, dependent territories and foreign registration; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The following table gives the information requested for vessels of 500 gross registered tons and over at 31 December 1988.

United Kingdom-owned trading vessels (500 grt and over) at 31 December 1988

Registered in:	Number	(GRT) million	(DWT) million
United Kingdom	350	4·3	5·4
Crown dependencies	87	1·8	3·2
Dependent territories	91	3·3	6·0
Foreign countries	93	1·2	1·9
Total	621	10·6	16·5

The comparable figures for vessels registered in the United Kingdom or Crown dependencies at 31 December 1987 were 1,194 vessels (22·5 million grt and 35·7 million dwt). Information is not available for 1979 for Crown dependencies separately or for dependent territory and foreign registered United Kingdom-owned ships.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest estimate for spending by the Department of Transport in 1988-89 on publicity and advertising is £5,708,000. The 1989-90 budget is £5,878,000. These figures are broken down as follows:

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
Television advertising	1,867,000	1,900,000
Radio advertising	110,000	113,000
Newspaper advertising	365,000	332,000
Other promotional material	3,367,000	3,503,000
	5,709,000	5,878,000

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of his Department; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has a current complement within its information division of 17 posts for press and public relations with no vacancies. The proposed complement for 1989-90 is 16.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by his Department on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest figure for information division press and public relations costs for 1988-89 is £451,000. The budget for 1989-90 is £446,000. These figures cover the overall costs of running the press office, calculated using the Her Majesty's Treasury simplified ready reckoner for staff and other costs.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I praise the directorate for the latest figures they produce on a regular basis.

The Department's directorate of statistics had 110 staff in post at 1 March 1989. The current complement is 116 and that proposed for 1989-90 is 119·5. The division between grades is as follows:

	At 1 March 1989 Complement	Staff-in-post	Complement 1989-90
Statistician Posts	34	32	36·0
Grade 3	1	1	1·0

	At 1 March 1989 Complement	Staff-in-post	Complement 1989-90

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The sums involved are as follows:

Privatisation	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	Estimate 1988-89	Estimate 1989-90
Sale of shares in National Freight Corporation	151	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sale of shares in Associated British Ports	—	1,889	260	1,494	—	—	—	—	—
Sale of shares in British Airways plc	—	—	50	1,012	674	20,804	11,364	180	380
Sale of shares in BAA plc	—	—	—	—	—	564	41,149	3,200	—
Sale of National Bus Company operations	—	—	—	—	—	635	324	140	40
British Rail privatisation study (consultants fees)	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	300	300

No expenditure was incurred before 1981-82.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total fees paid by the Department to management consultants since 1 April 1984 were as follows:

1984-85	250,000
1985-86	272,000
1986-87	218,000
1987-88	371,000

The latest estimate for 1988-89 is £595,000.

This excludes fees on computing consultancies. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Blackwall Tunnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the general level of traffic on (a) Saturdays and (b) Sundays in winter, in PCUs per hour flowing through the southbound bore of the Blackwall tunnel and along the A13 at the northern entrance to the Blackwall tunnel, together with the maximum flow capability of that road between that point and the northern portal of the Rotherhithe tunnel; and what adjustments were made to signal phasing at the junctions adjacent to the northern portals of both tunnels on Saturday and Sunday 4 and 5 March.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In winter, normal hourly traffic flows southbound through the Blackwall tunnel vary between 200 vehicles and 2,100 vehicles on Saturday, and between 200 vehicles and 1,800 vehicles on Sunday. The lowest flows occur in the early hours of the morning, the highest usually in the early afternoon. Occasionally flows of about 2,500 vehicles are observed on Saturdays between 5 pm and 6 pm probably as a result of sporting events in the vicinity. The information is not available in terms of passenger car units.

Detailed information on weekend and hourly traffic flows and maximum flow capability along the A13 near the northern entrance of the Blackwall tunnel is not available. Estimates of annual average daily two-way traffic flow, based upon traffic counts taken in 1986 and 1987, are available as follows:

Section	All motor vehicles
A102M (Blackwall Tunnels) to A1206 (Cotton St.)	52,500
A1206 (Cotton St.) to A1205 (Burdett Rd.)	43,500
A1205 (Burdett Rd.) to A101 (Rotherhithe Tunnel approaches)	35,500

Traffic flows on Saturday and Sunday are generally below the average for the whole week.

The capacity of an all-purpose urban road depends on a number of factors including traffic pattern and composition, junctions, access, bus lanes, numbers of pedestrians, etc., and it is not possible to give a maximum figure.

The traffic signals at the A13/Blackwall northern approach road were adjusted to account for the planned closure. The police were able to monitor the junction by closed circuit television and make further adjustments as necessary. No change was made in the phasing of the signals at the Rotherhithe tunnel junction. The closure of the tunnel while an accident was cleared was too short to allow adjustments to be made.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the area of maximum congestion on Saturday and Sunday 4 and 5 March, respectively, occasioned by the closure of the south bound bore of the Blackwall tunnel; and what was the general level of time penalty experienced by travellers on the main east-west and north-south routes, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The worst delays were on the A13 from Gardiners corner east to Prince Regent lane. On Saturday morning these delays were equivalent to those experienced on a weekday rush-hour at their peak.

The delays were aggravated by other factors, including an accident in Rotherhithe tunnel, the closure of Tower bridge, and a strike by Woolwich ferry operators.

Mr. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason the southbound bore of the Blackwall tunnel was closed on 4 and 5 March; what consideration he has given (a) to confining such closures to 12-hour periods from 2100 hours to 0900 hours over each night or (b) to confining traffic to smaller vehicles using one lane through the tunnel or approach roads; and what would be the additional cost of these or similar measures to minimise congestion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department announced in February that the southbound bore of the Blackwall tunnel would be closed for annual maintenance from 10 pm on 4 March to 5 am on 6 March, and during the same hours on the two succeeding weekends.

Good progress has been made with the work. The tunnel was re-opened ahead of schedule at 6.15 pm on 5 March, and the final proposed closure may not be necessary.

Alternative arrangements for these closures were considered and rejected either for reasons of safety or because they would increase the overall closure period required.

Automatic Train Protection

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the commencement date of British Rail's pilot schemes to test and develop a system of automatic train protection; how much finance is committed to the project; how long it will last; where the pilot scheme will be carried out; and when it is anticipated evaluation will be completed.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that BR have been considering the possibility of introducing an automatic train protection (ATP) system for some time. On 16 November 1988 it agreed that proposals for ATP should be progressed without delay, and on 6 March its investment committee authorised an initial £1 million for development. My right hon. Friend's approval was not needed.

Although some automatic train protection systems have been or are being installed on a few other railway systems, none of them is at present technically compatible with BR's signalling system. The development programme will investigate and test hardware to enable a specification to be drawn up which will be suitable for application in differing locations and situations on BR's network.

As part of the development programme BR plans to undertake pilot schemes, which are likely to be on the Chiltern lines and the Great Western main line. BR has made financial provision for the pilot schemes, but the amounts are not yet finalised. BR hopes to commence installation of the first pilot scheme in October 1990. Assuming tests are satisfactorily completed, a programme for national introduction could start in 1992.

Aberdeen MRC

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the planned number of people on watch at Aberdeen MRC at the following dates (a) 5 April, (b) 5 June and (c) 5 August 1989 showing a detailed split into qualified officers, trainees and auxiliaries.

Mr. Portillo: The planned strength for 5 April is four experienced regular officers, one regular officer under training, and one auxiliary.

It is not possible to forecast with certainty the composition on the other dates, due to the possibilities of unforseen absences affecting any plans which may be made now. However, the watch is expected to comprise four regular officers (of whom normally not more than one would be under training) and one or two auxiliaries per watch. It is planned not to have fewer than four persons on watch.

Ness Railway Bridge

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, following the collapse of the Ness railway bridge, there has been an inspection of other bridges on the Inverness-Wick/Thurso railway line.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. British Rail is satisfied as to the integrity of other bridges on the Inverness-Wick/Thurso railway line, but precautionary inspections by divers are being carried out where it is considered advisable.

Swansea MRC

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what official record has been kept of technical difficulties with interference and breakthrough at Swansea MRC since the transfer of additional aerials following the closure of Hartland MRSC; and if he will publish this information.

Mr. Portillo: All instances of breakthrough were logged by the staff at Swansea, and reported to the coastguard maintenance authority for rectification. The interference was unrelated to the closure of Hartland Point MRSC and has been successfully eliminated.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what problems have been experienced with interference and breakthrough at Swansea MRC since the transfer of additional aerials following the closure of Hartland MRSC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Interaction between two VHF frequencies was experienced which was unrelated to the transfer of control of aerials following the closure of Hartland Point MRSC.

The problem has been traced to a change of frequency used by the police, and the Home Office has dealt with it by modifying the coastguard radio sites affected.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the impact on coastguard operations of technical difficulties being experienced at Swansea MRC following the closure of Hartland MRSC.

Mr. Portillo: There is no evidence of any operational impact due to technical difficulties at Swansea.

Transportation Unit

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the role of the head of the transportation unit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Leadership: achieving the tasks, building the team and getting the best from individuals.

Mathematical Models

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of development work on mathematical transport models for use in analytical work was tendered out to consultancies in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's records do not enable a year-by-year breakdown to be compiled. The development of models often takes place in step with their operational use, as needs for improvement arise.

The best estimate which can be made is that for the period 1983 to date, 76 per cent. of development has been carried out by extra mural contract and 24 per cent. in-house mainly at the transport and road research laboratory.

Ramsey MRSC

Mr. Leyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the financial, buildings, equipment and manpower arrangements made between the Department of Transport and House of Keys in respect of the closure of Ramsey MRSC.

Mr. Portillo: The Isle of Man Government have accepted full responsibility for the coastguard auxiliary companies on the island. Their continuing training and administration will be under the supervision of a Her Majesty's Coast Guard officer on secondment to the Isle of Man Government.

The existing Her Majesty's Coast Guard rescue equipment has been valued and offered to the Isle of Man Government for purchase. They are currently considering the offer.

The buildings vacated by Her Majesty's Coast Guard are subject to negotiation between the Isle of Man authorities and the Property Services Agency.

Merchant Navy Certificates

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet decided whether to accept Merchant Navy certificates of competency issued by other European Community member states as valid for service in junior officer posts on United Kingdom registered ships.

Mr. Portillo: Following the consultation exercise announced on 1 December 1988, the Government have decided to implement certain changes to the certification requirements for officers serving on United Kingdom registered merchant vessels.

These changes will allow holders of certificates of competency issued by any member state of the European Community—in accordance with the International Maritime Organisation convention on standards of training, certification and watchkeeping—to serve in junior officer posts on board United Kingdom vessels. The Department has written to the certification authorities in other member states for the information needed to give effect to these changes. They will be introduced as soon as this information is available.

We have also decided to extend recognition to certificates of competency issued by the Norwegian authorities subject to satisfactory assurances on reciprocity.

Merchant Ship Registration

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 relating to merchant ship registration are to be brought into effect.

Mr. Portillo: The Merchant Shipping Act 1988 (Commencement Number 3) Order 1989, published today, brings part I of the 1988 Act fully into force in the United Kingdom on 1 April 1989. Part I modernises the system for registering British ships and strengthens the enforcement of safety requirements. Similar provisions are already in force or being introduced in the other British flag registries in Crown dependencies and dependent territories.

Boeing 737 (Accident)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the official report into the cause of the accident to a Boeing 737 aircraft at Manchester airport on 22 August 1985 will be published.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The report by the Department's air accidents investigation branch (AAIB) was published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The report took longer than normal to produce because of the extent of the investigation required into the circumstances surrounding this accident and as a result of the decision by AAIB to devote exceptional resources and time to conduct a large scale examination of the survivability aspects of the accident.

The report contains 31 safety recommendations. It is the Civil Aviation Authority who has the statutory responsibility for the regulation of civil aviation in the United Kingdom and all of the recommendations were passed to the CAA for action as the investigation progressed.

The report is very detailed and comprehensive and the AAIB is to be congratulated on a most thorough investigation into the circumstances surrounding this accident.

Passenger Ferries

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about roll-on roll-off passenger ferries built before 1980.

Mr. Portillo: The report of the formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise drew attention to the revised requirements for stability in damaged condition introduced in 1980 and applied to United Kingdom roll-on roll-off passenger vessels built after that date. Although the Herald of Free Enterprise was in fact built to the 1980 standards, and although the accident was not caused by any damage to the vessel, the report nevertheless recommended that the stability in a damaged condition of the vessels built before 1980 should be reviewed, and that consideration should be given to the phasing out of those that did not meet, or could not be modified to meet, the 1980 standards.

As the first step in considering this recommendation my Department invited the owners of all United Kingdom registered roll-on roll-off passenger vessels built before 1980 to submit to the Department calculations of the vessels' stability in a damaged condition to establish whether or not they complied with the 1980 standards, and if not to consider the scope for modifications to the vessels, or for changes to their methods of operation to ensure that they did comply.

This exercise is now complete. In all 72 vessels were examined. Of those it was found that 55 already complied with the 1980 standards. Of the remainder, the majority are being voluntarily adapted by their operating companies to comply with the 1980 standards by means of physical modifications and/or changes in operating procedures. My inquiries of the companies indicate that they are unlikely to retain the small number of remaining vessels, where modification is not a realistic proposition, for more than about another three years.

It is important to recognise that all operating British ferries, in whatever category they fall, fully comply with the relevant national and international regulations.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines (Liverpool)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what detailed information is available to the population of Merseyside on the consequences of an accident involving a nuclear reactor on the nuclear-powered submarines using the port of Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Liverpool special safety scheme contains information on the possible consequences of accidents involving reactors on nuclear-powered submarines. Copies of the scheme are held by local civil authorities, and it is being distributed to public libraries in the area.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist for the disposal of nuclear material arising from an accident to a nuclear submarine in or around the port of Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The possibility of an accident involving a release of nuclear material from a submarine is extremely remote. However, our accident response plans do allow for such an occurrence, and for the controlled monitoring and decontamination of affected areas. Disposal methods would vary depending on the type and amount of materials involved.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what incidents have been reported in the past 10 years involving nuclear submarines coming in to the port of Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has never been an incident involving a Royal Navy submarine which has led to a radiological hazard to service men or members of the public. No nuclear submarines of other navies have visited Liverpool during this period.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries by order of either national or local government to his Department's knowledge forbid the docking of nuclear submarines at ports near high population urban areas; and which countries forbid completely the entry of nuclear submarines into their waters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence does not maintain a list of countries which make such prohibitions.

PRIME MINISTER

Brunton

Q76. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Brunton near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Hugo Young (Book)

Q173. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will acquire for the Library of 10 Downing street, a copy of Mr. Hugo Young's book of the Thatcher premiership.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Holt: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 March.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the suspension of payments to redundant mineworkers under the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme arising from the tighter enforcement of the criterion of availability for work.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 161, whether he will now make a statement on restart and the redundant mineworkers payments scheme.

Mr. Parkinson: I recognise that restart procedures in respect of availability-for-work have resulted in suspension of payments to former mineworkers who are beneficiaries under the redundant mineworkers' payments scheme. Following discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, work has been put in hand on the options for modifying the link between benefits under the RMPS and unemployment benefit availability procedures, having regard to cost and consequential effects. It is very possible that as a result of this work I will need to introduce an amending order to modify the RMPS. In the meantime, I understand that the employment service is taking into account this development in its application of its procedures.

Petrol Sales

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of petrol sold is sold through outlets owned by integrated oil companies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are no figures available providing a breakdown of United Kingdom petrol sales by company type.

Nuclear Power

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for what aspects of the application of Euratom safeguards to civil nuclear power plants and civil nuclear fuel cycle facilities he is responsible to Parliament to give details.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The detailed application of safeguards procedures by Euratom and the IAEA is a matter for them. The Government's obligations arise from the Euratom treaty and our safeguards agreements with the IAEA. I am satisfied that we are fulfilling these obligations.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many kilogrammes of safeguarded plutonium have been exported; to which commercial operators in which countries on which dates, for each year since 1979; and which exports involved sales and which leasing arrangements.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 17 January 1989 at column 157. Detailed information relating to the quantities of plutonium exported to individual operators and countries, and the frequency and nature of shipments, cannot be revealed for reasons of security and commercial sensitivity.

Piped Gas

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he has any information as to what proportion of piped gas is presently supplied to large consumers by any company other than British Gas;

(2) if he has any information as to what proportion of piped gas in the United Kingdom is presently supplied by British Gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department does not have reliable information available.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 210, if he has any information about how British Gas will determine in the future the actual level of prices of firm gas for large industrial consumers; and whether a competitive market for the supply of piped gas currently exists in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have nothing precise to add to my answer of 1 March 1989 at column 210 about the actual level of prices of firm gas. However, the measures taken following the MMC report are intended to encourage the development of competition in gas supply to customers over 25,000 therms.

Gas Prices

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what policy considerations underlie his decision to subject to control prices for domestic gas consumers but not prices for large industrial consumers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The distinction was established by the Gas Act 1986, which subjected prices for large industrial consumers to competition law. The recent MMC report has justified that approach.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inflation

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the effects of the level of inflation on industry.

Mr. Atkins: A number of those who make representations to my Department refer to the need to contain inflation. The great majority recognise that this must remain a top priority both for Government and for business itself.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has made any study of opportunities existing for United Kingdom companies to provide dismantlement, storage and sealed-disposal services for refrigeration units containing chlorofluorocarbons in industrial developing Third world countries.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 7 March 1989 at column 461 to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms. Walley). The parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer have yet to approve procedures for the destruction of chlorofluorocarbons and other chemicals that are controlled under the protocol.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, during his recent meeting with Soviet Trade Minister Kamentsev in London the prospects for the sale of British radioactive waste disposal technology and expertise were discussed.

Mr. Forth: No.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will be in a position to announce the areas in the United Kingdom which the Economic Community have decided will be eligible for support under the European regional development fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Areas to be eligible for support from the European regional development fund will be those selected for assistance from the reformed European structural funds under their new objectives 1, 2 and 5(b).

The objective 1 areas were listed in Council regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88 of 24 June 1988. They include Northern Ireland.

Objective 2 and 5(b) areas are to be determined by the European Commission. It announced a provisional list of objective 2 (industrial) areas on 8 March 1989. This contains nearly all the industrial assisted areas, including the hon. Member's constituency, and also a number of other areas. Following consultation of an advisory committee of national officials, this list is expected to be finalised during March 1989.

The Commission is expected to decide within a few weeks on a first list of objective 5(b) (rural) areas. It assured us in May 1988 that the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, rural Wales and the assisted areas of Devon and Cornwall would be eligible under objective 5(b).

Regional Aid

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what limits he proposes to set upon the charities component of European regional development aid to the United Kingdom; if he will break down the figure by economic region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The composition of future applications to the European regional development fund is under consideration.

Research and Development

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures on the regional distribution of his Department's budget for research and development.

Mr. Forth: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Arms Sales (Iran and Iraq)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if United Kingdom arms manufacturers will be granted export licences for sales to Iran or Iraq in the near future.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 18 January 1989 at column 241, to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department is taking, in conjunction with the Independent Broadcasting Authority and the European Space Agency, to resolve potential problems of signal interference between BSB and the Olympus satellite; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 March 1989]: We are currently negotiating with the European Space Agency and other interested parties an arrangement which will ensure that reception of the United Kingdom's fifth direct broadcasting satellite channel will not suffer unacceptable signal interference from the Olympus experimental satellite. This arrangement is based on internationally agreed criteria (as prescribed in the final acts of the world broadcasting satellite administrative radio conference, Geneva, 1977—the 77 plan—and incorporated in appendix 30 of the International Telecommunications Union radio regulations): It also takes account of the possibility that the operator of the fifth United Kingdom DBS channel may wish to operate at only one half of the satellite power prescribed in the 77 plan.

Radio Communications (Central London)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many operating licences have been issued by his Department's radio communications division in central London to users operating on base transmission of 442·97500 mHz and mobile transmission of 428·47500 mHz; and how many users have complained about overcrowding of the frequency.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 March 1989]: There are six licensed operators on these frequencies within the M25, and one licensed operator in the west midlands area.

Three users, from within the M25 area, have complained about overcrowding of these frequencies. These complaints are being investigated.

Gas Prices

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he now expects British Gas to publish its schedule of prices to large industrial consumers following the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in implementing the recommendation in the report.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I hope that British Gas will be able to publish in the very near future its schedule of prices for large consumers, together with details of how it will be implemented. Many of the large customers of British Gas have asked for a delay in the implementation of the new schedule beyond 1 April to enable them to consider the implications for themselves.

Steel Industry (Gas)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 190, what information he has as to what proportion of production costs firm gas accounts for in (a) the steel forgings industry and (b) the steel castings industry.

Mr. Atkins: According to the latest five-yearly inquiry, gas purchasing amounted to just under 2 per cent. of the production costs of the forging, pressing and stamping industry (including steel forging) and the ferrous metal foundries industry (including steel castings) in 1984. Data for firm gas alone, or for all gas to the specific industry sectors, are not available to me.

Imitation Food

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has reached a decision on whether imitation foods for dolls' houses and collectors of miniatures should be covered by the proposed Food Imitations (Safety) Regulations 1989; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In the course of consultation on the regulations to implement the European Community directive on dangerous imitations a large number of representations have been made for the regulations not to apply to imitation food supplied for use in dolls' houses or model scenes or settings. These items are exempt from the Food Imitations (Safety) Regulations 1985 but are subject to the general safety requirement under section 10 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and where appropriate to the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1974. After careful consideration of these representations, I have concluded that these items should be excluded from the new regulations.

Computer Hacking

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, following the recent cases of unauthorised electronic penetration of computerised information, when he intends to bring forward a Bill to outlaw computer hacking.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply. We are awaiting the final report of the Law Commission, which is looking at the matter as part of a review of the law on computer misuse.

WALES

Urban Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what was the value of urban programme moneys for each year since 1979 (a) for Wales, and (b) for district councils in the valleys initiative area, at constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 9 March 1989]: (a) The main urban programme and special and supplementary allocations in cash and real terms for all Wales for each of the years since 1979-80 is shown in the following tables:

Notes:

1. The allocations in real terms have been derived by the application of the GDP deflator at market prices with 1988-89 as base year.
2. Boundaries for district councils do not correspond to boundary of Valleys Programme area and the figures in table b above do not include allocations for county councils.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of applications for home improvement grants and the number accepted for each year since 1979, by district and at constant prices.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of urban development grants by district council for each year since 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Ian Grist [holding answer 9 March 1989]: Urban development grant was introduced in 1982. The following table represents the value of capital allocations made in each year are expressed in real terms and have been devised by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the latest GDP deflators. 1988-89 is the base year for the calculations.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any representations concerning the payment under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme of money to landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 9 March 1989]: In addition to the letter that I have received from the hon. Gentleman the president of the Farmers Union of Wales has written to me about problems which his members are facing in reaching agreement with the Crown Estate and the water authority about the apportionment of grant that would be paid under the ESA scheme. I have arranged for my officials to meet the union to discuss the problem.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and the public relations office of the Welsh Office; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 March 1989]: There are 22½ staff in the information division which has a notional complement of 28½. Under delegated budgets staffing levels for 1989-90 will be determined by the resources made available to line managers and decisions on budget allocations for 1989-90 have yet to be finalised.

Bed and Breakfast

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what is the number of people for whom bed-and-breakfast payments are being made; and whether they are single, single with children, a couple or a couple with children for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The available information is set out in the following tables:

Neath-Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether in the consideration he is now giving to the proposals of the health authority for the building of a new hospital in the Neath-Port Talbot area he is still on target so far as the intended commencement of work is concerned.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am at present examining the proposals from West Glamorgan Health Authority. The scheme is currently on target to start in 1991-92.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now make it his policy to answer detailed questions on the rules governing the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 15 December 1988, at column 677.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All Northern Ireland Departments have prepared, and are implementing, information technology strategies geared to their individual business objectives with the aim of increasing efficiency and effectiveness while ensuring value for money in the purchases of systems. The Northern Ireland Office is in the process of preparing its own strategy. Each strategy includes provision for improving internal communications through the use of voice and data transmission facilities, office automation and management information systems. Fax and telex facilities are also available in Departments and local offices dealing with matters such as social security. In particular, the Northern Ireland Office has recently introduced a secure inter-communicating word processing system and a secure video conferencing system linking its Belfast and London offices. A telecommunications strategy has also been drawn up, and plans are being prepared to provide a modern, fully integrated, digital network.

The departmental information technology strategies address the provision of information to the public where this is appropriate and a number of computer systems providing this facility are operational in areas such as social security benefits, economic development and agriculture. In addition a free telephone service, freeline DHSS, is provided to anyone in Northern Ireland linking inquirers directly to a centre where full-time staff provide information and advice on all social security benefits and related services.

Departmental information technology strategies are continually reviewed to ensure that they match administrative and policy objectives. Departments also endeavour to keep abreast of the latest developments in technology and seek to apply these where they fit into their strategies.

Genealogists (Fees)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is he will list (a) the standard fees and (b) the discretionary fees charged for services provided by the public record office (i) to commercial genealogists and (ii) where YTP or ACE workers are working on behalf of commercial genealogists.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fees charged for services provided by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland are set out in a schedule to the Public Record of the (Public Use Of The Records) Rules (Northern Ireland) 1953. The current schedule of fees is contained in a statutory rule, No. 180 of 1988 a copy of which is available in the Library.

The deputy keeper of the records has discretion to waive such fees if the records are being inspected for the purposes of private, non-profit-making research. The rules are interpreted in the same way in respect of services provided for ACE and YTP workers as for other members of the public.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secreatary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total of grants in aid paid to the tobacco industry in Northern Ireland since 1979; if he will list these; what other financial assistance has been made to tobacco companies by the Government in the same period; if he will list these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: There have been no grants in aid paid to the tobacco industry in Northern Ireland since 1979. In terms of financial assistance, the Department of Economic Development (including the Industrial Development Board) has paid a total of £33,909,246 to tobacco companies in Northern Ireland since 1979.

SCOTLAND

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on Monday 6 March.

Telephone Survey

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the questions that were asked in the recent Scottish Office telephone survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The interview schedule contained questions about respondents' experience of a number of crimes, including car theft, bicycle theft, theft from vehicles, vandalism to vehicles, housebreaking, robbery, sexual offences and assault. Questions were also asked about fear of crime and household security.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether surveys similar to the recent telephone survey by the Scottish Office have been conducted under its auspices in the past.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The questions asked in this survey are very similar to those used in the British crime surveys of 1982 and 1988.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how people who took part in the recent Scottish Office telephone survey were chosen.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1989]: A random sample was obtained by means of computer-generated telephone calls.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the purpose of the recent telephone survey by his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The survey in Scotland was part of an international exercise involving 15 countries mainly from the European Community but also including the United States of America, Canada and Australia. The survey used tightly standardised methods in order to obtain comparative information on the nature and scale of victimisation and other criminal justice information across the various participating countries.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the recent telephone survey conducted by his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1989]: My Department's central research unit, which acted as co-ordinator for the survey in Scotland, received about 30 telephone calls and one letter from the public. For the most part the callers sought only to confirm the bona fide nature of the survey though a number voiced specific concerns and complaints mainly related to the household security questions. Two of the calls related to the question about sexual assault.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether the people who carried out the recent Scottish Office telephone survey had received any formal training in counselling techniques;

(2) what qualifications the people who carried out the recent Scottish Office telephone survey had.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1989]:

The staff of the survey firms which conducted the survey are experienced in the use of telephone interviews for research purposes. The interviewers were given introductory training for the special needs of this survey which paid particular attention to the sensitive nature of many of the topics included in the questionnaire.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the findings of the recent Scottish Office telephone survey will be published in full.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1989]: A report on the results of the survey is to be published later this year.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps were taken to ensure that respondents to the recent Scottish Office telephone survey were made aware of the voluntary nature of the survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The introduction to the questionnaire used by all survey interviewers offered the respondent a number of opportunities to decline to participate before commencing the interview. At this stage, also, respondents were given the opportunity to verify the authenticity of the survey. This could be done by telephoning the liaison contact in the Scottish Office or the free telephone number of the Market Survey Society. That this was effective was demonstrated by the fact that, to achieve a sample of 2,000, approximately 4,000 calls had to be made. One person in two approached declined to participate. Those who participated were, of course, free to put down the telephone at any point.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps were taken to protect the confidentiality of respondents to the recent Scottish Office telephone survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1989]: Confidentiality was a principal factor in the decision to use computer-generated telephone interviewing. This technique offers greater confidentiality than the more usual doorstep interviews since neither the name nor address of the respondent is known to the interviewer. This was explained by the interviewers to potential respondents before seeking their agreement to participate.

Hospitals (Capital Evaluation)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give for each hospital over 250 beds (a) the land and building capital evaluation and (b) equipment capital evaluation;

(2) on what date he proposes that hospitals will start paying capital interest charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked each health board to compile a register of all capital assets held, their location and their value, but this information is not yet available. A Scottish working paper on capital charging, including a proposed timetable, will be published shortly.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the proportion of Forestry Commission sales since the introduction of the rationalisation plans sold (a) back to the previous owners, (b) privately and (c) by public sale.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Manouchehn Tehrani

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has now received a copy of the written decision of Lord Weir, in the Court of Session, concerning the dismissal of Mr. Manouchehn Tehrani, consultant surgeon, from his employment at the Inverclyde royal hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has seen a copy of Lord Weir's opinion. It now falls to Argyll and Clyde health board to consider anew the courses of action open to it.

Fish Farms

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quantities of Nuvan 500 EC have been released into the marine environment via salmon farms in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inspections of marine fish farms have been made in each of the last five years by (a) the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, (b) the river purification boards and (c) the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of marine fish farms by scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland were as follows:

	Numbers
1984	68
1985	101
1986	110
1987	133
1988	176

Information is not held centrally on the number of inspections of marine fish farms by river purification authorities.

Information as to inspections carried out by the Health and Safety Executive is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment.

Matrimonial Homes

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the report of the research into the working of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am placing copies of the report in the Library, and the Scottish Home and Health Department is sending copies to interested organisations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has reviewed the report, "The Transport of Plutonium by Air and Sea", written by Jonathan Spink and Paul Helliwell for the European Proliferation Information Centre on behalf of the national steering committee of the nuclear free zone authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The honorary secretary of the nuclear free zone national steering committee wrote to the permanent under-secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 16 January enclosing a copy of the report. A reply to the honorary secretary's letter issued on 9 February. A copy of the reply is being placed in the Library of the House.

Condor 2

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a meeting with his counterpart on the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss the assistance given by Federal Germany aerospace companies to Argentina for the production of the Condor 2 ballistic missile system.

Mr. Waldegrave: No, but officials from the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany frequently discuss the effective implementation of the missile technology control regime.

Rain Forests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any recent representations to the Brazilian ambassador over the chopping down of the Amazonian rain forest and its consequent implications for the depletion of the ozone layer.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I both drew to the attention of the visiting Secretary-General of the Brazilian Ministry for Foreign Affairs last week the strong concern felt in this country on environmental issues, notably the future of the Amazon rain forests. We stressed that our overall approach was to work with the Brazilian Government on these matters.

PLO (Bombings)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, at his recent meeting with representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, he raised the question of compensation for victims of past Palestine Liberation Organisation bombings.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has not met PLO representatives. We have not discussed with the PLO possible compensation for victims of acts of violence. We oppose such acts from whatever quarter.

Israel (Nuclear Weapons)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent meeting with Israeli Government officials in Israel, the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) raised the issue of Israeli possession of nuclear weapons and the prospects of Israel signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State raised the question of Israeli accession to the non-proliferation treaty during his talks with Professor Arens on 15 February.

Albert Mukong

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make inquiries of the Government of Cameroon about the reasons for the trial of Albert Mukong, a civilian, by a military court.

Mrs. Chalker: We are aware of the case of Albert Mukong and have raised it with the Cameroon authorities. We shall continue to monitor the case.

Oil Spill (Antarctic)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what treaty obligations and resources are available for oil spill control in the Antarctic; and whether Vikoma skimmers and the Frogmat boom have been evaluated in these latitudes.

Mr. Eggar: There are no specific treaty obligations which require the United Kingdom to clean up oil spills in Antarctica and there are no resources deployed in Antarctica by the United Kingdom for that purpose. The equipment referred to in the question has not, so far as I am aware, been evaluated in Antarctica although boom and skimmer devices were used in connection with the oil spill from the Bahia Paraiso which sank on 31 January.

Iraq

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on steps he has taken to advise the Government of Iraq of Her Majesty's Government's attitude towards human rights violations in Iraq.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have repeatedly made clear to the Government of Iraq our concern at their failure to respect human rights in their country. On 9 March, we co-sponsored a draft resolution on human rights in Iraq in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, and voted against Iraq's successful motion to take no action on that draft. Our representative at the Commission made clear our concerns in his statement.

China

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on human rights in China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In addition to publicly available sources, Her Majesty's embassy in Peking provides regular reports on human rights questions.

We are concerned about human rights in China. Our general aim is to encourage the Chinese Government to continue their programme of economic, social and political reforms, in the belief that in the long run this will lead to the development of a stable and democratic society in China, which is essential for the respect of human rights.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Practitioners

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many qualified veterinary practitioners completed their training in the United Kingdom in each year from 1985 to 1988; and how many veterinary practitioners, qualified abroad, were registered to practice in the United Kingdom in each year over that period.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The numbers of veterinary students who completed their training and obtained veterinary degrees in the United Kingdom in each year from 1985 to 1988 are:

	Number
1985-86	379
1986-87	366
1987-88	384
1988-89	314

The numbers of qualified veterinarians from abroad registering with the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons entitling them to practise in the United Kingdom in each of these years was:

	Number
1985-86	122
1986-87	224
1988-89	256

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mandatory training veterinary practitioners undergo with respect to (a) the treatement of marine fish and (b) protection of the marine environment.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Undergraduate veterinary training courses include basic instruction on all animal species. Veterinary graduates may choose to specialise in any aspect of veterinary surgery including marine fish.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what central records are kept of products prescribed by veterinary practitioners.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax System

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he anticipates that the law relating to capital gains tax, capital allowances and the management of the tax system will be consolidated.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 March 1989]: Consolidation of statute law is the responsibility of the Law Commission. One present plans, it is expected that a Bill consolidating the law on capital allowances will be ready for introduction early in the 1989/90 Session of Parliament. The Law Commission envisage that further work on consolidation of tax law will follow.

National Debt

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what components comprise the calculation of the national debt.

Mr. Lilley: The national debt is conventionally defined as the nominal liabilities of the National Loans Fund. These consist mainly of short, medium and long-dated Government securities, national savings products and Treasury bills. As such, they take no account of the public sector's holdings of short-term assets (for example foreign exchange reserves held in the exchange equalisation account). At 31 March 1988 the national debt stood at £197·5 billion, of which market holdings were £177·9 billion.

Full details of the national debt are published annually in the consolidated fund and national loans fund accounts: supplementary statements, and placed in the Library.

However, net public sector debt is nowadays a more appropriate measure of public sector indebtedness than the traditional measure of "national debt" as it covers the whole of the public sector rather than just central Government and it also takes account of the public sector's short-term assets. At 31 March 1988 net public sector debt stood at £171·3 billion. Full details of the components of net public sector debt are published in the November 1988 Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the national debt at today's value in (a) 1973-74, (b) 1978-89 and (c) 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: In 1987-88 prices, the national debt at the end of each year was as follows:

1973-74	177·5
1987-88	197·3

However the national debt is conventionally defined as the liabilities of the national loans fund. As such it is not the most useful or comprehensive measure of the total state of public sector indebtedness. It comprises debt held by official bodies within central Government, it does not cover the whole of central Government debt and it excludes entirely the debt of other parts of the public sector. In addition, it takes no account of the public sector's short-term assets including foreign exchange reserves. A better measure is public sector net debt, though figures for this are only available from end 1974-75. In 1987-88 prices, the public sector net debt at the end of each year was as follows:

	£ billion
1974-75	218·9

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the national debt was repaid between (a) 1974-75 and 1978-79 and (b) 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: The national debt is conventionally defined as the liabilities of the national loans fund. As such it is not the most useful or comprehensive measure of the total state of public sector indebtedness. It includes debt held by official bodies within central Government, it does not cover the whole of central Government debt and it excludes entirely the debt of other parts of the public sector. In addition, it takes no account of the public sector's short-term assets. A better measure is public sector net debt, whose flow analogue is the PSBR-PSDR.

In 1987-88 prices the cumulative PSBR was as follows:

(a) 1974-75 to 1978-79 £118·9 billion (or £22·4 billion a year on average).

(b) 1979-80 to 1987-88 £88·4 billion (or £9·8 billion a year on average).

Select Committees (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Major: The reports of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee and the Government's replies to them are available in the Library of the House of Commons.

VAT

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy concerning the provision to credit reference agencies of information concerning the non-payment of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Information held by Customs and Excise about the VAT affairs of registered traders is confidential and is not disclosed to credit agencies.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the past 10 years thg number of new businesses which have registered for value added tax in Waveney.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I regret that statistics are not maintained on a district basis. The local VAT office at Ipswich covers not only the Waveney constituency but the area which includes Ipswich itself, Felixstowe, Newmarket and Bury St. Edmunds. The number of VAT registrations processed by that office for each of the calendar years 1979 to 1988 was:

Year	New registrations
1979	1,612
1980	1,497
1981	1,726
1982	1,528
1983	1,557
1984	2,321
1985	2,094
1986	2,180
1987	2,324
1988	2,826

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Central Office of Information on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The estimated spending for 1988-89 by the Central Office of Information on behalf of other Government Departments for the above categories is:

	£ million
(a) TV advertising	49·5
(b) Radio advertising	1·1
(c) Newspaper advertising	35·0
(d) Other promotional material	23·5

Detailed decisions on estimated expenditure by media through COI on behalf of other Government Departments for 1989-90 is a matter for departmental Ministers.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Central Office of Information; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiate between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The Central Office of Information does not have statistical divisions or staff in statistical posts; nor are any proposed for in 1989-90.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the total amount payable under the Civil List Acts to the royal family in the calendar years 1988 and 1989.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Work Permits

183. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the position on the granting of work permits to husbands of Commonwealth exchange teachers working in schools in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Under the immigration rules, the husbands of women admitted to the United Kingdom as Commonwealth exchange teachers cannot themselves be admitted to take employment unless they qualify in their own right—for example, by obtaining work permits in accordance with the usual criteria. I am, however, considering whether husbands should be admissible, with freedom to take employment, on the basis that their wives are being admitted as Commonwealth exchange teachers.

Court Service (Clerks)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of justices' clerks, their deputies and court clerks in the magistrates courts service who have left the service to take up similar positions with the Crown prosecution service.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that at the end of February there were 278 court clerk vacancies in England and Wales. The number of court clerks who have taken up appointments with the Crown prosecution service during the previous year is not available except at disproportionate cost, but is due to be collected shortly. Information about justices' clerks and their deputies has not so far been available separately, but we propose to collect it.

Women's National Alliance

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the decision to refuse a grant to the National Alliance of Women's Organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received 26 representations and, having considered the points that they have made, can see no reason to change his decision that the Home Office should not make a grant to the proposed national alliance.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what applications he has received for the funding of a women's national alliance; whether he has reached a decison on any such application; and whether he will be taking into account existing funding provided to bodies representing women's interests in reaching his decision.

Mr. John Patten: The National Council for Voluntary Organisations has applied for a grant for a new National Alliance of Women's Organisations. My right hon. Friend has decided that funds should not be made available for the organisation. In reaching a decision he took account of existing funding provided to bodies representing women's interests.

Entry Applications

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each country (a) the number of applications to enter the United Kingdom for marriage under paragraphs 41 and 46 of the immigration rules and (b) the number of refusals of such applications in (i) 1987 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Renton: The information requested on fiancé(e)s (paragraph 41 of the immigration rules) and spouses (paragraph 46) applying for entry clearance to the United Kingdom is available centrally only for those countries specified in the following table.

Telephone Survey

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how people who took part in the recent Home Office telephone survey relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales were chosen.

Mr. John Patten: Those interviewed in the recent Home Office telephone survey were chosen from listings of randomly generated England and Wales telephone numbers. This maintained the confidentiality of the name and address of the respondent. The sample in England and Wales—2,000 men and women—was chosen to be a representative cross-section of those aged 16 or over.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether surveys similar to the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales have been conducted under its auspices in the past.

Mr. John Patten: Surveys similar to the recent telephone survey have been conducted in the past under Home Office auspices, though this is the first occasion on which telephone interviewing has been used. Other surveys have used face-to-face interviewing with similar questions asked. The British crime survey was conducted in England and Wales in 1982, 1984 and 1988 (and in Scotland in 1982 and 1988). The Home Office has also commissioned surveys to measure criminal victimisation at the more local level. Telephone interviewing was used in the current survey because it was less expensive than face-to-face interviewing, but mainly because it allowed greater standardisation of field work methods across the participating countries.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the questions that were asked in the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The questionnaire contained questions about respondents' experience of eight crimes —vehicle theft from, bicycle theft, theft vehicles, vandalism to vehicles, burglary, thefts of personal property, robbery, and assault. Additionally, women were asked about sexual assault. Other questions asked included fear of crime, satisfaction with local policing, and crime prevention behaviour. Some social-demographic information was also collected.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office research and planning unit (who acted as co-ordinator for the survey in England and Wales, and to whom respondents were referred if they had any queries) received about 50 calls from people who were either interested in confirming that the survey was bona fide, or wished to know why questions on household security had been asked. No one in England and Wales complained directly about the sexual assault question. One person wrote to the Home Office for confirmation that the interview she had given was part of a survey which the Home Office had commissioned.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the purpose of the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The survey in England and Wales was conducted as part of an international exercise in which 15 countries have so far taken part. The countries are mainly those from the European Community, though the United States, Canada and Australia have also participated. Because of problems in comparing levels of crime across countries using information on recorded crime, the international survey used an identical questionnaire and highly standardised sample selection and field work methods to provide a comparable measure of levels of victimisation. Sexual harassment was one of nine forms of victimisation which women in the same were asked about. The survey also aims to compare attitudes to and responses to crime in the different countries.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps were taken to protect the confidentiality of respondents to the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The names and addresses of those interviewed in the recent telephone survey on crime in England and Wales were not known to interviewers as they were contacted through randomly generated telephone numbers. The Home Office do not know (and will not know) which telephone numbers were called. The full confidentiality of the information obtained was explained by the interviewers to potential respondents before seeking their agreement to take part.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what qualifications the people who carried out the recent telephone survey by the Home Department relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales had.

Mr. John Patten: Interviewers in the company which conducted the recent telephone survey in England and Wales (and Scotland) are experienced in interviewing for research purposes. They had undergone a full training programme for telephone interviewing and operate under the Market Research Society's code of conduct. There was also a full briefing for interviewers by a female Home Office survey expert in which the special features of this survey were emphasised.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps were taken to ensure that respondents to the recent telephone survey by the Home Office relating to sexual harassment in England and Wales were made aware of the voluntary nature of the survey.

Mr. John Patten: The interviews were carried out according to the Market Research Society's code of conduct which requires that respondents must be made aware of the voluntary nature of all surveys. Respondents were allowed the opportunity to decline to take part before the interview began. Respondents were also given the opportunity to check that the survey was bona fide. In England and Wales, one person in two declined to take part in the interview.

Police Officers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers have (a) applied for a transfer from the Metropolitan police to provincial forces since 1 January and (b) had their applications approved; and what were the comparable figures for the year ended 31 December 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that of the 201 applications for transfer received since 1 January 1989, five had been accepted by 10 March. In 1988, 464 applications were received, of which 92 had been accepted by 31 December, and a further 82 have been accepted since.

Broadcasting Levy

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce the revised broadcasting levy arrangements for the period 1990 to 1992.

Mr. Hurd: Full details of the new levy arrangements will be published in the Finance Bill. A levy rate of 10 per cent. will be applied to net advertising revenue for each ITV company after their fourth channel subscription and a £15 million "free slice" have been deducted. A levy rate of 25 per cent. will then be applied to the net domestic profits for each company after the advertising revenue levy and a £2 million "free slice" have been deducted. There will be no levy on profits from overseas sales.

HEALTH

Salmonella

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will give a member of the public suffering from salmonella poisoning the identity of the source of their infection when it is known to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is not the source of such information. The local authority environmental health department has primary responsibility for investigating cases of food poisoning. Any requests for information relating to such cases should be directed to the medical officer for environmental health of the appropriate authority.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average waiting times for the following operations at each of the hospitals in the Trent regional health authority (a) hip replacements, (b) knee replacements, (c) hernias, (d) cataracts, (e) ear, nose and throat, (f) varicose veins, and (g) gynaecological; if he will show in his answer comparative figures for five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect waiting time information centrally for individual hospitals. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Trent regional health authority, who may be able to provide this information.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the waiting list statistics for September 1988 are yet available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have today published a statistical bulletin giving details of numbers of in-patients and day cases on the NHS hospital waiting lists for the six months which ended on 30 September 1988.

On a comparable basis with earlier figures, there were 691,100 patients on the in-patient waiting lits for England at 30 September last year. This is a slight increase on the figure for March 1988, although it is still more than 8 per cent. lower than in March 1979.

During the six months in question 941,400 in-patients and 359,200 day cases were treated from the waiting lists. For in-patients and day cases treated, the median waiting time was estimated to be around five weeks—a period which we have managed to sustain since March last year, in spite of the fact that the NHS is now treating more patients than ever before.

General Practitioners (Contracts)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has made to the general medical services committee to safeguard the earnings of general practitioners in the transition of any new general practitioner contract.

Mr. Mellor The GMSC negotiators were sent proposals for transitional arrangements associated with changes in the GPs' remuneration system on 27 February. Those proposals formed part of confidential discussions with the GMSC negotiators and I have no plans to disclose the details at this stage.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new money is being made available to ease the transition to any new general practitioner contract.

Mr. Mellor I refer my hon. Friend to the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (paragraph 2·6) which states: "the Government are prepared to invest substantial extra resources into those parts of the FPS where they are most needed, in order particularly to develop positive health promotion activities, raise standards and make the services more sensitive to the needs of the consumer."

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the allocation of special funds for AIDS to the North East Thames regional health authority in 1987-88 and 1988-89 and what it will be in 1989-90; what has been the North East Thames regional health authority programme of expenditure on AIDS, listed by each district, in 1987-88 and 1988-89; and for what specific capital and revenue schemes the North East Thames regional health authority has allocated funds from its AIDS budget in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Mellor The table shows the funds allocated for AIDS to the North East Thames RHA.

1987-88	6·163
1988-89	11·417
1989-90	16·655

We do not hold centrally details of the region's AIDS expenditure by district and on its specific capital and revenue schemes held. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the North East Thames RHA for this information.

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulatory guidelines are issued to general practitioners who store confidential patient data on general practitioner personal computers.

Mr. Freeman: All general medical practitioners who control the contents and use of automated data (including data held on practice personal computers) are required to be registered under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. The general medical services committee of the British Medical Association has drawn up guidance, working in close consultation with the Data Protection Registrar's office and the Department of Health.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what protection from unauthorised internal and external access is afforded to computerised testing information on pharmaceuticals for approval.

Mr. Mellor: Access to confidential information relating to medicinal products which is held on the licensing authority's computerised database is protected by the appropriate physical and logical security controls. The effectiveness of these controls is kept under active review.

Ambulance Journeys

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department holds regarding the number of ambulance journeys made in each of the last five years in (a) England and Wales and (b) each regional health authority area; in each case, what proportion of these journeys were made in a private ambulance contracted to the health authority concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The available information for England is given in the table. Figures for the London ambulance authority are included with those for South-West Thames. The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will extend the range of hearing aids available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) on 13 March.

Physical Measurement Technicians

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take to address the high vacancy rates of physical measurement technicians (audiology) in the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 29 November to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) at column 197.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the prescription cost per head for each family practitioner committee area, and for each health region for 1988-89 and as estimated for 1989-90, both on a current and standard price basis; and if he will provide exemplifications of per capita allocations to regions and districts on the same current and standard price bases and on the basis of the same resources assuming the same weights as for the weighted capitation system proposed for hospital services and disregarding the effects of temporary residence and cross-boundary dispensing.

Mr. Mellor: We do not yet have available information about the net ingredient cost of drugs per head for FPCs or regions for 1988-89. Estimates of prescription costs for future years are not available below national level. The indicative prescribing budget scheme will not start to operate until 1991. It is too soon to say what the regional allocations will be at that time.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding prescription charges.

Mr. Mellor: During the last month I have received 27 letters about prescription charges from hon. Members. I have also received a further 48 letters from members of the public and interested bodies on the same subject.

Old Red House, Whitby

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the care and well-being of the residents of the Old Red House private aged persons' home, Bagdale, Whitby are being properly safeguarded following its deregistration.

Mr. Mellor: North Yorkshire county council, which is the local social services authority for Whitby, has confirmed that it is closely monitoring the care and well-being of the residents remaining in the home pending arrangements for their future care.

Elderly People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been done on the proportion of elderly people admitted to hospital who are admitted as a direct result of the adverse effects of medication; and what were the finding of the research.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has commissioned no research on this specific issue but doctors are responsible for considering the risks of known adverse reactions when they write prescriptions, and the published data sheets draw attention to such reactions.

Psychiatry (Old Age)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health districts have currently a specialised service for the psychiatry of old age and of those which do not; how many have plans to establish such a service within the next three years;

(2) how many consultants are currently working within the National Health Service in the field of old age psychiatry; and how many more are needed to ensure that every district health authority has sufficient consultants specialising in old age psychiatry on the basis of consultant cover of one session for every 2,000 elderly people.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. In a joint report published in February this year the Royal Colleges of Psychiatrists and Physicians estimate that there are currently 243 consultants working in old age psychiatry and that 152 district health authorities have specialised services. These figures represent a considerable advance in recent years. Detailed planning and provision of services is a matter for individual health authorities. The appointment of at least one psychogeriatrician in each health district is a key priority in our policy to provide a comprehensive range of services for the elderly mentally ill.

Rail Accidents

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the times at which yellow and red alerts were received at St. George's hospital, Tooting, and the Mayday hospital, Thornton Heath, respectively, subsequent to the recent rail accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At the Clapham rail accident a yellow alert was given to St. George's hospital, Tooting at 08.23 and a major accident was declared at 08.48. In the incident at Purley a yellow alert was given at 13.50 and a major accident was declared at 14.20. The term red alert is not used by the London ambulance service.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings took place between Ministers in his Department and appointed members of the South West Thames regional health authority concerning the budget of the London ambulance service for the year 1988-89; and what meetings have taken place, or he expects to take place, concerning determination of the budget for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: No such meetings have taken or will take place. The determination of the London ambulance service revenue budget is a matter for the South West Thames regional health authority in consultation with the other three Thames regions.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the general reason why between 50 and 160 out-patient appointments per week were cancelled in the north-east division of the London ambulance service in January and the first fortnight of February because no ambulance was available; and what steps he or the South West Thames regional health authority intends to take to eliminate such cancellations throughout the area of the London ambulance service.

Mr. Freeman: The principal reason for these cancellations was a shortage of staff. I understand there are currently 43 vacancies—out of a whole time establishment of 248—in the north-east division of the London ambulance service. Every effort is being made to fill the vacancies.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his reply of Wednesday 1 March, Official Report, column 251 concerning the proportion of emergency calls for ambulances diverted to recorded message machines at the headquarters of the London ambulance service, he will publish what figures are available in respect of the use of this service during the month of February, including the proportion of time when calls were diverted to it and an indication of the range of wait for callers before being able to communicate details of emergencies.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected routinely and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South concerning the 1989-90 budget of the London ambulance service, Official Report, 1 March, column 251, he will state when discussions with the non-managing Thames regional health authorities will be concluded; what information has been supplied to the other named consultants and by what date they were asked to give their observations; when the South West Thames regional hospital authority will decide on the budget; when he expects to receive its request to him for the sum required; and on what date its estimates will be made public.

Mr. Freeman This is a matter for the South West Thames regional health authority and the hon. Member may wish to contact the regional chairman, Mrs. Julia Cumberlege.

Hospital and Community Health Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what has been the level of expenditure in each year since 1978-79 on the hospital and community health services adjusted by the HCHS pay and prices deflator.

Mr. Mellor The information is as follows:

Gross Current Expenditure	Cash	£ million Adjusted using HCHS pay and prices deflator

Nursing Homes

Mr. Anthony Coombs To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to review his Department's policy for residents of nursing homes for the elderly presently not covered by the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor I understand that my hon. Friend has in mind residential care homes rather than nursing homes. The report of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner "Residential Care—A Positive Choice" contained recommendations on the regulation of these homes. We are giving careful consideration to the recommendations in the report before deciding whether any change is desirable in the current arrangements.

Pay and Price Deflator

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's estimate of the hospital and community health service pay and price deflator for 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The deflator is expected to rise by some 10·5 per cent. in 1988-89. A large part of this increase is attributable to review body pay awards, including the 17·9 per cent. award to nurses.

Official Secrets

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the advisory committees coming under his Department and concerned in some way with public health which are covered by the Official Secrets Act whose members are required to sign the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 24 February 1989]: Not all members of the following committees, which are concerned with various aspects of public health, will have signed the Official Secrets Act declaration, but the provisions of section 2 of that Act would apply in respect of sensitive official information entrusted to them on a confidential basis:

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct clinical staff to ensure that perinatal deaths, still births and miscarriages are examined for the presence of listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Kenneth Clark [holding answer 27 February 1989]: My Department has already drawn the attention of the president of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to possible under-reporting of materno-foetal listerial infection. Further advice to doctors was given by the Chief Medical Officer on 16 February 1989.

Abortions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of abortions performed in Basildon health authority area from April 1968 to the latest available date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 2 March 1989]: The total number of abortions performed in a particular area is not released for reasons of confidentiality. However, information on the number of abortions performed upon usual residents of Basildon and Thurrock district health authority (Basildon urban district (including Basildon new town) plus Thurrock urban district 1968-74; Basildon and Thurrock health district 1975-81; Basildon and Thurrock district health authority 1982-87.) from 28 April 1968 to 31 December 1987 was 12,179.

Eye Tests

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage proportion of (a) a weekly income of £814·56, and (b) a single basic state weekly pension of £41·15 would have to be used in order to pay for an eye test from 1 April.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The question gives insufficient information about the personal circumstances of the individual concerned to allow me to answer. Furthermore, questions as to whether there will be or will not be an eye test charge will be determined by the retailer. It is possible no charge may be made at all.

Food Poisoning

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of food poisoning during 1988 were traced to (a) food eaten outside the home, (b) chilled prepared meals eaten in the home and (c) retail packs of food;

(2) how many outbreaks of food poisoning were reported in 1988; how many were caused by chilled prepared meals; and how many by food eaten in restaurants and so on.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Provisional data show that there were 472 outbreaks of food poisoning reported to the public health laboratory service in 1988. Information on the number of reported outbreaks associated with the consumption of food in the home or elsewhere is not yet available. Reports to the public health laboratory service do not usually provide information on the way a suspect food was processed or sold.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scientific evidence he has suggesting that listeria monocytogenes can be eliminated by cook-chill catering that operates within his Department's 1980 guidelines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Studies by the Camden Food and Drink Research Association and the agriculture and food research council, Institute of Food Research, Norwich have shown that the heating and reheating temperature recommended in the 1980 guidelines will destroy listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has studied the survey of the microbiological quality of airline meals carried out jointly with the food hygiene laboratory, Colindale and the health departments of the London borough of Hounslow and Spelthorne borough council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I have not yet received a copy of this survey.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Mathematics and Science

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient time will be available after the date of the first national curriculum orders being made for mathematics and science and before the start of the autumn term this year in order to permit (a) the preparation of in-service training courses for the teachers concerned and (b) the subsequent preparation by teachers of suitable schemes of work for their classes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend is today laying the final National Curriculum Orders for mathematics and science. The general nature of the requirements has been known for some time, and a number of LEAs have already prepared in-service training courses. To support such courses, the National Curriculum Council has commissioned subject-specific in-service training materials which will be sent to all schools during the summer term. It is for local education authorities and schools to ensure that the non-teaching time available before the autumn, which may include two extra closure days, is used to best effect in helping teachers to prepare for the introduction of the new requirements.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assumptions have been made by his Department in relation to the availability of non-contact time for primary school teachers in order to prepare suitable schemes of work for the national curriculum in mathematics and science; if he will estimate the typical number of non-contact hours available to a primary school teacher for such work before the start of the autumn term this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Results of the 1987 primary school staffing survey show that teachers in maintained primary schools in England have on average two hours of non-contact time within the average pupil's week of 22½ hours of taught lessons. There is further non-teaching time available within teachers' annual 1,265 hours of directed time for tasks such as preparing or revising schemes of work. In addition to the five annual days available for in-service training, schools may close for two days in 1989 specifically to prepare for the introduction of the national curriculum. There should be plenty of scope over the coming six months for primary teachers to prepare, or revise as necessary, schemes of work to incorporate the national curriculum requirements in mathematics and science.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number and proportion of primary school teachers expected to be concerned in the implementation of the national curriculum orders for mathematics and science this year have no formal training or qualification above O-level in either mathematics or science; what assessment he has made of particular training needs for such teachers in the preparation of suitable schemes of work for their classes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: In March 1987 there were an estimated 115,400 full-time and 26,100 part-time teachers in maintained nursery and primary schools in England who had no qualification above O-level in mathematics or science and had not attended an in-service course of at least one term's full-time duration or equivalent in the previous five years. These represent 72 per cent. and 78 per cent. respectively of the total number of full-time and part-time teachers in primary schools. However, initial training for primary teachers is designed to equip them with the knowledge and skills necessary to teach across the full range of primary subjects. It is for LEAs to assess the training needs of their teachers, including the particular needs of those teaching five-year-olds in September 1989 who will have to implement the national curriculum programmes of study and attainment targets in mathematics and science from that date, and to meet these needs using funds available through the LEA training grants scheme. My right hon. Friend has allowed for two extra closure days for in-service training in 1989, and the National Curriculum Council is preparing subject-specific training materials for use in schools.

University Salaries

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that salaries for academic and academic-related university staffs are adequate to maintain excellence in teaching and research in British universities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has recently informed the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals that limited additional funding will be available for pay increases for university staff after the staff's industrial action ceases. It is now for the vice-chancellors to reach a settlement with the Association of University Teachers.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications for the working of the formal salary negotiating machinery of the university authorities' unilateral withdrawal from the machinery.

Mr. Jackson: The salary negotiating machinery for university non-clinical academic and academic-related staff is voluntary. Although the university authorities are not at present willing to operate it, I understand that they are in active, informal discussion with the staff representatives.

School Transport (Disabled)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what responsibilities a local education authority has for transport to school in cases where (a) the child is disabled, (b) both parents are or the sole parent is disabled and (c) one parent is disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: In assessing a child with special educational needs under the provisions of the Education Act 1981, a local education authority is required to take into account any non-educational provision which may be necessary to enable the child to gain access to the curriculum. This includes the need for transport, which must be provided free to children whose needs require it.

The law governing home to school transport for other children is laid down by section 55 of the Education Act 1944, as amended by section 53 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. Parents of children who do not qualify for free transport under section 55(1) may ask the LEA to exercise its discretion under section 55(2). Each case is considered on its merits in accordance with the policy of the authority. Section 55(2) applies as much to disabled parents as to other parents.

Veterinary Schools

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the number of veterinary schools in England and Wales and the amount of Government funds given to each in the last financial year.

Mr. Jackson: There are four veterinary schools in England and Wales. Funding for them is not earmarked within the block grant to their parent universities.

Expenditure

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money each education authority spent during the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) how much money each education authority spent per pupil for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The latest available information is for 1986-87 and is given in the table. The data for 1987-88 has been received from most authorities and is in the process of being analysed.

Notes:—These figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the capital allocation was for each education authority for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 21 December 1988 at columns 287-90.

Capital Allocation

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the capital allocation was per head of school population for each education authority for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Following is a list of figures showing how much the capital allocation was per head of school population for each education authority for the year 1989-90.

Individual authorities' allocations are calculated not pro rata to population, but by assessing their capital expenditure plans, which they supply to the Department each year in a common form, against a consistent and well-publicised set of criteria.

Expenditure

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money per pupil each education authority received from the Government for the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) how much money each education authority received from the Government for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not available. Whereas specific grant payments for education activities made to each local education authority can be separately identified, the much larger block grant payment is not hypothecated to individual services, and it is not therefore possible in the case of multi-purpose authorities to separate the element of grant paid to support education from that paid to support other services.

Examinations

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in each education authority achieved two or more A-level passes in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The information is given in the table. The figures are presented as a three year average over the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, to reduce the effects of sampling error in the data relating to a 10 per cent. sample of school leavers. Sampling error is a particular problem for local education authorities with relatively small numbers of school leavers.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in each education authority achieved five or more GCSE passes or equivalent qualifications, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not readily available but I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names of the members of the local advisory committee which offers advice on the appointment of magistrates in the Nottingham area.

The Attorney-General: No. Advisory committees have until the end of 1992 to make their membership known. The Nottinghamshire advisory committee has not yet decided to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retired people depend entirely on state benefits; and how many depend on state benefits for 80 per cent. of their income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986, just under 20 per cent. of all pensioner tax units received income only from state benefits; 53 per cent. of pensioner tax units were in receipt of state benefits greater than or equal to 80 per cent. of their gross income.

Source: Family expenditure survey 1986.

1. A pensioner tax unit is a single person of state pension age or over, or a married couple where the man is of state pension age or over.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the value of the state retirement pension in April 1989 if it had been uprated in line with prices since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The value of the state retirement pension in April 1989, based on annual upratings in line with prices since 1979, would be £41·70 for a single pensioner and £66·80 for a pensioner couple.

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much income support or supplementary benefit was paid to people looking after elderly persons in each year since 1974-75, in cash and constant 1988-89 prices, and how many people were paid the benefit in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available. The supplementary benefit annual statistical inquiry identified only carers under pension age who cared for severely disabled people aged 16 years or more and who would otherwise have been required to be available for employment. The figures therefore included carers of people under pension age, and excluded carers who were not subject to the condition of availability for employment. The cost and numbers requested, for identified supplementary benefit carers, could be obtained but only at disproportionate cost. Information for income support, which will be available later this year, will not identify carers separately.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne Central, of 6 March, Official Report, column 446, he will express the number of supplementary benefit/income support claimants for each region as an index figure with 1979 as the base.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows.

[2] Figures for 1988 are provisional and subject to amendment.

War Pensioners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of war pensioners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We calculate that there were 258,300 at the end of 1988. This number is made up of 197,800 war disablement pensioners, 57,500 war widows and 3,000 other dependants receiving a war pension.

Family Credit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to advise potential claimants of family credit that child-minding expenses may be deducted from earnings in assessing entitlements; whether existing claimants of family credit have been so advised; and whether his publications will be revised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no provision in legislation for child-minding expenses to be deducted from earnings in assessing family credit.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to notify women who would be entitled to invalid care allowance on the basis of the settlement of case CG/15/1987; and whether he proposes to revise his Department's publications.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshaw (Mr. Morris) on 21 December at column 306. Any follow-up action which may be necessary will need to await the outcome of related cases currently before the social security commissioner and the Court of Appeal, also affecting the entitlement of women over pension age.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to increase mobility allowance next month by an amount close to the current rate of inflation rather than that prevailing in September 1988.

Mr. Scott: No. Price increases from September 1988 to April 1989 will be taken into account at the next benefits uprating. Between November 1979 and April 1988 mobility allowance rose in real terms by 9·4 per cent. The estimated average number of people receiving mobility allowance has increased from 95,000 in 1978-79 to 530,000 in 1988-89.

Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he calculates the levels of expenditure in table 15.8 of Cm. 615.

Mr. Scott: The levels of expenditure in table 15·8 were determined by a breakdown of the totals in table 15·1. The methodology is described in the footnotes. Forecasts throughout chapter 15 are consistent with the economic assumptions described in paragraphs 45-48.

Chief Adjudication Officer

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the fourth annual report of the chief adjudication officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: The report which is being published today provides an authoritative account of the standards of social security adjudication. We welcome the report and the recognition that the replacement of supplementary benefit with income support, as part of our reform of the social security system, has produced encouraging signs for further improvements in the standard of adjudication. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by district the income level at which a single person over 25 years of age with no savings would lose entitlement to a rebate from the community charge.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 8 March 1989]: These figures assume that the claimant is under pension age, is not disabled, is in full-time work and has no children. The tax and national insurance rates current at 9 March 1989 have been used in calculating gross income.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what future provisions his Department is making to pay full housing benefit to tenants in receipt of housing benefit in private rented accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The Government have given a firm commitment that housing benefit will continue to be available to help those on low incomes with their reasonable housing costs up to market rent levels.

However, housing benefit is not intended to enable claimants to occupy, at public expense, accommodation which the majority of people could not afford. The Government have therefore announced that they intend to introduce formal limits on benefit for properties at the top of the market, once sufficient information is available about the level of market rents.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will be fully reimbursing all local authority resources paid out in housing benefit to private tenants under the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 March 1989]: From April 1989, under the arrangements for subsidising local authorities' housing benefit expenditure, full subsidy at the rate of 97 per cent. will be payable, up to the level determined by the rent officer as representing a reasonable market rent, on housing benefit awarded to claimants with deregulated tenancies created under the Housing Act 1988. Benefit above that level will not attract subsidy unless the local authority has paid benefit, above the level of the rent officer's determination, to a person in a vulnerable group, when 50 per cent. subsidy will be paid. For housing benefit claims on deregulated tenancies created before April 1989, until such cases are referred to the rent officer, 97 per cent. subsidy will be payable on benefit awarded on rents up to the subsidy rent threshold for the area and 25 per cent. subsidy above that level. Housing benefit expenditure not met by direct subsidy is reflected in the rate support grant arrangements.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are not compiled for areas smaller than the wages inspectorate's nine divisions. The percentage of workplaces known to the inspectorate which was checked in each division of Great Britain in 1988 was:

	Per cent.
London	6·6
South East	6·2
Eastern	15·1
South West	7·3
Midlands	8·6
North West	7·9
Yorkshire and Humberside	9·5
Northern	8·2
Scotland	9·6
Wales[1]	7·7

[1] Wales figures are also included in the inspectorate's south west and north west divisional statistics.

Northern Ireland has a separate wages council system which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, but it is understood that in 1988, 13·6 per cent. of workplaces known to the inspectorate were checked.

No information is available on the percentage of workers in each wages inspectorate division whose pay was checked because statistical returns of the number of workers employed in establishments covered by wages councils are not collected. However, in 1988 an estimated 2,472,400 workers aged 21 and over were employed in establishments covered by wages councils in Great Britain and checks covered 11 per cent. of that total. In 1987 an estimated 36,065 workers aged 21 and over were employed in establishments covered by wages councils in Northern Ireland and in 1988 checks covered 18 per cent. of that total.

181. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers were found to be illegally underpaying; and how many of them were prosecuted in the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering the north-west.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics on compliance with wages orders are compiled on the basis of establishments rather than employers and are not kept for areas smaller than a wages inspectorate division. With those provisos, the information requested is given in the following table.

Northern Ireland has a separate wages council system which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, but I understand that in 1988 112 establishments were found to be underpaying. There were no prosecutions.

140. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many West Midlands employers have been prosecuted by his Department's wages inspectorate in the past three years for underpaying wages; how many were found guilty; and what was the average level of fines imposed.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are not kept for areas smaller than the inspectorate's nine divisions. In the three years from 1986 to 1988, two employers in the midlands were prosecuted for offences which included underpayment. Both prosecutions were successful. The average total fine imposed by the courts was £125.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) on 8 March 1989 at column 569-70.

Employment Training

20. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are undertaking training on employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: The number of people on employment training at 24 February 1989 was 157,000. This is a tremendous achievement after only six months of the programme's operation and reflects the great interest shown by unemployed people in getting high-quality training to help them back into a job.

157. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give figures for the current percentage take-up rate under employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the take-up rate under employment training is not available. It is not possible to estimate the total number of people in the employment training client group. There are currently over 157,000 on employment training. This is a heartening response by unemployed people who clearly acknowledge that the programme's provision of quality training will be a great help in their efforts to find work.

Mr. Lee: The table shows, for the United Kingdom and major OECD countries, the proportion of those in civilian employment who were self-employed in 1976 and 1986 and the change in the proportion over the 10-year period. 1986 is the latest year for which the information requested is available for the other OECD countries. In September 1988, the latest date for which United Kingdom figures are available 11·6 per cent. of the civilian work force in employment were self-employed.

Mr. Lee: In September 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, the civilian work force in employment in the Yorkshire and Humberside region was 2,148,000. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's Forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

76. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were in full-time and part-time employment, where identifiable, in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom in June 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available.

The comparison is affected by the 1983 Budget measures for certain older men, mostly aged 60 and over, who no longer need to sign on to get their benefits, the change in compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording, and the change in the coverage of the count from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations affecting those young people aged under 18.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the percentage fall in unemployment in the parliamentary constituencies in the city of Birmingham since June 1987.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested. However, according to preliminary results of the labour force survey for spring 1988, in Great Britain there were some 60,000 claimants in the unemployment count who were not unemployed on the ILO/OECD definition and who gave retirement as their main reason for not seeking work in the previous week.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information from the September 1984 census of employment shows that there were 41,000 employees in employment in the West Norfolk local authority area compared with 39,400 in September 1981, an increase of 4·3 per cent. between the two census dates. Estimates from the 1987 census of employment will become available later this year.

More recent information is available about unemployment. In January 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in the West Norfolk local authority area was 3,148 compared with 4,876 in January 1988, a fall of 1,728 or 35·4 per cent.

Recent research shows, nationally, only about one third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres. This proportion will tend to vary between different areas.

The corresponding figure for the Sheffield 1978 travel-to-work area in January 1979 was 13,771 or 4·6 per cent. The figures are affected by the changes in the boundaries of travel-to-work areas as well as in the coverage of the unemployment count, and are therefore not comparable.

138. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for unemployment in Basildon; and what were the corresponding figures for the same period in each of the last four years.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in Basildon local authority area for each January from 1986 to 1989. The figures are affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in the coverage of the count from September 1988 due to the introduction of new benefit regulations for young people aged under 18.

63. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the future of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the future of the dock labour scheme.

74. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the 1988 average wage of registered dock workers in dock labour scheme ports.

Mr. Nicholls: The average earnings of registered dock workers in the last quarter of 1988 was £341·83 per week.

77. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of the dock labour scheme on the creation of real jobs in port areas.

Mr. Nicholls: Where the dock labour scheme has sustained inefficiency in dock work leading to loss of business, and has acted as a disincentive to investment in adjacent areas, there is no doubt that local job prospects have suffered.

89. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many demarcation disputes exist at the present time in relation to registered dock workers claiming work that is currently undertaken by other workers.

Mr. Nicholls: Four cases arising from disputed definitions of dock work under the dock labour scheme are currently under litigation.

95. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reports he received of the National Dock Labour Board's monthly meetings.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no requirement for the National Dock Labour Board to provide me with reports of its monthly meetings.

99. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the fishing industry in Grimsby or Aberdeen on the future of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I have received a number of representations about the operation of the dock labour scheme on the fishing industry in Grimsby and Aberdeen.

142. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to examine the operations of the dock labour scheme on the River Thames; and whether representations have been made to him about the effect on businesses along the Thames brought about by the operation of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received and noted several representations about the operation of the dock labour scheme on the Thames river.

165. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now covered by the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of registered dock workers in ports covered by the national dock labour scheme was 9,741 on 28 February 1989.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average daily surplus of labour in dock labour scheme ports during 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 the average daily surplus of labour in dock labour scheme ports was 932.

Drug Misuse

25. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of working hours lost each year from drug misuse.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the effect of drug misuse on working hours lost. No one knows the full extent of drugs misuse in this country but it is clear that this serious problem affects a significant number of people who are or who otherwise could be in employment.

Wages Councils

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence he has that the abolition of wages councils will result directly in employment growth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There is now a large body of research which establishes that there is a link between the level of pay and jobs and there are studies by academics and others which point to the adverse effects on jobs of statutory minimum rates. Employers also report that the levels at which wages council minima are set influence the amount of employment that they are prepared to offer.

Tourism

35. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to change the grant structure of the tourist boards for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: A wide range of issues is being looked at as part of the tourism review announced last July. The review report is currently under consideration.

59. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of capital investment in the tourist industry.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's "Tourism Investment Report" shows that the total amount spent on tourism projects in England, with a value of £0·5 million or more, which were completed in 1988 was £605 million. Investment in such projects which were still under construction at 31 December 1988 totalled £2,114 million.

64. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the moratorium on section 4 grants has had any effect on the levels of capital investment in tourism and hospitality developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The suspension of the section 4 scheme was announced some seven weeks ago and it is too early to assess what effect this has had on the level of capital investment. However, the £13·2 million spent on the section 4 scheme in the current financial year is minuscule compared with total new capital investment in tourism and leisure, estimated to be worth £2·5 billion in major projects in England during the last six months of 1988 and thus the moratorium is unlikely to have had any significant effect.

93. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the prospects for the tourism industry in 1989.

Mr. Lee: Levels of investment and forward bookings show that prospects for the domestic tourism industry in 1989 are excellent. A recent survey carried out by the English tourist board indicates that there has been an upsurge in bookings for holidays in Britain. Operators are reporting increases of up to 50 per cent. on 1988 so far this year and coupled with approximately £2 billion worth of facilities due to come on stream make the prospects for 1989 very promising.

160. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the BTA to discuss the promotion of Britain in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I frequently meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority. There are no plans for a separate meeting to discuss this specific issue.

167. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Tourist Association to discuss promotion of tourism from Japan to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I frequently meet the chairman of the British Tourist Authority to discuss aspects of promotion of tourism from overseas and we are both aware of the great potential of the Japanese market. In June I hope to lead a delegation of senior figures in the tourism industry to Japan to explore ways of encouraging more Japanese visitors to Great Britain. This will build on the Government's wider "Opportunity Japan" campaign of which tourism is an integral part.

Lost Working Days

40. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average annual number of working days lost through stoppages for the period of the past nine years; and what was the figure for the preceding nine years.

Mr. Nicholls: The average annual number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes for the period 1980 to 1988 is provisionally estimated as 7,562,000; the figure for the period 1971 to 1979 was 13,081,000.

148. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the work days lost in (a) January 1979 and (b) January 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in January 1979 was 2,966,000. The most recently available figure relates to December 1988, for which it is provisionally estimated that 35,000 working days were lost; the January 1989 figures will be published on 16 March in the labour market statistics press notice.

Retirement Policy

42. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to encourage workers over 60 years to remain in their jobs and not retire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 14 February 1989 at column 154.

Trades Union Congress

50. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss vocational qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no present plans to do so.

103. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the current employment situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting in the immediate future.

Child Labour

105. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been prosecuted as a result of investigations by Her Majesty's factory inspectorate and Her Majesty's agriculture inspectorate in each year since 1973 for alleged offences in connection with the employment of children; with what result; and what was (a) the highest, (b) the average and (c) the lowest penalty imposed following a conviction.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to information in the reply to his question by the Secretary of State for Health on 16 February, Official Report column 327, in respect of industrial and agricultural undertakings. Prosecutions of industrial undertakings by the Health and Safety Executive were as a result of investigations by the factory inspectorate, and those of agricultural undertakings as a result of investigations by the agricultural inspectorate.

Benefit Fraud

107. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his campaign to reduce unemployment benefit fraud.

Mr. Lee: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to my hon. Friend's question of 14 February 1989 at column 145 on 15 February the drive against fraudulent benefit claims is being intensified. In the nine months from April 1988 325,000 cases were investigated compared with 286,000 in the same period in 1987. Increased resources have been devoted to fraud detection, particularly in the south-east, and a new inner London fraud team has been established to pursue investigations into the hidden economy.

116. Sir John Stokes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for savings for 1988 as a result of investigations of fraudulent claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The net benefit saving from my Department's fraud investigation work during 1988 was £65 million.

Local Employer Networks

112. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the establishment of local employer networks.

Mr. Cope: At the end of February 1989, 118 local employer networks were operating throughout Great Britain. Some may form the nucleus of a training and enterprise council. The Government will be encouraging the new councils to make the best use of the expertise of these employer networks.

YTS

118. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for YTS trainees going into work, further education and training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The latest figures show that 86 per cent. of young people completing full YTS training and 78 per cent. of all leavers went into either employment, full-time education or further training.

129. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people currently benefiting from YTS.

Mr. Cope: At the end of January 1989, 413,300 young people were recorded in training on YTS.

146. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people went into employment, full-time education or further training on leaving YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The latest figures show that 86 per cent. of young people completing full YTS training and 78 per cent. of all leavers went into either employment, full-time education or further training.

"Employment for the 1990s"

120. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received following the publication of the White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We have received several hundred representations following publication of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", the majority of which have expressed interest in and support for the introduction of training and enterprise councils. The prospectus inviting local groups led by employers to submit proposals for forming training and enterprise councils in their areas was published on 10 March.

Voluntary Sector

143. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people he estimates are employed in the voluntary sector.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

Vacancies

145. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies were notified to jobcentres, and what proportion these constitute of the estimated number of vacancies in the economy in the last months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: In January 1989 the level of unfilled vacancies, seasonally adjusted, at jobcentres in the United Kingdom was 229,200. A survey in January 1989 showed that only about one third of all vacancies in the economy are notified to jobcentres.

Disabled People

147. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment from which sources he derives information about the number and proportion of disabled people of working age who are unemployed; and what is the latest information provided by these sources.

Mr. Lee: The only count made of unemployed people with disabilities is of those who choose to register for work at jobcentres and careers offices. The latest figures available show that on 6 January 1989 there were 50,219 unemployed people with disabilities registered for work at jobcentres and careers offices. There is no count made of the total number of people with disabilities of working age.

Job Clubs

152. Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs are currently in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: At 31 January 1989 there were 1,220 job clubs in operation. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 January 1989, Official Report, column 810.

Enterprise Agencies

156. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many enterprise agencies are currently operating in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: We know of 437 local enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom. Of these, 396 are approved under provisions of the 1988 Income and Corporation Taxes Act (previously under provisions of the Finance Act 1982), which allows business sector sponsors tax relief on their contributions to such bodies.

Workfare

170. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has made a study during the last 12 months of workfare schemes in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have not made a study of workfare schemes in the United States of America during the last 12 months. Some two years ago Professor John Addison of the university of South Carolina completed a study of such schemes as part of a wider research project commissioned by my Department. A summary of his findings were included in the Blaug report on workfare and a summary was published in "Economic Affairs" in May 1988.

Closed Shop

56. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has come to any conclusions on the future of the pre-entry closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The examination of the operation of the pre-entry closed shop which was announced in our White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" is now nearing completion. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to make a further announcement shortly.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

60. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have been helped to start a business during the last 12 months through the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In the year to March 1989, 99,070 unemployed people set up their own businesses with the help of the enterprise allowance scheme. Since the scheme began in 1982 over 421,000 unemployed people have been helped to create their own business.

Restart

72. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on progress in the restart scheme.

Mr. Lee: Since the introduction of the restart programme in July 1986, some 5·4 million interviews have been carried out, of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help being made.

The restart programme now offers interviews at six-monthly intervals to everyone who has been out of work for six months or more. In addition, certain clients are now offered follow-up interviews in order to provide further guidance and support.

Since September 1988, the programme has delivered the Government's guarantee to people aged between 18 and 24, who have been unemployed for between six and 12 months, of the offer of a place on employment training, or in a job club or on the enterprise allowance scheme.

86. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many long-term unemployed have been offered help under the restart programme since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since 1 July 1986, some 5·4 million interviews have taken place under the restart programme of which just under 90 per cent. have resulted in an offer of positive help being made. There is no record of the number of people who have been interviewed as some will have been interviewed more than once.

Business Starts

80. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many businesses were started during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published, the estimated number of new registrations for value added tax was 205,000. The net increase in the number of VAT registered businesses in 1987 was 45,000, or nearly 900 a week on average. The indications are that the rate of increase during 1988 has been faster.

Trade Union Representatives

88. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to ensure that time off rights for trade union representatives will be equal to those enjoyed by safety representatives under the Health and Safety at Work Regulations.

Mr. Lee: Time off rights for trade union representatives will be provided under the Employment Bill, amending the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, which will not affect the provisions for safety representatives in the Health and Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations.

Wages (Northern Region)

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces were visited, and how many of them were found to be illegally underpaying, for the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering the northern region.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 the wages inspectorate visited 1,004 workplaces in the northern region for the purposes of checking workers' pay and found 369 were underpaying one or more worker. However, this cannot be taken as representing the general level of non-compliance with wages council orders because the wages inspectorate targets its checks by visit on those workplaces thought more likely to underpay workers. The wages inspectorate also visited five workplaces in the northern region for advisory purposes.

Dock Labour Boards

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed by the National Dock Labour Board and the 20 local dock labour boards.

Mr. Nicholls: The National Dock Labour Board and the 20 local boards employed a total of 234 staff on 31 December 1988.

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the introduction of the employment training scheme on the operation of community insulation projects.

Mr. Nicholls: I am aware that some community insulation projects operating under employment training have had difficulty attracting trainees. Community insulation projects have an important role to play in employment training and on 10 February at column 868 my right hon. Friend announced a range of measures specifically aimed at supporting and maintaining the present community insulation project network.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to funding directly the community insulation programme, along the lines of the funding arrangements of the action for community employment scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the measures I announced on 10 February at column 868, which reinforce the generous support available for running community insulation projects in Great Britain through employment training. Different employment and training programmes operate in Northern Ireland so different funding arrangements are appropriate there.

Training and Enterprise Councils

96. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to create training and enterprise councils.

141. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received on his proposals to create training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: On 10 March I published a prospectus inviting local groups of employers to submit proposals for forming training and enterprise councils in their areas. The TECs will represent a fundamental change in the way training and enterprise activities are managed and developed. The idea has captured the imagination of employers throughout the country and we have already had many inquiries. I have invited the first formal applications for development funding by the end of April. I expect the first TECs to be in operation by early next year.

115. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contributions training and enterprise councils will make to meeting skill shortages; and if he will make a statement.

127. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to establish training and enterprise councils to deal with skill shortages.

159. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline his proposals for employers to direct training for jobs on a local basis through training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Training and enterprise councils offer employers major opportunities to improve the supply of skills and to promote enterprise. They will be well placed to identify key skill needs in their localities. They will manage and develop the training and enterprise programmes previously run by the Employment Department so that they meet local needs more effectively. The TECs will also be able to take new initiatives, in partnership with others, to promote more effective training and small business support, using public and private funds. They will have a key role in helping to stimulate greater investment by employers in training their employees. The TECs will greatly increase employers' ability to mould the training system to meet their needs.

TRANSPORT

Ports (Statistics)

184. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of United Kingdom trade passes through (a) dock labour scheme ports and (b) non-scheme ports; and what was the comparable figure in 1965.

Mr. Portillo: The percentage of trade tonnage (including oil) passing through dock labour scheme ports and non-scheme ports in Great Britain are given in the table for 1965 and 1987. Northern Ireland is not covered by the dock labour scheme legislation.

United Kingdom Foreign trade through ports in Great Britain
Percentage of tonnage

	Dock labour scheme ports	Non-scheme ports
1965	88	12
1987	62	38

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the air traffic control system is adequately protected from unauthorised entry by computer hackers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Defence acting through the management of the national air traffic services to ensure adequate protection.

Vehicles (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the numbers of vehicles seeking to travel from the home counties to north Yorkshire and the north in the coming 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department prepares forecasts of national traffic. Where specific trunk road improvements are being assessed, local traffic forecasts are prepared. Projections are not otherwise made for traffic between specific regions.

Motoring Mileage

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate his Department has of the total mileage driven by the average motorist per annum; and how this estimate is arrived at.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am advised that the average motorist drives about 6,000 miles per annum, while the average household car travels 7,700 miles per annum. Mileage per car is higher than mileage per driver because there is more than one driver per car. These estimates are derived from the latest national travel survey carried out in 1985-86.

Drivers (Eyesight)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent random tests to determine whether drivers' eyesight is defective are carried out in England and Wales; with what results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Last month I placed in the Library two transport and road research laboratory reports on eyesight standards for driving—"A Re-analysis of Californian Driver Vision Data" and "A Survey of Visual Acuity of Drivers"—together with a paper entitled "Vision and Driving" prepared by the Department's medical adviser. These documents show clearly that defective eyesight is not a problem in the general driving population as a whole.

We are not aware of any random testing of driver eyesight standards. We know that some police forces carry out occasional surveys of driver eyesight using binocular screening devices.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to seek to amend the law so as to make it an offence for a person to drive a vehicle while having defective vision, whether known to that person or not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is an offence under section 91 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 to drive with defective eyesight, whether known or not, to the extent that the driver is unable to meet the number plate test.

It is an offence to refuse to submit to any eyesight test required by a police constable. The maximum penalty is £400, as well as an obligatory two penalty points.

Around 300 people each year are prosecuted for these offences.

Fishermen (Pots)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require potting fishermen to mark their pots clearly.

Mr. Portillo: The need for the efficient marking of lobster and crab pots will shortly be drawn to the attention of fishermen by the circulation of advice to the local sea fisheries committees, and attempts are also being made to stimulate interest in the subject in the fishing press. It remains the case however that progress can best be made through better communications locally between fishermen, yachtsmen and others concerned.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision is being made for the laying of submarine high voltage cable in the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The use of the Channel tunnel for purposes such as the passage of electricity cables is a matter in the first place for Eurotunnel's commercial judgment. I understand that it has considered the possibility of entering into arrangements with CEGB, and it seems that overall the disadvantages would outweigh the advantages. There would be considerable technical problems to be overcome, for example in making space available, coping with the heat generated, and avoiding interference with signalling equipment.

M11 Link

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in discussions between his Department's officials and Beazers Ltd. to achieve environmental improvements to the proposed M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Discussions between officials of the Department of Transport and Beazers Ltd. have taken place against clearly set out criteria that there should be no delay to the road scheme nor any extra risk of cost falling upon my right hon. Friend.

The costs and feasibility of Beazers' tunnelling proposals were agreed. Beazers has been unable to agree financial terms which would meet these criteria. Beazers has now been advised that its proposals could not be incorporated in the scheme without delay to its completion.

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide precise details of refurbishment/upgrading costs expended over the past five years on the following stations (a) Hartland MSRC-to 6 December 1988, (b) Ramsey MRSC-to 17 January 1989 and (c) Peterhead MRSC-to date.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Over the five-year periods specified, expenditure on refurbishment/upgrading of the buildings concerned has totalled:

Hartland MRSC	54,634
Ramsey MSRC	4,723
Peterhead MRSC	5,196

Roads (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish statistics indicating the increase of traffic in Hampshire (i) in the county as a whole and (ii) in the local authority districts of the county for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The Department carries out surveys designed to measure traffic growth only at the national level. For counties, estimates of traffic levels are made annually for major roads (class A and motorways). These levels estimates are subject to wide margins of error and do not provide a reliable basis for measuring year-to-year changes.

For 1987 the level of traffic on major roads in Hampshire is estimated at 7·2 billion vehicle kilometres. No estimates are made of traffic levels for the local authority districts within a county.

London Underground (Security)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total extra amount spent by Her Majesty's Government on police and improved security on the London Underground since the publication of the 1986 report "Crime on the Underground".

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 March 1989]: The Government have made available to London Underground Ltd. £15 million specifically for additional passenger security measures recommended by the 1986 report. In addition the increase in complement of the London Underground division of the British Transport police from 350 to 400 officers will cost an extra £1·5 million in a full year.

Elveden Junction

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his request to Suffolk county council to investigate what action can be taken to improve the A11/B1106 junction at Elveden, if he has received the council's recommendations; and what steps he is now taking to bring about an improvement in road safety at this junction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 10 March 1989]: Suffolk county council has recommended that a roundabout be built at this junction. At the Department's request it is now carrying out an economic evaluation of the proposal in relation to any possible longer-term major improvements to this section of the trunk road.

We expect to have the evaluation in a few weeks and shall then be able to give further consideration to the possibilities for improving the junction.

ENVIRONMENT

Nature Reserves

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for the publication of the Nature Conservancy Council's report on the future of its reserves; when he intends to respond to this report; and if he will make a statement on Government policy on the future of Britain's state-owned nature reserves.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 8 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend proposes to discuss this report with the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council as soon as we have completed our initial examination of it and before making any announcement of the Government's response. At that time I would expect to place a copy of the report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the Government funding for UK 2000 in 1987-88, 1988-89, with plans for 1989-90 and (b) the number of people employed on programmes under the UK 2000 initiative in each of these years.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's grant to UK 2000 in England was £1·381 million in 1987-88 and £1·805 million in 1988-89. In each year UK 2000 matched this grant with private sponsorship. In 1987-88, 10,300 community programme (CP) trainees were employed on projects supported by UK 2000, with 12,500 volunteers also involved. In 1988-89 some 9,000 CP trainees were employed, reducing to under 6,000 trainees following the introduction of employment training, with an estimated 15,000 volunteers also involved.

I have not yet formally offered grant or approved plans for 1989-90. I have however indicated to UK 2000 my intention to continue funding at the same level as in 1988-89, as a declining share of the overall budget for the initiative.

UK 2000 also operates separately in Scotland and Wales, receiving grant from the Scottish and Welsh Offices respectively.

Lowermoor Treatment Works

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the water being supplied from the Lowermoor treatment works now meets European Community standards;

(2) if he will publish the latest details of samples taken by the South West water authority in the Lowermoor treatment works distribution area; and if he will make a statement on the proposed programme of sampling intended in the area for the seven months period from 1 March 1989 to 30 September 1989.

Mr. Howard: I understand from the South West water authority that for the week commencing Monday 27 February, 23 samples of water issuing from the Lowermoor treatment works all complied with the standards of the EC drinking water directive. The 89 samples taken during the same week from the distribution system served by the Lowermoor treatment works complied with the EC standards except for one sample from an old property with lead plumbing which exceeded the standard for lead and four samples which exceeded the standard for iron. It is not unusual for the iron standard to be exceeded occasionally in distribution systems with iron mains. Those results which did not comply with a directive standard have been notified to the local environmental health officer.

I am informed that the authority's current sampling programme has a daily target of 10 routine samples. In addition, samples are taken in response to customer requests to investigate problems and to monitor the effects of mains cleaning operations. This level of sampling will be maintained until the authority, North Cornwall district council, and Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority are satisfied that it can be reduced.

Rural Housing

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what consideration there has been of rural housing policy as part of his Ministry's annual review of alternative land use.

Mr. Chope: Evidence on land use change in the countryside is collected regularly by my Department and by the Ministry of Agriculture, and taken into account in policy formulation. It is too early to assess the implications for land use of the announcements about rural housing which my right hon. Friend made last month.

BISF Houses, Bilborough

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the meetings which have taken place between his officials and (a) building societies and (b) Nottingham city council, on the question of mortgages for BISF houses in Bilborough, Nottingham, since he met a delegation of residents in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have written to the hon. Member.

BNF (Nuclear Fuel Cycle Production Plants)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) Official Report, column 493, 20 February, he will set out the policy considerations underlying his decision not to conduct an environmental audit of British Nuclear Fuels plc's nuclear fuel cycle production plants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no reason to believe that these plants release nationally significant amounts of carbon dioxide or chlorofluorocarbons.

Hazardous Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between EEC Environment Ministers and African Environment Ministers held in Dakar in January to discuss the international trade and regulation of hazardous waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The conference on hazardous wastes held in Dakar on 26 and 27 January this year issued a communiqué requesting the Secretary General of the Organisation of African Unity, in collaboration with, among others, the executive director of the United Nations environment programme, to assist African countries to establish appropriate mechanisms for monitoring and control of movement of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa and calling on all countries to participate in the diplomatic conference expected to be held in Basle later this month under the auspices of the United Nations environment programme to negotiate a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in the United Nations on the development of an international convention to regulate hazardous and toxic waste disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A diplomatic conference is expected to convene in Basle later this month for the purpose of adopting and signing the global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes.

Housing (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many units of accommodation have been started and completed by the private sector in each local government district in Hampshire in each year since 1979;

(2) how many units of accommodation have been started and completed by the public sector in each local government district in Hampshire in each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The reported annual housebuilding figures for public and private sectors since 1980 appear in "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas: 1980 to 1987". Figures for 1979 were published in "Local Housing Statistics" issue 59 and figures for the first half of 1988 were published in "Local Housing Statistics" issue 87. Copies of these are in the Library.

Brundtland Report

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans Her Majesty's Government have to review progress at all levels in respect of their achieving the goals set by the Brundtland report; and when they expect to publish their first review.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom is one of the few countries around the world to have produced a detailed response setting out the steps being taken to follow up the Brundtland report. The Government believe that the most effective way to promote the call in the report for policies of sustainable development to be adopted on a global scale is through concerted action by the international community as a whole. Our recent conference on saving the ozone layer was one practical and highly successful demonstration of this.

The United Kingdom is taking a leading role in international organisations such as the United Nations and OECD to ensure that sustainable development is integrated into all their activities. We have also recently commissioned Professor David Pearce of London university to review current work on the tools needed for measuring progress towards sustainable development.

Low Frequency Transmissions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the effects of extremely low frequency electric and magnetic radiation on plant, animal and human life.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has no information regarding the effects of extremely low frequency electric and magnetic radiation on plant, animal and human life. The National Radiological Protection Board is under a statutory duty to inform and advise Government, and others, on any hazards which may arise.

Sewage Works Discharge Consents

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many relaxations in sewage works discharge consents are currently being allowed in each water authority or water company area; and, of this number, how many are temporary and how many permanent.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Authorities may apply for time-limited variations to discharge consents in cases where they plan to complete improvement schemes by March 1992. In addition, some small works may also be eligible for longer-term variations in those limited number of cases where it can be demonstrated that investment to meet current consent requirements would produce negligible environmental benefits. In all cases, HMIP will consider applications on their merits before granting revised consent conditions. At this stage, I cannot say how many applications will be made or granted—either in total or for any water authority.

Capper Pass Works, North Humberside

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the reasons for the delay in the publication of the HMIP report on the subject of the emission of radiation from the Capper Pass works in north Humberside, which his Department stated it expected to receive in November 1988, Official Report, 1 November 1988, column 564.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The first part of the HMIP report on emissions from the Capper Pass works on north Humberside was completed in November. Completion of the second part, concerning non-radioactive emissions was unfortunately interrupted by an injury to the inspector who was dealing with it. This was overcome and the two parts of the report assembled into a single report. I have already indicated that I hope to place this single report in the Library of the House shortly.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete his consideration of the consultations concerning the General Development Order 1988 in respect of clay pigeon shooting.

Mr. Chope: Within the next few weeks.

Green Belt

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy on major retail development in the green belt.

Mr. Howard: Major retail development proposals have no place in the green belt. The Government's commitment to upholding this policy is demonstrated by my right hon. Friend's dismissal in February of proposals for a major shopping and leisure complex at Bricket wood near St. Albans, and by his dismissal today of similar proposals at Hewitts farm near Orpington. Both sites are in the metropolitan green belt. In both these cases my right hon. Friend has ordered the prospective developer to pay the cost incurred by the local planning authority at the public inquiries held to consider these proposals.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the volume of chlorofluorocarbons which are at present in use in refrigeration units and other domestic and industrial equipment in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no estimate of the volume of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) at present in use. The Montreal protocol, and the European legislation which implements it, restrict the overall supply of CFCs. The European Community Environment Council, in response to a United Kingdom initiative, has called for the protocol to be strengthened so as to reduce supply by 85 per cent. as soon as possible and to eliminate it altogether by the end of the century. This will increasingly encourage the recycling of existing material wherever possible.

Power Boats

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many accidents involving injury have been reported during the past five years involving powered boats travelling close inshore off bathing beaches.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

There have been about 700 incidents in total each year involving powered pleasure boats, but records are not kept of those occurring close to bathing beaches.

Carbon Dioxide

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made by the biogeochemical ocean flux study in assessing the use of coccolithophores to fix carbon dioxide.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Studies have shown that the natural abundance of coccolithophores could increase under conditions of increasing carbon dioxide. Studies are under way on the suitability of these organisms as food for zooplankton and protozoa. Coccolithophores are only one component of ocean life taking up carbon dioxide from the atmosphere; the biogeochemical ocean flux study's 1989 cruises will measure these processes.

Climatic Change (Study)

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom contribution to the joint global ocean flux study investigating the role of oceans in global climate change.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The biogeochemical ocean flux study (BOFS) of the Natural Environment Research Council provides the United Kingdom component of the joint global ocean flux study (JGOFS). The BOFS involves 60 scientists and 14 laboratories, and expenditure of at least £3 million in 1989-90. The United Kingdom is also represented on the joint global ocean flux study international scientific committee.

Water Charges

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the chairmen of the private water companies whom he has called in to see him as a result of their announcing increases in water charges of more than 10 per cent. for the year 1989-90; what response they gave to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply 23 February 1989, c. 733]: The Water Companies Association indicated in its statement of 5 February that statutory water companies were likely to raise their charges this year by 30 per cent. or more. In some quarters, increases of 50 per cent. or more were anticipated. I have now met almost all the chairmen of the companies to discuss their proposals. The Department's financial advisers, Deloitte Haskins and Sells, have also scrutinised the companies' proposals and the reasons for the increases.

Some companies already had fixed their charges and were unable to reduce them. However, following the meetings that I have had with them, most companies proposed lower increases and the majority seen by Deloitte have agreed to reduce their proposals further. I now anticipate that the average increase in charges for the statutory water companies will be about 22 per cent. Since Deloittes began its scrutiny, consumers have, therefore, been saved at least £16 million in increased charges.

The Government have always made it clear that water charges will have to rise to meet the higher quality standards which are being demanded of the water industry. The preparation of asset management plans, as part of the new regulatory framework being established by the Water Bill, has also identified in a number of cases serious backlogs of maintenance of underground assets, which mean that companies will have to spend substantially more to maintain existing levels of service. In reviewing the companies' charging proposals, Deloittes sought in particular to identify the increase which could be attributable to these factors; it also sought to avoid recommending any action which would be imprudent when set against the likely sustained higher levels of capital expenditure in future.

The extent to which investment is needed to meet existing requirements and maintain standards indicates underinvestment in many of the statutory water companies which shows just how inadequate the existing system of regulation has been. Such sharp increases in one year should not have been necessary and some of the increases which companies have announced are higher than these considerations alone would justify. Under existing statutory controls, the Government have no power to reverse these decisions.

We shall scrutinise this year's increases in charges very carefully in the light of the new system for controlling these charges which we are introducing in the Water Bill. Where price rises this year cannot be justified, appropriate adjustments will be made to the price ceilings which we set.

Aluminium

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of aluminium in water supplies taken at regular intervals by each of the local authorities in Greater Manchester, Cheshire, Lancashire and Merseyside; and how often the samples taken are in excess of the recommended safety levels.

Mr. Moynihan: The available information is listed:

It is not the practice of many local authorities to carry out extensive monitoring of public water supplies. Water undertakers monitor their water supplies regularly.

Supplies taken by the North West water authority in Greater Manchester, Cheshire, Lancashire and Merseyside have shown that the aluminium standard of the EC drinking water directive is regularly exceeded in parts of the following local authority areas:

Sefton (Southport).
Stockport (excluding Reddish, Heaton Mersey).
Bolton (excluding Westhoughton, Lostock, Heaton Moor).
Tameside (Ashton, Stalybridge, Dukinfield, Mossley)
Oldham (excluding Royton and Chadderton).
Lancaster (Lancaster City and parishes of Slyne with Hest and Bolton-le-Sands).

The levels of aluminium detected in these supplies have not been judged to constitute a health risk.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the first meeting of the conference on the human dimension in Paris the treatment of political prisoners in Ankara central prison by the Turkish Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is open to participants at the Paris human dimension conference to take up any matter of concern to them. It is too early to say precisely which issues Britain will raise.

Decade of Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department is giving to the United Nations global project to promote the decade of disabled persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Health is the lead Department on domestic issues relating to this project. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has, through the Overseas Development Administration, funded a three-month consultancy at the United Nations office in Vienna to identify projects and funds for the world programme of action for disabled persons.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is a total of 56 staff in the diplomatic and aid wings whose work is related wholly or mainly to the EC, including clerical and secretarial staff. The annual cost of official travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg on EC work is approximately £34,000.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the official visit to London of the Secretary General of the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in March.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and I, as well as senior officials in the FCO, including the ODA, and my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade, had very useful discussions with Mr. Flecha de Lima during his visit last week. We covered a wide range of international issues including environmental problems, notably the future of the Amazon rainforests. We drew Mr. Flecha de Lima's attention to the strong concern felt in Britain on this issue, but stressed that our overall approach was to work with the Brazilian Government.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number of civil servants (a) in his office and (b) in the Lord Chancellor's Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

The Attorney-General: The number of civil servants whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community is as follows:

Law Officers' Department, nine; Lord Chancellor's Department three.

The estimated gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg for the current financial year is:

Law Officers' Department	6,004
Lord Chancellor's Department	8,423

"Codebreaker Extraordinary"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he proposes to take any steps in the Australian courts to seek to prevent the publication of the book known as "Codebreaker Extraordinary" by retired captain Eric Nave.

The Attorney-General: No.

TRANSPORT

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set a date by which no new car may be sold in the United Kingdom if it is incapable of using unleaded petrol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations made in September last year require all new model types from 1 October 1989, and virtually all existing model types from 1 October 1990, to be capable of running on unleaded petrol. Special arrangements for the less than 2 per cent. of new cars which would need major engineering changes will expire on 1 October 1993.

M4 Elevated Section

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to the longer-term case for repairing, improving or expanding the capacity of the M4 elevated section on the approach to central London; what forecasts have been prepared of increased traffic volume resulting from the continued expansion of traffic to and from Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants were appointed last year to develop a strategy for management of the motorway and trunk road network within the M4/A4 corridor from London to Heathrow. The aim is to improve the reliability of journey times by making the best use of the existing system. A report on this study is expected during the summer of next year. It will incorporate all relevant traffic forecasts, including those relating to Heathrow.

Vehicle Licensing (Computerisation)

Miss. Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present position concerning the computerisation of the vehicle licensing system.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Vehicles licensed for use on the public road in Great Britain have to be registered on the computer at the driver and vehicle licensing centre. Computerisation there began in 1974 with new vehicles and was gradually extended to older vehicles as they were relicensed or re-registered. Since November 1983 registration marks of older vehicles not on the computer record have only been added in exceptional circumstances. These vehicles are usually given alternative numbers whose history cannot be disputed.

Computer Safety

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the security of on-line computer files in his Department is regularly checked for breaches by unauthorised outside access.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Procedures too are reviewed regularly.

Sealink Harbours Ltd. (Special Constables)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Essex as to (i) the powers of and (ii) the nature of the warrant card required to be carried by special constables employed by Sealink Harbours Ltd. at Parkeston quay and as to which police authority such constables are accountable.

Mr. Portillo: These special constables are employed by Protective Security Systems Ltd. under exclusive contract to Sealink and do not come under the county police authority. The local harbour legislation incorporates a common provision under which persons nominated by the harbour undertaking may be sworn in as special constables for its premises and one mile beyond them. Sealink has stated that these staff will not be used outside port limits, save in emergency and in support of Essex police. They have photocards, issued by Sealink, identifying them as special constables.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to which police authority special constables employed by Sealink Harbours Ltd. are accountable in cases where members of the public have recourse to the Police Complaints Commission in connection with the actions of any such constable.

Mr. Portillo: Under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 authorities other than police authorities which maintain a body of constables may, with the Home Secretary's approval, make agreements with the Police Complaints Authority, establishing police complaints and discipline procedures similar to those laid down in that Act. There is no such agreement at present between the authority and Sealink, which introduced its new security arrangements on 1 February 1989.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Essex as to whether the special constables employed by Sealink Harbours Ltd. have been trained at district training centres in order that they are able to comply with the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act and other legislation to which constables employed in the regular police forces are subject.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that before these staff were sworn in as special constables they took a three-week training course, to which the Essex police contributed, and had to pass a written examination. The security manager and two of his staff formerly belonged to Essex police.

Traffic Lights

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider introducing different shaped traffic lights so as to be discernible to colour-blind motorists and pedestrians.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The present designs provide for colour blind people by standardising the positions and sequence of the red, amber and green lamps on traffic light signals and on the positions of the red and green people symbols on traffic light signals controlling pedestrians.

Rail Freight

Mr. Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to encourage greater use of the railways for the haulage of heavy goods to alleviate the environmental damage caused by heavy commercial lorries.

Mr. Portillo: Grants are available under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 to assist the transport of goods by rail if the environmental benefits of keeping lorries off sensitive roads can be secured at reasonable costs and if the correct commercial decision, in the absence of grant, would be to use road. Since 1974 the Government have awarded 189 such grants totalling £64 million and we estimate that, as a result, about 3 million lorry journeys are removed from unsuitable roads every year.

M1 (Traffic Lights)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why temporary traffic lights were in operation on Saturday 4 March and Monday 6 March on the island at junction 25 of the M1 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The temporary traffic signals were installed to cater for increased traffic flow resulting from the temporary closure of the southbound exit slip road at M1 junction 28 for reconstruction works from 4 to 10 March. The signals were installed to prevent queues forming back on to the M1 carriageway. At junction 25 the lights were in continuous operation from 4 to 6 March and then at peak periods only as agreed with the police.

"Standards in Education 1987-88"

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what arrangements he has made for the distribution of the annual report of Her Majesty's senior chief inspector of schools "Standards in Education 1987-88", to those within the education service; and whether copies are to be sent to every school;

(2) what was the cost of printing the annual report of Her Majesty's senior chief inspector of schools "Standards in Education 1987-88"; and how many copies were printed.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Ten thousand copies of the senior chief inspector's annual report were printed at a total cost of £2,340. The report has been sent to all chief education officers, to major national bodies within the education service, and to a number of other interested parties. The report has never been sent automatically to every school, but any institution or individual asking for a copy of the report will be sent one.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps he proposes to take to increase the number of qualified teachers of deaf-blind people;

(2) what steps he has taken to improve the education of deaf-blind people; and how many qualified teachers for deaf-blind people there are in Britain;

(3) what discussions he has had with SENSE, the organisation for deaf-blind people; and if he will meet its officials to discuss funding;

(4) if he will conduct a special survey of the educational requirements of deaf-blind adults and children to evaluate their needs and to enable him to make adequate provisions.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 9 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) at column 604. Officials of the Department have met representatives of SENSE on a number of occasions. They were particularly helpful in assisting the Department prepare its statement on the educational needs of deaf-blind children, a copy of which I have sent to the hon. Member. This is relevant to the points he raises.

The funding of provision of services for the deaf-blind is the responsibility of local authorities. The statement does not envisage that the development of services for the deaf-blind should involve significant additional expenditure. However, the Department intends to follow up progress on local education authorities' consideration of the Department's statement.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the cost at 1988-89 prices of ending parental contributions in respect of student grants.

Mr. Jackson: Approximately £340 million.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost at 1988-89 prices of restoring students to their 1979 grant level.

Mr. Jackson: The cost of restoring the student maintenance grant in the current academic year to its 1978-79 level would be approximately £125 million.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost at 1988-89 prices of restoring the level of student transport costs to their 1979 level.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 28 November 1988 at column 78.

Educational Maintenance Awards

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost at 1988-89 prices, of introducing educational maintenance awards for 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education in schools and colleges at (a) the same rates as income support for young people and (b) the same rates as training allowances paid to 16 and 17-year-olds on YTS.

Mr. Jackson: After deducting child benefit and existing maintenance payments from LEAs, the annual cost of paying maintenance allowances to all 16 and 17-year-olds currently in full-time education in schools and colleges, is estimated to be as follows:

	£ million
(a) If the allowances are paid at the same rate as income support	320
(b) If the allowances are paid at the same rate as YTS allowances	675

Notes:

1. These figures are based on the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in full time education in 1986-87, the latest year for which figures are available.
2. The figure at (a) is based on the 1988-89 income support level of £19·40 for 16 and 17-year-olds, less child benefit at the 1988-89 rate of £7·25.
3. The figure at (b) is based on the 1988-89 YTS allowances of £29·50 per week for 16-year-olds and £35 for 17-year-olds, less child benefit at the rate of £7·25 per week.
4. Both figures assume no change in the 1986-87 level of local authority spending on maintenance payments for 16 and 17-year-olds, which has been converted for the present purpose to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator.

Student Fees

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the extra cost in 1988-89 prices of full fee remission for all home students, in respect of part-time degree courses in (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and other colleges and (c) the open university.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates of the extra costs are about £1 million for the universities in Great Britain, £4 million for the polytechnics and colleges in England and £15 million for the open university.

Polytechnics and Colleges (Grant)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total Government grant both to the polytechnics and other colleges in each of the last 10 years; and if he will express each annual change and the total change since 1979, in real terms with 1979-80 = 100.

Mr. Jackson: Block grant to local authorities is not hypothecated to particular services or institutions.

The total allocations from the advanced further education pool plus capital expenditure by local authorities on polytechnics and colleges in England each year since 1979-80, (a) in cash terms, and (b) indexed in real terms as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, are:

Financial years	(a) Cash £ million	(b) Index
1979-80	465	100
1980-81	493	89
1981-82	519	86

1986-87	748	97
1987-88	810	99
1988-89	887	102

Students (Expenditure)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total Government expenditure (a) per student for all students in full-time higher education, (b) per university student and (c) per student in polytechnics and other colleges in each of the last 10 years; and if he will express each annual change in real terms with 1979-80 = 100.

Mr. Jackson: The available data are as listed. The figures show the expenditure at 1986-87 prices per full-time equivalent student in universities, in polytechnics, and in higher education at other maintained establishments. The 1986-87 real terms figures have been indexed using 1979-80 as the base year.

[1] The figures for universities are for Great Britain and are based on recurrent expenditure financed by UGC grants and tuition fee income for home and overseas students. The figures for polytechnics and OMEs are for England and are net recurrent institutional expenditure per full-time equivalent student. This includes direct and indirect costs of providing tuition but excludes financing cost of capital expenditure, student support and central administration costs. As the relevant expenditures are differently defined it is not possible to give an overall cost per student.

[2] The numbers of full-time and part-time students have been expressed as full-time equivalents. It is not possible to separate out the costs of full-time students.

UGC (Grant)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total Government grant to the University Grants Committee in each of the last 10 years; and if he will express each annual change and the total change since 1979, in real terms with 1979-80 = 100.

Mr. Jackson: Total recurrent and capital grants made to the universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee were set out in my reply to the hon. Member's question on 10 February at column 844. The corresponding real terms figures, as measured by the gross domestic product deflator, are:

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was (a) the capital expenditure funded by the University Grants Committee and (b) the same figures for capital expenditure on polytechnics and other colleges, for each of the last 10 years, expressing each annual change in real terms with 1979-80 = 10.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows capital grants made to the universities on the advice of the University Grants Committee and gross capital expenditure on further and higher education by local authorities, together with capital grants to voluntary and direct grant colleges, expressed as indicated in real terms as measured by the gross domestic product deflator.

Teachers (Incentive Allowances)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department concerning the numbers of incentive allowances paid to teachers in primary, secondary and special schools in or shortly after October 1988, including in particular the numbers of allowances paid on discretionary grounds; whether the numbers of each type of allowance paid in 1987-88 closely matched the numbers advised by his Department as being available to be paid; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing, for each type of incentive allowance payable to teachers in primary, secondary and special schools in September 1988, the total number of allowances available to be paid by employers as advised by his Department and the proportion of these which were available to be paid on discretionary grounds; if he will distinguish between allowances already allocated to individuals and those newly available to be paid on discretionary grounds; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the required minimum payments of incentive allowances to teachers in primary, secondary and special schools in October 1987 according to type, value and number of the allowances payable (a) by reason of a teacher's transfer to the new main salary scale, (b) by reason of the minimum requirements for rate A and B allowances in larger schools and special schools, and (c) by reason of other requirements; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will publish a table showing, for each type of incentive allowance payable to teachers in primary, secondary and special schools in October 1987, the total number of allowances available to be paid by employers as advised by his Department and the proportion of these which were available to be paid on discretionary grounds; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information is available to his Department concerning the numbers of incentive allowances paid to teachers in primary, secondary and special schools in or shortly after September 1988, including the numbers of allowances paid on discretionary grounds; whether the numbers of each type of allowance paid in 1988-89 closely matched the numbers advised by his Department as being available to be paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Circulars 8/87 and 3/88 set out the approximate number of incentive allowances the Government wished to see awarded in October 1987 and September 1990 respectively. These were as follows:

	October 1987[1]
	Primary	Secondary
A	14,000	11,000
B	[2]16,000	[2]53,000
C	—	—
D	—	28,500[2]
E	—	6,500[2]
Total	30,000	99,000
	September 1988
A	24,000	19,000
B	16,300	43,300
C	1,300	8,000
D	—	27,000
E	—	8,000
Total	41,600	105,300

[1] All main-scale teachers in special schools received at least a B allowance from October 1987.
[2] These allowances were awarded automatically to teachers on scale 3, scale 4 or the senior teacher scale at 30 September 1987.

The overall limits on the number of incentive allowances to be awarded in schools of a particular size in October 1987 were set out in annex A to the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1987, a copy of which is in the Library. A minimum of 2 per cent. of teachers were to receive A allowances in schools of group size 6 or above, and a minimum of 12 per cent. were normally to receive B allowances in schools of group size 7 or above.

Circular 8/87 envisaged that by September 1990 there would be 55,000 allowance holders in primary schools and 110,000 in secondary schools. Following the recommendations of the first report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions the planned introduction of A allowances was accelerated. Circular 3/88 envisaged that there would be an extra 6,000 A allowances above previous plans in September 1988.

LEAs have the discretion to pay incentive allowances, within certain limits, to any teacher being paid on the main scale who satisfies one or more the criteria laid down in the school teachers' pay and conditions document. They do so in the light of local needs and priorities. It is unlikely that the numbers of teachers holding incentive allowances at any one time will coincide precisely with the Government's plans.

The only information presently available is contained in a survey undertaken by the local authority conditions of service advisory board in September 1988. This showed that 61 LEAs had together awarded about 77,000 allowances to full-time and part-time regular teachers. The distribution among the 61 LEAs was as follows:

	Primary	Secondary	Special
September 1988
A	6,878	6,343	—
B	9,922	30,305	7,504
C	318	2,772	960
D	148	16,152	149
E	19	3,939	55
Total	17,285	59,511	8,668

Retired Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make it his policy to review the abatement provisions concerning school teachers' pensions in order to remove any financial disincentive for part-time work in the maintained sector after retirement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what numbers of retired or prematurely retired school teachers are known to his Department to be working either part-time or full-time in maintained schools; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will describe the abatement provisions concerning teachers' pensions in the case that a retired or prematurely retired school teacher takes up part-time employment in a maintained school; when these provisions were last reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The general principle which applies across all the public service superannuation schemes is that a re-employed pensioner should not be better off as a result of being in receipt of a pension in addition to remuneration from further service than if he or she had not retired. Where the combined pay and pension are greater than the earnings on which the pension was based, the pension is reduced by the excess.

Detailed information on re-employed teachers is not available. I understand, however, that in the year ending 31 March 1988, 302 teachers re-employed full-time and 660 teachers re-employed in a part-time capacity were considered by the Paymaster General's office under the abatement provisions.

The policy of abatement in all public service schemes is currently being reviewed. I shall write to the hon. Member to let him know the outcome in due course.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to encourage the possible part-time or full-time employment of retired teachers in the maintained sector; what contribution such part-time or full-time employment can make towards filling the shortages of teachers identified by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The employment and deployment of teachers is a matter for local education authorities and schools. As part of our action programme to remedy teacher shortages we advise authorities to assess their recruitment needs and to develop a strategy for staffing their schools. The re-employment of retired teachers may in some circumstances form part of such a strategy.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to assist training in London docklands with a view to ensuring that jobs go to local people.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's training programmes are designed to ensure that local people are equipped with the skills to meet the growing needs of employers.

Under employment training specific steps taken to improve the targeting of training and job opportunities in Docklands include:

- compacts with employers and training providers which give priority consideration to local people;
- a customised training and priority hiring programme with construction companies to help local long-term unemployed people into jobs;
- a partnership project with Jarvis plc to integrate English as a second language and construction training to improve job opportunities for the local Vietnamese community.

Funding has also been provided for the development of compacts between employers and schools covering the docklands area. If successful they will help to provide new job and training opportunities for local school leavers.

In addition local collaborative action is assisting local small businesses to identify skill needs and develop enterprise opportunities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of social security staff dealing wholly or mainly with matters relating to the European Community is 88. This figure includes 79 staff at Newcastle central office dealing with payment of benefits/pensions to beneficiaries resident in other EC countries.

In addition, there are four members of staff in the legal branch shared with the Department of Health who deal exclusively with EC matters.

A small number of these staff attend EC meetings abroad when necessary but I regret that records of costs incurred for travel and subsistence are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Other staff may also be involved in EC work from time to time.

Child Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the level of expenditure on child benefit in cash and constant 1988-89 prices in each year since 1978.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Child benefit expenditure (£ million)

Financial year	Cash	1988-89 prices
[1]1978-79	1,776	3,872
1979-80	2,787	5,199

1981-82	3,372	4,835
1982-83	3,660	4,898
1983-84	3,988	5,104
1984-85	4,276	5,209
1985-86	4,468	5,164

[1] Child benefit not fully phased in until April 1979.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service (1) if he will ask the Civil Service college to plan a programme of seminars to be available to those hon. Members elected for the first time at the next general election;

(2) if he will take steps to discover on what topics sufficient demand exists among hon. Members to arrange briefing seminars at the Civil Service college;

(3) what proposals he has to encourage hon. Members to attend Civil Service college courses.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service college held briefing seminars on the work of the Civil Service on 2 and 23 March 1988 for hon. Members who first entered the House at the beginning of this Parliament. I hope that these will be repeated after the next general election. I attach great importance to the contribution that the college can make for the benefit of hon. Members, and I am actively considering with officials how this can best be developed further.

Civil Service (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many staff within the Civil Service in the category politically restricted, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local political activity.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 February 1989]: A survey of the major employing departments in 1987 showed that, between 28 September 1984 and 1 October 1987, 52 staff in the restricted group requested and were granted permission to engage in local political activity.

THE ARTS

Sponsorship (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the level of sponsorship for the arts in Nottingham, North.

Mr. Luce: Figures for Nottingham, North are not available. However, latest figures for the business sponsorship incentive scheme in the east midlands as a whole show that 31 businesses have supported the arts, generating £237,000.

Arts Funding

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the level of Government and private sector funding for the arts in 1979; and what he estimates this will be in 1989, at current values.

Mr. Luce: Central Government funding for the arts in 1979-80 was £154 million. The provision made for 1989-90 is £439 million. There are no comprehensive figures for private funding of arts activities, which comprises their revenue and trading income together with contributions and support from individuals and organisations of all kinds.

The Government's policy is to create the conditions in which the arts can develop by attracting additional funds from private sources, and I welcome the evidence of its success. Thus, since its introduction in 1984, the business sponsorship incentive scheme has brought £22·75 million new money into the arts and attracted 931 new sponsors. Similarly, the receipts of the national museums and galleries from trading and other activities have risen from some £3 million in 1979-80 to an estimated £27 million in 1989-90.

Ballet

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his Department's policy regarding the promotion of ballet in the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the Adjournment debate on Wednesday 8 March 1989, Official Report, columns 1007-14.

Industrial Museums

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his Department's policy with regard to the support of working industrial museums.

Mr. Luce: My Department supports non-national museums through the Museums and Galleries Commission and area museum councils.

Queen Street Mill, Burnley

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make an official visit to Queen street mill, Burnley, to discuss the case for urgent funding.

Mr. Luce: I have at present no plans to visit Burnley. I understand that the north-west museum and art gallery service, which is funded by the Museums and Galleries Commission and which provides advice and selective financial assistance to museums, is in contact with Burnley borough council about the mill.

Management Consultants (Fees)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the total fees paid out by the Office of Arts and Libraries to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Luce [holding answer, 13 March 1989]: The Office of Arts and Libraries was established in July 1983. No management consultants have been employed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cordless Telephones

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to have enforced in Northern Ireland similar action as is taken in Great Britain by the Department of Trade and Industry in respect of illegal cordless telephones on sale to the public.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The Wireless Telegraphy (Cordless Telephone Apparatus (Restriction) Order (SI No. 774)) makes it unlawful to import, sell, manufacture or have in one's custody cordless telephone apparatus not meeting the Department's specification. The order applies and is enforced in Northern Ireland as in Great Britain.

SCOTLAND

Information Campaigns

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his Department's expected expenditure in cash terms on information campaigns in 1989-90 which is covered by class XVI Scotland Supply Estimates in 1988-89 and the comparable figure he expects to spend in 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind: Proposed provision for expenditure by the Scottish Office on information campaigns in 1989-90 is £2·9 million. The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 is £2·1 million.

Low Frequency Transmissions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the effects of extremely low frequency electric and magnetic radiation on plant, animal and human life.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Radiological Protection Board is currently reviewing the results of extensive work on possible effects on human and animal health of electromagnetic radiation. The Government will consider the board's advice when it becomes available.

Housing Associations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what capital allocations were made to housing associations in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole for (i) new building and (ii) renovation in each year since 1979;

(2) what capital allocations to housing associations in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole will be made for (i) new building and (ii) renovation in 1989; and what capital allocations are planned for 1990 and 1991.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Such information is not held by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State, in making his annual allocation to the Housing Corporation in Scotland for housing association purposes, requires the corporation to operate within a development programme approved by him each year. This programme is on the basis of specified categories of need. Subsequent allocations to particular associations and particular areas, and decisions on the means of provision are then the responsibility of the Housing Corporation.

Similar procedures will operate for future years when Scottish Homes will take over from the Housing Corporation, responsibility for the funding of housing associations in Scotland.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of unemployed claimants for these areas on 12 January 1989 (the latest date for which information is available) are provided in the table, together with corresponding figures for January 1979. (Unemployment statistics for Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency prior to June 1983 are not available and due to changes in the coverage and compilation of the count the latest unemployment figures and those available for 1979 are not directly comparable.)

	January 1989	January 1979
Greenock and Port Glasgow Parliamentary Constituency	6,619	n/a
Strathclyde Region	146,556	106,910
Scotland	269,043	190,300

n/a = not available.

This information is available in the Library.

Skiing

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to provide a national ski-ing development policy for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government published national planning guidelines for skiing development in 1984. These guidelines set the framework within which we would expect to see development take place and continue to form the basis of Government policy for the development of skiing and for considering individual development proposals.

Legal Profession

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Green Paper on the Legal profession in Scotland to be published.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend's consultation paper "The Legal Profession in Scotland" was published on 13 March. Copies have been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rape in Marriage

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will bring forward legislation to outlaw rape in marriage.

Mr. John Patten: In its 1984 report on sexual offences, the criminal law revision committee set out the arguments for and against extending the offence of rape to all married couples. By a narrow majority the committee decided not to recommend such an extension, although it did unanimously favour extending the offence to couples who were no longer cohabiting if a satisfactory definition could be found. The principal arguments which swayed the committee against recommending extending the offence to married couples generally were that within marriage the act would be of different character, there would be grave difficulties in investigation and prosecution, and a husband who had intercourse with his wife without her consent could be charged with other offences.

The Government recognises the difficulties in this matter and have no present plans for legislation.

Computer Safety

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what precautions his Department has taken to safeguard sensitive material transmitted by computer from being accessed or obtained by third parties;

(2) whether the security of computer files on Home Department issues is regularly checked for breaches by internal or external unauthorised access;

(3) what is his Department's policy on the implication for security of continued departmental computerisation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A large number of computer systems operate within the Department. The security counter-measures appropriate to each system are considered at the design stage in the light of the assessed risk, and are kept under continuing review. It would not be in the interests of security to disclose the nature and extent of those measures.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has on whether computerised border control and passport control records are susceptible to electronic invasion;

(2) what measures he has taken to prevent breaches of computerised border and passport control records by electronic invasion.

Mr. Renton: The security of the immigration and nationality department's computerised information systems is considered at an early stage in the design of new systems, and the security measures taken are reviewed in the light of changing threats to existing systems. It would not be in the interests of security to disclose the nature and extent of those measures.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department following illegal extraction of files from the police computer, what steps he has taken to increase protection to ensure that no future penetration occurs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am satisfied that the monitoring and auditing systems for users of the police national computer are adequate. Additional measures are, however, being considered in planning the replacement police national computer system due to be introduced next year.

Crime (Dorset)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the percentage detection rate for crimes in Dorset for each of the last two years;

(2) what was the total number of reported crimes in Dorset for each of the last two years.

Mr. John Patten: The information is published annually, and most recently in tables 2.4 and 2.18 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1987", Cmd. 498. It is planned to publish recorded crime figures for 1988 later this month in a statistical bulletin, and clear-up rates for 1988 will be included in the annual Command Paper in the autumn.

Rugby Matches (Policing)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will obtain from the chief constables of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cheshire and Cumbria, a list of the charges made for the policing of first and second division rugby league matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the charges (exclusive of VAT) to individual rugby league clubs in the areas mentioned from the beginning of the current season to Saturday, 25 February 1989 have been as follows:

Police Force and Club	Cost £ (excluding VAT)
North Yorkshire
York	908·00
South Yorkshire
Doncaster	—
Sheffield Eagles	149·04
West Yorkshire

Carlisle	2,070·00
Whitehaven	1,499·60
Workington	749·80

Notes:
1. No police presence is required at some grounds.
2. There are no first or second division rugby league clubs in Lancashire.

Police (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has for each of the last four years for each police force of the number of women police officers who have submitted formal grievances because they consider they have suffered from sexist behaviour or language.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mentally Disturbed Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report columns 540-41, how many of those who committed suicide in the prison department establishments referred to therein were known to have had a history of mental disturbance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available, but it is known that 30 per cent. of inmates who committed suicide in prison department establishments in 1987 had undergone psychiatric assessment or treatment before coming into custody.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the criteria that the immigration service is instructed to use in order to determine whether a Member of Parliament is putting forward compelling reasons when requesting a deferral of removal in order to make representations;

(2) what checks are made of the consistency with which the immigration service is applying the criteria to determine whether or not a Member of Parliament shall be allowed to intervene in a port refusal case;

(3) how many individuals have been refused entry to Britain since the new guidelines on Members' representations became effective; and in how many of these refusals an hon. Member, lawyer or advice agency, sought to intervene;

(4) how many times hon. Members have sought to intervene in port refusals since the introduction of new guidelines for hon. Members' representations; and in how many cases removal directions have been delayed in order that representations could be made.

Mr. Renton: The criteria are exemplified in paragraph 10 of the guidelines introduced on 3 January and sent to right hon. and hon. Members under cover of my letter of 14 December. Instructions to immigration officers emphasise that the examples of circumstances given in the guidelines are not exclusive but are illustrative of the sort of circumstances which would justify deferment of removal. Under the guidelines a right hon. or hon. Member may contact my Private Office (or, out of working hours, the Home Office duty officer) after speaking to the relevant port, in any case where he believes that the immigration service has wrongly refused to defer removal on the basis of exceptional and compelling circumstances. In the first two months of 1989 some 2,700 persons were initially refused entry at the major ports and airports. Comprehensive figures for interventions are not centrally available, but during the first eight weeks of operation of the new guidelines, I understand that at the major ports and airports some 160 calls were received asking for deferments, and removal was deferred in about 14 cases.

Tamils

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils (a) have applied for political asylum in the United Kingdom, (b) are on temporary admission, (c) have been granted exceptional leave to remain and (d) have been returned to Sri Lanka in the last 15 months.

Mr. Renton: No distinction is made in statistical records between Tamils and other Sri Lankans. During the 15 months up to 30 September 1988, which is the most recent date for which these statistics are available, 341 Sri Lankans. applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. During the same period 257 Sri Lankans were granted exceptional leave to remain. There are no central records of numbers temporarily admitted, but at any one time only a small minority of those with outstanding asylum applications are detained. Removals and deportations of failed asylum seekers are not normally recorded separately. However, it is known that 45 Sri Lankans who sought asylum at ports have been removed since 1 January 1988. Additionally in the same period 26 Sri Lankans have been removed as illegal entrants and seven have been deported: most of these applied for asylum and were refused, after consideration of their applications.

Annual information, by nationality, on applications for asylum and decisions taken is published in a statistical bulletin. The 1988 bulletin will be published during the summer of 1989. Information on passengers refused entry and removed, on illegal entry and on deportation is published annually in "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom". The 1988 volume will also be published in the summer.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there has been any monitoring by Her Majesty's Government of the safety of Tamils forcibly returned to Sri Lanka since the beginning of 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Asylum applicants are returned to their own country only after it has been decided that they are not refugees under the 1951 convention and that it would not be right to grant them exceptional leave. In such circumstances, as with any person in breach of immigration control whose departure we enforce, their safety becomes a matter for their own Government.

Prison Discipline

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement changes in the prison disciplinary system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has laid before the House revised prison rules and revised young offender institution rules which will implement from 1 April important reforms in the disciplinary systems governing the conduct of prisoners.

The rules introduce a new code of offences which will be simpler and clearer than the present code. New offences have been created to deal specifically with serious offences such as hostage-taking, barricading and arson. At the same time, the offences of making a false and malicious allegation against an officer and repeatedly making groundless complaints have been abolished. The maximum punishment on a single charge which is available to boards of visitors has been reduced from 180 days' loss of remission to 120 days in adult establishments, and will be 90 days for young offenders. The maximum loss of remission on consecutive punishments arising from a single incident will be 180 days and 135 days respectively. The procedures for referring more serious charges to the board of visitors have been simplified. An extensive programme of training in the new rules is being carried through, and the recent issue of a completely revised guidance manual on the conduct of adjudications will also assist boards of visitors and governors in carrying out this vital function. The manual will be available in a published edition shortly and is in any event made accessible to all prisoners. In addition, the prison Standing Order governing adjudications is being revised and will also be published.

I believe that these changes represent a substantial improvement to the prison disciplinary system.

HEALTH

Tobacco Industry (Meetings)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings he, his Ministers and his Department's officials have had with representatives of the tobacco industry since 1 January 1988; and if he will list the dates, venues and purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Mellor: The table lists the meetings which Ministers have had with representatives of the tobacco industry or individual tobacco companies. Officials have had several meetings with representatives of individual tobacco companies and expert medical and scientific advisers which are covered by commercial confidentiality. I am not therefore at liberty to disclose details of these meetings. Officials have contact from time to time with representatives of the tobacco industry, notably as a consequence of the work of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship.

Date	Venue	Purpose
12 February 1988	Department of Health	Meeting with the Tobacco Advisory Council on general matters relating to smoking
25 April 1988	Department of Health	Meeting with Svenska Tobaks to discuss the proposed ban on certain oral tobacco products
6 July 1988	Department of Health	Meeting with United States Tobacco International to discuss proposed ban on certain oral tobacco products.
27 September 1988	Department of Health	Meeting with United States Tobacco International to discuss proposed ban on certain oral tobacco products.
15 December 1988	Department of Health	Meeting with representatives of the tobacco industry to discuss draft EC tobacco directives.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been directed towards research into the sudden infant death syndrome or related projects in each year since 1979, expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms on the 1979 amount and (c) as a percentage increase or decrease on the previous year.

Mr. Freeman: The following readily available information about research into sudden infant death syndrome and related projects refers to projects funded by the Medical Research Council, the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of stomach cancer in (a) each of the districts of the Mersey region and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: This information is shown in the table. The latest available data are for 1984.

Air Conditioning and Hot Water Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance or directions he gives to health authorities and hospital managers about the taking of regular bacteriological tests on air conditioning and hot water systems.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, guidance based on expert advice recommended against routine sampling to detect the presence of Legionella pneumophila in both wet-spray cooling systems and hot and cold water services, unless it was suspected that they were the source of hospital-acquired infection. The application of this guidance to wet-spray cooling systems is currently under review.

Hospital Building

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to review the capital works programme for hospital building within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: I am content to leave the review of the programme to the health authorities responsible for its management in the knowledge that our increased capital allocations will permit investment in the modernisation of the National Health Service to be sustained at record levels. Capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services in 1989-90 is planned to reach £1·2 billion, an increase in real terms of 41 per cent. over the 1978-79 level.

Hospitals (Charity Appeals)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of equipment is raised for National Health Service hospitals by charity appeals.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that information on the percentage of National Health Service hospitals equipment expenditure met from funds raised by charity appeals is not available.

Genito-urinary Clinics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent action he has taken to encourage Waltham Forest district health authority to provide a genito-urinary clinic.

Mr. Freeman: Planning of health services within a particular area is a matter for the health authority concerned, which is best able to judge the priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (i) deaf-blind adults and (ii) deaf-blind children there are in Britain; and how long it is since the last survey was made.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of adults and children in England who were registered with local authorities as blind with an additional handicap of deafness are recorded in "Registered Blind and Partially Sighted Persons at 31 March 1986—England". A copy of this publication is in the Library. The most recent collection of these statistics related to 31 March 1988 and will be published in due course.

Registration of disability is a voluntary process. The numbers of deaf-blind adults and children in the population are believed to be considerably greater than the numbers who register but no reliable estimate is available.

Young Persons (Remands)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will arrange urgently for appropriate accommodation to be provided for the 15-year-old who has twice been remanded to an adult prison from Crewe juvenile court; and what secure accommodation is available for young people in the north-west.

Mr. Mellor: The provision of appropriate accommodation for children in care is the statutory responsibility of local authorities. I understand that Cheshire county council has been unable to find a secure vacancy in a community home for the boy referred to, although it continues to make urgent inquiries.

There are currently 294 approved secure places provided by local authorities in England, to which all local authorities have access. Local authorities in the north-west provide 65 of these places.

ENVIRONMENT

Elephant Ivory

71. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ban all imports of elephant ivory.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Imports of ivory are controlled under EC Regulation 3626/82 which implements CITES in the Community. The European Commission has suggested measures to encourage African states to comply with the existing strict controls and to develop management programmes. These proposals were welcomed by the Council of Ministers on 2 March.

Water Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (i) all the bodies concerned with research on pollution in water and (ii) the research projects funded or sponsored by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Howard: A list of the bodies known to the Department to be concerned with research on pollution in water has been placed in the Library of each House together with a list of research projects that the Department is funding or sponsoring, excluding research on radioactive waste disposal and drinking water quality. I do not have the information on research projects for other Government Departments.

Tobacco Companies (Sports Sponsorship)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current annual total of sponsorship of sports by tobacco companies; if he will list these individually and in relation to other commercial sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The total expenditure on sports sponsorship by tobacco companies in 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, was £5,911,000. No information is held centrally on expenditure by individual companies. The Sports Council estimates that in 1987 sports sponsorship by non-tobacco companies was some £158 million.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to write off the loan debt of the present water authorities in England prior to implementation of the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has no powers at present to write off any of the debts of the water authorities.

Water Quality

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the present levels of cleanliness of Southampton Water and the Solent, respectively; and how those levels match up to European Economic Community standards.

Mr. Howard: The relevant standards are those set in Directive 79/923/EEC, on the quality of water for shellfish, and in Directive 76/160/EEC on the quality of bathing water. There are five designated shellfish waters in Southampton Water and the Solent. All meet the directive's standards.

I announced on 21 February 1989 at column 572 the results of the 1988 survey of bathing water in England, Northern Ireland and Wales. The results for identified bathing waters in the Southampton Water and Solent area are:

	Result
Bracklesham Bay	Pass
West Wittering	Pass
West of Eastoke	Pass
West Hayling	Pass

	Result
Eastney	Fail
Southsea	Fail
Stokes Bay	Pass
Lee-on-Solent	Pass
Calshot	Fail
Lepe	Pass
Highcliffe	Pass
Compton Bay	Pass
Totland Bay	Pass
Colwell Bay	Fail
Gurnard	Fail
Cowes	Fail
Ryde	Fail
Seagrove	Fail
St. Helens	Fail
Bembridge	Fail

The Southern water authority plans to spend about £30 million over the next few years on major schemes to improve bathing waters in this area.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present level of cleanliness of the principal rivers in Hampshire; and to what extent they meet European Economic Community standards.

Mr. Howard: The principal rivers in Hampshire are classified as good quality (class 1A or 1B) for virtually all their length. These are the highest quality classifications, indicating waters which are suitable for potable supply, generally support game fisheries and have high amenity value.

Significant stretches of these rivers and their main tributaries, are designated under EEC Directive 78/659/EEC on the quality of freshwater needed to support fish life. All are reported to be meeting the directive's standards.

Land Disposal Policy

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the disposal of operational land surplus to requirements other than by public tender by the regional water authorities, the Central Electricity Generating Board, and the British Railways Board, respectively; and in what circumstances each of these categories of body may dispose of such land without the publication of either the purchase price or name of the purchaser;

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the publication of the names or organisations or individuals who are successful in public tenders for land, goods, or premises being sold by central Government, local Government, and statutory bodies, respectively.

Mr. Chope: All public bodies are expected to offer surplus land and property for sale as soon as practicable. The method of sale may differ between Departments, local authorities and other bodies, depending on the nature of the asset to be sold, any relevant legal requirements, the application of the Crichel Down rules, the need to obtain the best price reasonably obtainable and other market and commercial factors.

It is for individual public bodies to decide what information to make available about individual land transactions, having regard to any legal requirements, and to any constraints which may apply by reason of commercial confidentiality or security.

Water Supply Tariffs

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those tariff increases for water supply from 1 April so far announced by the statutory water companies; and if he will make a statement about any action proposed by him in respect of these increases.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning on 14 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel).

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part the Property Services Agency has played in promoting energy efficiency on the Government estate.

Mr. Chope: Energy efficiency is given a high priority by the PSA on sound environmental grounds and because it saves public expenditure. PSA, working in close co-operation with other Government Departments, promotes energy-saving measures for most Government buildings. Through its network of energy conservation officers the agency is able to provide Departments with a complete energy management service.

Since 1972 average savings of over 25 per cent.—over £900 million at current prices—have been achieved. Current savings are over 5 per cent. per annum in real terms on the Government's total energy bill (1987-88) of over £250 million.

Tenants' Choice

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to implement the tenants' choice provisions in part IV of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: Regulations have today been laid before Parliament to implement the tenants' choice scheme on 5 April. Tenants who wish to know more about choosing a new landlord are being invited, by means of advertisements in several national newspapers, to contact the Housing Corporation for an explanatory booklet about the scheme, and for any further advice, information or assistance they may need.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there will be special share offer arrangements for the employees of the privatised water authorities.

Mr. Howard: The Government welcome the opportunity which privatisation of the water industry will bring for employees of the new water plcs to take a stake in the future of their companies. There will therefore be special share offer arrangements, which will include: free shares, further free shares to match those bought by employees, and possibly shares at a discount. Plc employees will also be given priority in the allocation of shares in the offer.

The exact details of the benefits to be made available in this way will be decided nearer the time. There will be special arrangements for employees of the water authorities who move to the new plcs and will not therefore apply to employees of the water authorities who move to the National Rivers Authority, the body which will be set up to exercise regulatory functions in relation to the water industry.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the National Rivers Authority powers to borrow in order to finance its flood defence work.

Mr. Ridley: I am happy today to announce our decision that the National Rivers Authority should have borrowing powers in relation to its flood defence functions. This decision recognises the importance which is widely attached to the availability of borrowing powers to cope with the need for unexpected expenditure. It meets this concern and demonstrates the Government's firm commitment to ensure that the NRA has all the powers it needs to operate effectively.

Accordingly, we have today tabled an amendment to the Water Bill that will enable the NRA to undertake not only temporary borrowing, for which the Bill already provides, but long-term borrowing for its flood defence functions. We do not expect that these powers will need to be used very often, and their use will be restricted to situations where the NRA is faced with expenditure for which it had been impossible to plan.

With the addition of these powers the National Rivers Authority's Flood defence committees will have all the powers it needs to continue its vital work as effectively as it has in the past.

Power Boats

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will hold consultations with local authorities on measures which might be taken to reduce the danger to swimmers from power boats travelling close inshore off bathing beaches;

(2) if he will introduce regulations to provide for the marking of areas off bathing beaches where power boats are prohibited.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Local authorities already have powers to make byelaws to make provision for the safety of the public in these circumstances; and I consider that they are best placed to determine what measures should be taken.

Water (Nitrate Levels)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water abstraction plants for domestic use in the Yorkshire and Severn Trent regions are complying with EEC limits on the nitrate levels in water supply; which are not; and on what dates each of the plants which are not complying will comply with the limits.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The EC drinking water directive nitrate standard applies to water as supplied to the consumer, not to water as it leaves the abstraction plant as this takes no account of subsequent blending with other water. The standard is therefore, measured in relation to water supply areas rather than abstraction plants.

All water supply areas in Yorkshire water authority comply with the EC directive nitrate standard. In the Severn-Trent water authority area the following supplies do not comply but should do so by the date shown.

	Date
Parts of Leamington, Kenilworth, Warwick and Stratford district councils	1989
Parts of Stourbridge (supply used only at times of peak demand)	end 1989
Malvern Hills/Wyre Forest district council area	1989
Parts of Wrekin DC area	1989
Parts of Lichfield DC area, Sutton Coldfield (Birmingham Metropolitan) area, North Warwickshire and Walsall metropolitan area[1]	1993-94
Parts of Worksop and Mansfield Woodhouse (Bassetlaw and Mansfield DC areas)	1991
Parts of South Shropshire DC area	1990
Parts of Newark district council area	1989

[1] These supplies are made by the South Staffordshire waterworks company.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each water authority area in England the number of sewage treatment works which discharge effluent below the required standard.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 December 1988 at column 194.

The figures for 1988 are not yet available, but indications are that they will show a further improvement.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Ridley At present, some 60 officials in my Department spend more than half of their time on work related to the European Community. Information about travel and accommodation costs relating to official visits to Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg is not kept centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Low-level flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what classes of buildings are excluded as permissible simulated targets in the instructions to pilots concerning the types of ground features which can be selected during low-level training flights.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing further to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 30 January 1989, at columns 33 and 34.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any evidence that environmental restraints in low-flying training have been a contributory factor in recent low-flying accidents.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the inquiry into a low-flying incident over Llanilar, Dyfed, on 25 August 1988.

Mr. Neubert: As far as my Department is aware, there has been no report of an incident over Llanilar, Dyfed on 25 August 1988.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 1 July 1988, Official Report, column 400, if he will now declasify the instructions to Royal Air Force station commanders covering the investigation of complaints about low flying from members of the public.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what maximum permitted distance between initial point and simulated target is laid down in the regulations governing the conduct of low-level attack training sorties.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures pilots are instructed to take to alleviate noise disturbance when low flying at up to 550 knots in the run-up to simulated targets.

Mr. Neubert: Pilots engaged in low-flying training are instructed to keep any period of flight above the normal maximum cruising speeds to the minimum consistent with essential training requirements.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of periods of Royal Air Force police covert monitoring of low flying since 25 September 1987.

Mr. Neubert: Covert monitoring of low-flying activity since 25 September 1987 has been conducted at the following locations over the periods stated:

1988

14-18 March, Amble
25-28 April, Quedgeley and Hardwicke
26-27 April, Braunston
7 June, Farndon
14-16 June, Crediton
21-23 June, Kidwelly
22 June, Tumble
27-29 June, Stonehouse
28-30 June, Keswick
12 July, Hexham
12 July, Holme on Spalding Moor
18-21 July, Builth Wells
26-27 July, Machynlleth
23-25 August, Morpeth
6-8 September, Halesworth
11-13 October, Melrose
18-20 October, Milford Haven
Late October/early November, Redburn
15-17 November, Newark/Farndon

1989

6-9 February, Upper Chute
21-22 February, Market Bosworth

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since 1979 when Royal Air Force police covert monitoring of low flying has detected breaches of low-flying regulations.

Mr. Neubert: The detailed information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate effort. Surveys do however indicate that pilots have a healthy respect for the low-flying regulations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the aircraft handling reasons for United States Air Force F111 aircraft being permitted to fly at 480 knots in the low-flying system, as stated in his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 451.

Mr. Neubert: Because of the aerodynamic characteristics of the F111 aircraft, its handling properties are enhanced at a speed of 480 knots compared with a speed of 450 knots.

Tornado Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those accidents to Tornado aircraft in which failure or malfunction of the fly-by-wire system was a contributory factor.

Mr. Neubert: There is no evidence that any such RAF Tornado accidents have occurred.

Helicopters (Flying Practice)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom which are cleared for use by military helicopters practising flying underneath high voltage power lines.

Mr. Neubert: All aspects of this training activity, including the areas used, are currently under review.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements there are for consulting consumers in the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to the hon. Member.

Computer Safety

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the security of his Department's computer files is regularly checked for breaches by computer hackers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Where such access would constitute a security breach, yes.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action is taken in his Department to guard against intrusive information technology practices by unauthorised internal or external electronic intruders;

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that information transferred within and without his Department via computer is safe from internal or external interference;

(3) what steps his Department has undertaken to guard against the unauthorised access of sensitive defence information files stored on computer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the interest of national security, the nature and extent of the security counter-measures used to protect Ministry of Defence computer systems from authorised access cannot be revealed.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the potential effects of unauthorised access via computer of information held by his Department on the nation's security.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The potential effect of unauthorised access to the Ministry of Defence's information is indicated by the security classifications given to such material, viz:

TOP SECRET
Information and material the unauthorised disclosure of which would cause EXCEPTIONALLY GRAVE DAMAGE to the nation.

SECRET
Information and material the unauthorised disclosure of which would cause SERIOUS INJURY to the interests of the nation.

CONFIDENTIAL
Information and material the unauthorised disclosure of which would be PREJUDICIAL to the interests of the nation.

RESTRICTED
Information and material the unauthorised disclosure of which would be UNDESIRABLE in the interests of the nation.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to prevent the extraction of sensitive international defence material by computer, in the light of the recent problems uncovered in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It will not be clear whether any change in Ministry of Defence security policy is necessary following recent events in West Germany until our investigations are complete.

Confidential Information

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the steps taken by the United Kingdom's allies to protect confidential defence information.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence security authorities have all the information necessary to determine that the security policies of the United Kingdom's allies are comparable and compatible with Ministry of Defence security policy where the handling of Ministry of Defence material is involved.

Equal Pay

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department with regard to equal pay for equivalent work in the three armed services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The pay levels of service personnel are recommended by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body based on a system of job evaluation and comparability with civilian jobs of a similar weight. Job evaluation makes no distinction between service men and service women. However, service men's pay contains a 10 per cent. enhancement (the X factor) to compensate for the overall balance of advantage and disadvantage of service life, while service women receive an X factor of 9 per cent. because they are not liable for direct combat duties.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the stockpile of chemical warfare agents held by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union has the largest and most sophisticated chemical warfare capability in the world. Our estimate is that the Soviet stockpile of chemical warfare agents is several times larger than the 50,000 tonnes which it claims.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. Costs of travel and accommodation are not kept in a form that separately identifies EC-related work.

PRIME MINISTER

Press Freedom

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what reply she has sent to the recent letter sent to her by PEN American centre in respect of press freedom and individual rights in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no record of receiving such a letter.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister what is the annual total level of expenditure on special advisers attached to Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The current annual salary cost is approximately £935,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufactured Trade Deficit

73. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his projections for the deficit in manufactured trade for 1989.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit in manufactured trade in 1989 of £15½ billion.

Trade Deficit

74. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he now expects the trade deficit in 1989 to be.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit for visible trade in 1989 of £21½ billion.

Trade Balance

75. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects Britain's trade balance to be in surplus.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 published on 14 March 1989 provides forecasts of the visible trade balance for 1989 and the current acount balance for 1989 and the first half of 1990. Forecasts for later years are not published.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Communities Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Brooke: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 13 March. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council discussed the Commission's first quarterly examination of the economic situation in the Community.

The Council heard a presentation from the Commission on the 10th anniversary of the European monetary system. Ministers discussed preparations for the spring meetings of the IMF and IBRD to be held in April in Washington. Ministers took note of the latest United States suggestions for strengthening the debt strategy and reaffirmed that the key to the resolution of debt problems is the implementation of economic policy reform in the debtor countries.

The Council discussed the European Court of Auditors report for 1987; I emphasised the importance of the court's work in helping to get better value for money and in combating fraud. The Council approved the recommendation to the European Parliament on discharge of the 1987 accounts.

The Council endorsed a declaration on fraud which foreshadowed new or revised proposals in a number of areas, notably export refunds and intervention storage; and which promised an annual report by the Commission on fraud and an early discussion of key issues chaired by the head of the Commission's anti-fraud unit. The Council will return to the subject of fraud in the near future.

Share Ownership

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of share ownership in Great Britain.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A joint Treasury/stock exchange survey carried out in January and February of this year shows that:

9 million people, or 20 per cent. of the adult population, now own shares, the same as one year ago, and compared to seven per cent. in 1979;

13 per cent. hold shares in privatised companies, and five per cent. own only privatised shares;

3 per cent. hold shares in the company for which they work;

Share ownership is widely spread; two-thirds of British shareholders come from outside the ranks of managers and the professionals; similarly, almost two-thirds come from outside the south-east.

I am placing copies of the results of the survey in the Libraries of both Houses.

Press and PR

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, in the press and public relations office of the Treasury; and what is the proposed complement for 1989-90.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The number of press and public relations staff employed in the Treasury on 1 March 1989 was 10 and the budgeted provision was 10; the budgeted provision for 1989-90 is 10.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Treasury on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The estimated expenditure for 1988-89 is £51,500, none of which is likely to be on television or radio advertising; the 1989-90 budget is £50,000, none of which is likely to be on television or radio advertising.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Treasury; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The information is as follows:

Staff in statistical divisions[1]

	Staff in Post 1 March 1989	Budgeted Complement 1988-89	Budgeted Complement 1989-90
Unified Grade 5[2]	2	2	2
Unified Grade 7[2]	8	8	8
SEO	4	4	4
HEO	5	5	5
Senior Assistant Statistician/ Assistant Statistician	4	4	4
EO	10	11	11
AO/AA	13	13	13
Total	46	47	47

[1] Defined as divisions headed by grade 5 chief statistician and employed mainly on statistical work. There are other statistician posts in HM Treasury which are not included in the above figures.
[2] At the senior levels of the service, where management forms a major component of most jobs, there are service-wide common pay and grading arrangements. These unified grades 1 to 7 are known as the open structure and cover grades from permanent secretary level to grade 7 level. Within the unified grades there are no formal barriers to movement between the former occupational groups, e.g. scientists, administrators, statisticians; each post should be filled by the person best equipped in terms of skills, ability and experience.

National Debt

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the reasons for the rise in the national debt from £186 billion at 31 March 1987 to £197 billion at 31 March 1988, in the light of the repayment of public sector debt in the same period of £3·6 billion.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The national debt is conventionally defined as the nominal liabilities of the national loans fund. Unlike the public sector net debt, it does not include borrowing by local authorities, nor does it net off assets such as the foreign exchange reserves.

The main reason why the liabilities of the national loans fund increased in 1987-88, despite the public sector debt repayment, was because sterling was drawn from the national loans fund to finance a substantial rise in the gold and foreign exchange reserves. There are, however, a great many differences between the two concepts, and a full explanation is given on pages 530-537 of the November 1988 Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chlorine Bleaching

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he intends to publish his report on the investigations he has carried out within his areas of responsibility into chlorine bleached packaging, dioxins and food.

Mr. Ryder: My Ministry's food science laboratory has just completed its preliminary research into the migration of dioxins from food packaging material and the results are now being evaluated.

Pests

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service research and development report, "Mammal and Bird Pests, 1985."

Mr. Ryder: The 1985 ADAS research and development report on mammal and bird pests is on pages 67-76 of the 1985 research and development report of ADAS. I am arranging for copies to be deposited in the Library as soon as possible.

Hens' Eggs (Imports)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of import of hens' eggs; and if he will identify the main source of such imports by country and volume.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest monthly data from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise show that 39,910 boxes of hens' eggs (containing 360 eggs per box) were imported into the United Kingdom in January 1989. Of these 23,733 boxes came from the Netherlands, 7,478 boxes from the Federal Republic of Germany, 4,542 boxes from Denmark and 2,700 boxes from France.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans Her Majesty's Government have (i) to allow to be sold and (ii) to require labelling for consumers, foods and food ingredients which have been treated with ionising radiation: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 21 February at column 600.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of civil servants in his Ministry whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The work undertaken by my Department as a consequence of the United Kingdom's membership of the European Community cannot easily be distinguished from other work. It is not possible, therefore, to give precise information on the number of staff whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the EC. However, we estimate that between one quarter and one third of the Department's manpower, including common service and support staff, are concerned directly or indirectly with duties arising out of EC membership. At 31 January 1989 this amounted approximately to between 2,500 amd 3,400 staff.

The gross cost of travel and subsistence by Ministers and officials attending meetings of institutions of the European Community in 1987-88, the latest financial year for which figures are available, was:

Travel and allied charges	480,058
Subsistence	291,313
	771,371

The bulk of travel costs is recoverable from Community funds. it is not possible to identify costs relating specifically to meetings held in Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg, or those on EC matters not held under the auspices of the Community.

The 950 staff of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce are entirely engaged on work related to the European Community. The gross cost in 1987-88 of foreign travel and subsistence, almost all of which relates to meetings of institutions of the European Community, was £42,612.

Tuberculosis (Deer)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he will introduce a scheme to make tuberculosis a notifiable disease so far as farmed deer are concerned;

(2) when he expects to be able to announce details of a scheme providing for the notification, compulsory slaughter, and full cash compensation for farmed deer infected with tuberculosis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I intend to introduce measures shortly to make TB in deer a notifiable disease. The question of a compulsory slaughter with compensation scheme is being considered in the light of the response to the recent consultation letter seeking views on the possibility of an industry-funded arrangement.

Internal Drainage Boards

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of those internal drainage boards which are not covered by the constitutional and electoral arrangements contained in schedule 2 to the Land Drainage Act 1976, by virtue of the fact that they were constituted before 1930; and what steps have been taken to apply schedule 2 electoral arrangements to these boards.

Mr. Ryder: The following internal drainage boards are not considered to be covered by the constitutional and electoral arrangements in schedule 2 to the Land Drainage Act 1976:

Othery, Middlezoy and Westonzoyland
Lower Axe
Lower Brue
Stockland
Upper Axe
Upper Brue
West Sedgemoor
Bridgwater and Pawlett
Cannington and Wembdon
King Sedgemoor and Carey Valley
Langport

Information was last provided in 1985. Since then, one internal drainage board has been abolished and another, Wilberfoss and Thornton Level, is currently being reconstituted.

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend, the Minister, laid before Parliament on 10 March the Dairy Produce Regulations 1989, which replace similar regulations made in 1986 and amended in 1988 and earlier this year.

The new regulations introduce changes to the quota transfer rules, including new procedures for the appointment of arbitrators in cases of dispute. They take into account changes in European Community legislation which affect the calculation of liability to supplementary levy. A number of redundant provisions, most of them relating to the allocations of new quota rights, have not been re-enacted. Other changes have been made to clarify the meaning of certain provisions in the light of experience.

Cook-chill Food

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the marketing of cooked-chilled food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has received various representations on the marketing of cook-chill foods and, as I told the House on 21 February at columns 873-74, we are considering the making of regulations.

EMPLOYMENT

Skills Shortage

72. Mr Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what long-term plans he has to counteract the skills shortage in the south east of England.

Mr. Nicholls: The steps taken by the Government to tackle skills shortage in all regions are set out in the training section of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" published in December.

Training Places (Ardrossan-Saltcoats)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training places were allocated to the Ardrossan-Saltcoats area; how many have been filled; and if any change in the number of allocated places is proposed.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available in the form requested. In the Training Agency's Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway area office, of which the Ardrossan-Saltcoats area forms a part, there are currently 4,088 places available. Of these 2,526 were filled at 3 March. After just six months this is a very satisfactory take-up of employment training by unemployed people who are clearly attracted to a high quality programme. There are no plans to reduce the number of places in the Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway area.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will bring forward proposals to repeal those provisions of the national dock labour scheme which provide for registered port employers to be fined or imprisoned unless they use registered dock labour on cargo-handling work.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government's position on the scheme remains unchanged, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister confirmed in the House on 19 January 1989, Official Report, columns 481-82.

Over-50s (Employment)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the employment of workers aged over 50 years by British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so, but I am arranging to meet the appropriate CBI employer panel in the near future to discuss the issue of employment of older workers. It is both irresponsible and unfair to discriminate without justification on grounds of age. I am encouraged that the Confederation of British Industry is seeking to draw to all employers' attention the implications of current demographic trends, and in particular the decline in numbers of young people.

Job Clubs, Bristol

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to encourage the introduction of more job clubs in the Bristol travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: As announced in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 January 1989, Official Report, column 810, the job club network is being streamlined to take account of the present unemployment picture. The employment service is currently assessing the number of job clubs needed in the Bristol travel-to-work area and a decision is expected soon. More effective use of existing facilities, rather than additional job clubs, will be a key feature of the assessment. However, it is planned to substantially increase the number of participants in job clubs in the Avon area from around 1,300 members in 1988-89 to around 2,500 in 1989-90.

Child Care Facilities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in the light of his projection in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", that home working is likely to increase, what child care provision he is anticipating to cater for the needs of homeworkers with children in the under-fives age group.

Mr. Nicholls: Questions relating to day care provision for the under-fives are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Tourism

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to publish the report commissioned from P A Management Consultants on tourism in England and the role of the British Tourist Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans to publish the report, which is still under consideration. An announcement will be made in due course.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition Choice and Quality."

Mr. Cope: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by the BBC. It will be for the new channel 3 and 5 licensees to consider whether they will broadcast such messages. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television and commercial radio will not be affected by the proposals.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to find suitable jobs which can be carried out by deaf-blind people.

Mr. Lee: Deaf-blind people have access to the full range of employment and training services provided by or through my Department, including the specialist services for people with disabilities. These include specialist assessment rehabilitation and placing provision for people with visual handicaps, training within employment training tailored to individual need, the special aids to employment scheme (which makes available the wide range of technical aids relevant to the needs of people with visual or hearing impairments), and the sheltered employment programme, which subsidises the employment of people with severe disabilities in sheltered workshops or in sheltered placements with employers.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Cope: The number of civil servants in my Department whose main task is work wholly or mainly related to the European Economic Community is 33, including clerical and secretarial staff. Of these, 24 staff are concerned with the administration of United Kingdom applications for grants from the European social fund. The gross annual cost in the year to 10 March 1989 of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work is £14,233.

Textile Industry (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people employed in the West Yorkshire wool textile industry for each year from 1975 to 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The available information from censuses of employment is given in the table. Because of changes in the standard industrial classification and in the compilation of county data, the most recent September 1989 and 1984 estimates are not strictly comparable with those for earlier years. More up-to-date estimates from the September 1987 census of employment will become available later this year.

There are also differences in the industry classification, 1968 SIC differs from the 1980 SIC, for instance, in including the manufacturing of pressed and woven felt and baize.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Expenditure in the Department of Employment group, including the Training Agency and the employment service, in each year from 1984-85 to 1987-88 on management consultancy was as follows:

	£ thousands
1984-85	365
1985-86	365
1986-87	1,032
1987-88	653

The estimate outturn for the current year (1988-89) is around £950,000.

Information for the period from 1979-80 to 1983-84 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what percentage, of full-time female workers in Derbyshire earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold in the figures for the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Ruthergen (Mr. McAvoy) on 8 March 1989 at columns 569-70.

Statistical Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in the Manpower Services Commission; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90;

(2) if he will give the latest figures for the number of staff presently employed, and the full complement of staff including vacant posts, by grade, in the statistical divisions in his Department; if he will differentiate between staff in statistical posts and staff in administrative posts; and if he will give the staffing complements by grade, and differentiated between statistical and administrative posts, proposed for 1989-90.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Staff of what was the Manpower Services Commission are now in the Training Agency and employment service of my Department. The information requested on staff presently employed is given in the table. The staffing levels for 1989-90 are not expected to be significantly different from current levels.

Employment Training

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) dated 17 January, Official Report, column 172, information on the numbers in employment training schemes in inner city areas has yet been made available.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of people on employment training at 3 March was 164,000; of these, 42 per cent. or about 70,000 were in training in inner city areas.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his Department treats as a reasonable amount for trainees on an ET scheme to spend on weekly travel from their home to their place of training.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 10 March 1989]: ET trainees are expected to meet the first £5 of their weekly travel costs. Costs in excess of £5 a week are reimbursed in full.

ENERGY

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to be answerable in Parliament for statements made outside Parliament by Ministers in his Department on matters for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Parkinson: Ministers in charge of Departments are answerable to Parliament for statements made by Ministers in their Departments on matters for which they have responsibility.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition Choice and Quality".

Mr. Parkinson: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by the BBC. It will be for the new Channel 3 and 5 licensees to consider whether they will broadcast such messages. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television will not be affected by the proposals.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Parkinson: There are 12 civil servants engaged wholly or mainly on EEC work and the cost of travel and subsistence for 1988 was about £6,000, most of which is reimbursed by the Commission.

Dungeness B

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of constructing Dungeness B power station; what is its percentage of availability for each year since completion; what is the total amount spent on maintenance and repairs since completion; and what is the current availability of the station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Reactor Welds (Bradwell)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will call for a report from Her Majesty's chief inspector of nuclear installations on his decision with respect to the use of ultrasonic methods to inspect reactor welds at Bradwell nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Inspections of the pressure circuit are part of the normal examinations carried out at each regular biennial inspection as required under the site licence. The Health and Safety Executive has accepted the Central Electricity Generating Board's proposal for a combination of ultrasonic and visual inspections as part of the programme of work during the shutdown of Bradwell for its biennial inspection.

The nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive will review the results of the inspections as they proceed. The nuclear installations inspectorate's consent will be required before the reactor can be restarted.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office

13. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last had discussions with Sir Bryan Nicholson of the Post Office; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Forth: I meet the Post Office chairman regularly, and last did so on 1 March. We discussed a range of matters of current interest.

Mobile Telecommunications

19. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the potential for expansion in the market for mobile telecommunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We see considerable potential. My announcement to the House on 26 January about personal telecommunications set out the steps we are taking to enable that potential to be realised.

Car Batteries

20. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on import penetration of car batteries.

Mr. Atkins: Information on car batteries alone is not available. For automotive batteries in total, it is estimated that in the first three quarters of 1988, import penetration was approximately 30 per cent.

Enterprise Initiative

21. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many businesses have participated in the Government's enterprise initiative scheme.

Mr. Forth: I am pleased to say that over 85,000 firms have "taken the initiative" by seeking detailed information about the self-help package of assistance available under the enterprise initiative.

Inner City Task Forces

22. Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the leaders of the inner city task forces; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met task force leaders as a group at their half-yearly meeting in Liverpool on Friday 9 December. Our discussions ranged over a variety of matters, including the importance of developing the capacity of local groups and community organisations to build on task forces' work after the departure of the task forces themselves. I have subsequently met on other occasions the task force leaders in Preston, Rochdale, Doncaster, Hartlepool, Leeds and Middlesbrough.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

23. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest round of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) on 12 December at column 400.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if it remains the negotiating position of the European Economic Community, after the breakdown of the mid-term review of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, Uruguay round, that the principal of selectivity should be introduced into article XIX of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Forth: The European Community is committed to seeking an improved safeguards clause under article XIX of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, which would permit effective action to be taken subject to agreed tests and disciplines. We consider this will help strengthen the general agreement on tariffs and trade and may facilitate the process of trade liberalisation by providing a more reliable "safety-valve". One of the key issues in the negotiations will be whether safeguard action can be taken selectively. It is the Community's view that this possibility exists. However the Community has not expressed a firm position on this issue in the current multi-lateral trade negotiations, believing it to be important that all options should remain open for discussion at this stage of the negotiations if a comprehensive solution is to be found.

Electrical Goods

24. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current balance of trade position in electronics and electrical goods.

Mr. Forth: In 1988, exports of electronic and electrical goods amounted to £11·4 billion while imports were £15·3 billion, leaving a crude trade deficit of £3·9 billion.

Hearing Aids

25. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what study his Department has conducted into the number of people buying hearing aids privately.

Mr. Forth: None. Such surveys are not carried out by this Department but I understand that the number of hearing aids privately dispensed each year is approximately 80,000.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received concerning the conduct of private hearing aid dispensers.

Mr. Forth: My Department has received three representations concerning the conduct of private hearing aid dispensers in the last year.

Trade Deficit

26. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will initiate an inquiry into the causes of the size of the United Kingdom's trade deficit with the European Economic Community in relation to that of the rest of the world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

58. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which European Economic Community members Britain's trade is in deficit.

Mr. Newton: In the 12 months to January the United Kingdom was in deficit on visible trade with Belgium/Luxembourg, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal.

Single Market

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received about preparations for the single market in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We constantly receive an encouragingly high number of representations from all sectors of British business. All have warmly welcomed the continuing high priority which the Government are giving to completing the single market and the steps that we are taking to encourage British business to take action to prepare for the challenge ahead.

49. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent estimate his Department has made of the effects of 1992 on the manufacturing sector.

Mr. Atkins: The single European market will present opportunities and challenges for a wide range of United Kingdom business sectors. Realising the potential gains to any one sector of the economy will depend on the flexibility of United Kingdom firms in that sector in responding to the removal of the barriers.

59. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent estimates his Department have made on the effects of 1992 on Britain's regions.

Mr. Atkins: The completion of the single market means greater freedom of trade, and many studies have demonstrated the benefits of that. The single market will bring opportunities for business in all parts of the country. We are seeking to ensure that business in every region takes the necessary action to respond effectively to the opportunities and challenges ahead.

Overseas Assets

28. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current net value of British companies' overseas assets.

Mr. Forth: The latest available estimate relates to the end of 1987. The book value of direct investment abroad by United Kingdom companies at the end of 1987 was estimated to be £91 billion. The book value of foreign direct investment in the United Kingdom was estimated to be £53 billion and the net book value of overseas direct investment at the end of 1987 was estimated to be £38 billion.

Copyright

29. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the Government's plans to ensure that the provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 are not vitiated by the European Economic Community in legislation arising out of the European Economic Community Commission's Green Paper "Copyright and the Challenge of New Technology."

Mr. Forth: The provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 were adopted after careful consideration with all affected parties. Consultations are continuing on matters arising from the Commission's Green Paper. We shall therefore be well placed to represent the interests of the United Kingdom in negotiations on any proposals for Community legislation in this area.

Barlow Clowes

30. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made towards obtaining reimbursement for those affected by the British-based and Gibraltar-based elements of the Barlow Clowes organisation; what initiatives have been taken by his Department in the last six months; what initiatives he will now take to seek a speedier resolution of outstanding problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: On the matter of reimbursement for investors in Barlow Clowes, I understand that an interim payment of 75p in the pound was made to a minority of investors in the United Kingdom fund (Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers) before Christmas. The remaining investors in the United Kingdom fund received an interim payment of 25p in the pound in January. The position for investors in the Gibraltar fund (Barlow Clowes International) is not as promising but I understand that the liquidators hope to make a small interim payment to those investors as soon as possible this year.

Developments have also been taking place on the roles played by some of the other parties involved in this case. My right hon. and noble Friend has invited a number of regulatory bodies to examine Sir Godfray Le Quesne's report and see whether there were matters for them to consider. The Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers' Regulatory Association has undertaken its own investigations and recommended that disciplinary action be taken against 19 of its members involved with the case, of which three have been suspended. Those suspended are the Investments and Pensions Advisory Service Ltd. and D. C. Wilson and Gordon Pettie Advisory Services. The Investments and Pensions Advisory Service is in liquidation following a winding up petition by the Securities and Investments board and D. C. Wilson has gone into voluntary liquidation.

On 4 January the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales announced that a committee of inquiry was being set up under the joint disciplinary scheme to look into the role of the auditors involved in this case.

The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration is looking into complaints that he has received about the handling of the Barlow Clowes case by my Department. The timing of the Commissioner's work is a matter for him, but my Department is co-operating with him and we shall consider carefully any report that he may make.

Manufacturing Investment

31. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest figure for the level of manufacturing investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988 manufacturing investment, including leased asset and at 1985 prices on the provisional estimate, amounted to £11 billion, nearly 10 per cent. higher than in 1987. In his Financial Statement and Budget Report, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast further strong growth in business investment. This is supported by the Department of Trade and Industry's latest investment intentions survey and that conducted by the CBI.

64. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects manufacturing investment to return to its 1979 level.

Mr. Atkins: Manufacturing investment in real terms in 1988 on the provisional estimate was close to its 1979 level and 10 per cent. higher than in 1987. In his Financial Statement and Budget Report, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast further strong growth in business investment. This is supported by the Department of Trade and Industry's latest investment intentions survey and that conducted by the CBI.

Trade Figures

32. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has held recent discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts in the Council of Ministers on problems associated with different trade figures in the United Kingdom and other member states and on comparative statistics and measurements in these various figures.

Mr. Newton: No. There will be discussions in the Council of Ministers later this year on a proposal for an EC Council regulation on the statistics of trading between member states after 1992. If my hon. Friend has a particular problem in mind perhaps he would write to me.

1992 Campaign

33. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the achievements of his 1992 campaign.

Mr. Forth: Since the campaign was launched the DTI has handled around 200,000 requests for further information. Now over 90 per cent. of firms throughout the country recognise the significance of the single market challenge and around 50 per cent. of British business is taking action or considering steps to prepare for the single market.

Cellular Radio

34. Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department has taken to relieve congestion in the cellular radio network.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has already announced the extension of the availability of 400 radio channels, until now reserved for Ministry of Defence use save in central London, out to the area embraced by the M25 and five miles beyond.

Hearing Aid Council

35. Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last reviewed the Hearing Aid Council's code of practice.

Mr. Forth: The Hearing Aid Council Act does not require or permit the Secretary of State to review the council's code of practice. The Act requires the Secretary of State to approve the code proposed by the council and any amendments that it proposes to it. The Secretary of State can make his approval conditional upon certain modifications.

Action for Cities

36. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many offers of assistance have resulted from the action for cities presentations.

Mr. Newton: More than 400 of the firms represented at the seven action for cities working breakfasts held during 1988 expressed an interest in supporting the Government's inner city initiatives.

CBI

37. Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and what was discussed.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster last met the CBI on 24 November 1988 when he spoke at its conference on "Business Opportunities in Urban Regeneration".

Imports

38. Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Government have any proposals to reduce imports by stimulating greater United Kingdom production in specific sectors.

Mr. Atkins: Is it not for government to tell industry what to produce or how much. The greatest encouragement to buy British is the availability of competitive British goods and services. My Department's policies are geared to helping businesses achieve this.

1992 Hotline

39. Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many calls have been received to date by his Department's 1992 hotline.

Mr. Forth: Our 1992 hotline has received over 117,000 calls since it opened on 18 March 1988.

Alnwick and Amble

40. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received about assistance from the United Kingdom or European funds for the Alnwick and Amble area.

Mr. Atkins: I have received representations in favour of the Alnwick and Amble travel-to-work-area's claims to assistance from the Community's reformed structural funds. I had already put a case on behalf of the area to the European Commission. The Commission announced on 8 March its intention of designating Alnwick and Amble travel-to-work-area for assistance under the funds' new objective 2.

EC Regional Development Fund

41. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the value of grants allocated to England from the European regional development fund since its inception.

Mr. Atkins: A total of £1,602 million.

Interest Rates

42. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the cost to manufacturing industry of the rise in base rates since April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available for manufacturing industry separately. The hon. Member should bear in mind, however, that a one percentage point increase in interest rates, even if sustained for a full year, costs companies far less than a one percentage point increase in pay settlements.

61. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the annual cost to industry of recent rises in interest rates.

Mr. Atkins: The cost to industrial and commercial companies in the year to date of the changes in bank base rates, compared with the cost if they had remained the same as a year ago, is estimated to be about £0·8 billion. The hon. Member should bear in mind, however, that a one percentage point increase in interest rates, even if sustained for a full year, costs companies far less than a one percentage point increase in pay settlements.

62. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the effects of current interest rates on industry.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a number of representations from business about the effects of interest rates on cash flow and investment. Investment intentions remain strong, however, and the representations show overwhelming support for firm action to curb inflation.

Inward Investment

43. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of how many jobs have been created by inward investment since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: According to the figures known to the Invest in Britain Bureau, since 1983 the following number of jobs have been created:

Year	Number
1983	15,546
1984	27,102
1985	26,331
1986	17,749
1987	21,301
[1]1988	18,307

[1] For the first three quarters only.

Industrial Research

44. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current level of long-term industrial research being undertaken in the United Kingdom for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Forth: Statistics on expenditure on long term industrial research undertaken by United Kingdom industry are not available. However expenditure on basic research and applied research performed by United Kingdom industry was some £154 million and £1,100 million, respectively, in 1985. DTI expenditure on Frascati R and D for 1988-89, including support for industrial R and D, is estimated to be £274 million (excluding civil aviation launch aid). In line with the policy of moving away from support for near market industrial R and D, most of this expenditure will be on longer-term R and D.

Overseas Companies

45. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas companies set up operations in Britain in 1988.

Mr. Forth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on 15 February at columns 245-46.

Liquidations

46. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many companies went into liquidation during 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There were 9,823 company insolvencies in Great Britain in 1988. This was about 17 per cent. lower than the corresponding figure of 11,895 in 1987.

Trade Surpluses

47. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which sectors of manufacturing Britain had a trade surplus in 1979; and in which Britain had a surplus in 1988.

Mr. Atkins: In 1979 the United Kingdom had a crude trade surplus in manufacturing trade in the following classes of the standard industrial classification:

Class 24 Non-metallic mineral products
Class 25 Chemicals
Class 26 Man-made fibres
Class 31 Metal goods
Class 32 Mechanical engineering
Class 34 Electrical and electronic engineering
Class 36 Other transport equipment
Class 48 Processing of rubber and plastics

In 1987, the last year for which data is available, industries with a trade surplus were:

Class 24 Non-metallic mineral products
Class 25 Chemicals
Class 32 Mechanical engineering
Class 36 Other transport equipment

Company Liquidity

48. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of company liquidity; and when it was last lower.

Mr. Forth: The liquidity ratio for all large industrial and commercial companies is estimated by the Department's survey to be 76 per cent. at the end of the fourth quarter of 1988 on a seasonally adjusted basis. This is the lowest figure since the end of the third quarter of 1982.

Consumers

51. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the rights of consumers.

56. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department plans any new initiatives in consumer protection; and if he will make a statement.

66. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has plans to bring forward legislation affecting consumer rights.

Mr. Forth: We plan to introduce regulations under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 (which came into force on 1 March) governing price indications at bureaux de change and the resale of electricity and gas by landlords. Proposals will shortly be made to implement two EC directives which require the selling and, where appropriate, the unit prices of foodstuffs and non-food products to be displayed.

We intend to amend the law on the sale and supply of goods following the Law Commissions' report and plan to amend the Consumer Credit Act and related legislation as set out in the recent White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (CM512). We shall also introduce revised regulations on pyramid selling.

55. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the principal consumer bodies; and what was the content of the discussions.

Mr. Forth: I visited the Welsh Consumer Council on 27 October 1988, the Consumers Association on 6 February 1989 and the National Consumer Council on 7 March 1989. On each occasion a number of current issues relevant to consumers were discussed. I also intend to visit the Scottish Consumer Council on 19 May.

Over the past six months I have also met the chairman of the National Industry Consumer/Consultative Councils to discuss matters within their areas of interest.

Regional Preferential Assistance

52. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the percentage change in real terms in regional preferential assistance since 1978-79.

Mr. Atkins: Expenditure in real terms on regional preferential assistance in Great Britain in 1987-88 was 56 per cent. lower than in 1978-79. Much of the reduction has arisen from steps taken to improve cost effectiveness in terms of creating jobs at a lower public expenditure cost.

Civil Research and Development

53. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries the proportion of gross domestic product spent by Government on civil research and development has fallen since 1983.

Mr. Forth: Of the twenty OECD member countries showing figures for 1983 and 1986, Australia, Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom recorded a fall in Government funding of civil research and development as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Consumer Affairs

54. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next proposes to meet the European Commissioner with responsibility for consumer affairs; and what matters he will raise.

Mr. Forth: I hope to meet Commissioner Van Miert again at the Council of Consumer Ministers which is provisionally planned for 1 June. The Spanish Presidency have yet to finalise the agenda for the Council.

Consumer Protection

57. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met his European Economic Community counterparts to discuss consumer protection; and what was the content of the discussions.

Mr. Forth: Neither my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster nor I, has yet had occasion to meet EC Community counterparts to discuss consumer protection. However, I have had general discussions on consumer issues with Commissioner Van Miert, and I hope to meet my Community colleagues at the Council of Consumer Ministers which the Spanish Presidency have provisionally planned for 1 June. I also hope to meet my French counterpart, Madame Neiertz, later this year for bilateral discussions.

Trade Deficit

60. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries are running a smaller trade deficit as a percentage of gross domestic product than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: OECD estimates for 1988 suggest that 12 countries ran deficits on their visible trade. In relation to their GDP, the following countries' deficits were smaller than that of the United Kingdom.

Italy, France, Norway, Switzerland, the United States, Austria and Iceland.

Trade Statistics

63. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if any changes are planned in the collection of trade statistics in preparation for 1992.

Mr. Forth: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 21 February at column 546.

Manufacturing Productivity

65. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which position Britain lies in an Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development league table for manufacturing productivity.

Mr. Atkins: No reliable comparison exists for absolute levels of productivity between different countries. But available figures do show that in the 1980s the United Kingdom has had the fastest rate of growth of manufacturing productivity of all the major industrialised countries.

Information Technology

67. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects Britain to have a trade surplus in information technology.

Mr. Forth: I do not know what the pattern of trade in information technology will be in the years ahead. That is something which will be determined primarily by industry and commerce.

Regional Policy

68. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he plans to announce any new initiatives to benefit Britain's regions.

Mr. Atkins: An effective range of measures designed to encourage enterprise and economic growth in all parts of the country is available from DTI under the enterprise initiative, with higher levels of assistance available to firms in the assisted areas and urban programme areas. Firms in assisted areas also benefit from assistance under the regional initiative.

Macdonald Report

69. Mr. Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the Macdonald report on communications infrastructure.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received a number of formal and informal comments on the communications steering group report "The Infrastructure for Tomorrow", sometimes referred to as the Macdonald report. The report was published in December as a contribution to the discussions on the United Kingdom's communications infrastructure needs.

Competitiveness

70. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from industry on matters affecting competitiveness.

Mr. Atkins: Most contacts which my Department has with industry and commerce involve matters having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness.

Hardwood Imports

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he proposes to take to prohibit imports of hardwoods obtained from rain forests.

Mr. Alan Clark: The subject is one of considerable and growing concern and I have had valuable and constructive discussions with Dr. Freezdilah, executive director of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, and emphasised to him that further measures, on a Community-wide basis, can not be excluded indefinitely if no progress is evident in the general field of conservation.

Butane Gas Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many retailers have been sent (a) his Department's guidance pack on the law in respect of the sale of butane gas canisters to minors and (b) his Department's warning notices on bulk packs of gas refills; what proportion of retailers selling these items this represents; and what response he has had on this matter.

Mr. Forth: The guidance packs for retailers, which give advice on how to recognise sniffers and refuse to sell solvent-based products to them, are funded by the Government and distributed by Re-Solv, the anti-solvent abuse charity, through trading standards departments of local authorities, and through the police. The intention is that all retailers should have a copy. There are some 290,000 retail establishments in the United Kingdom, and 300,000 guidance packs have been produced. Re-Solv has also devised a warning notice to retailers, for suppliers to put in bulk packs of butane lighter refills, and my Department has written to all known suppliers asking them to use them. The cost to suppliers is £9 per 1,000 notices.

M.F.B. Russell and Co. Ltd.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what documents relating to M. F. B. Russell and Co. Ltd. are currently in his safe-keeping.

Mr. Atkins: Following the making of a winding-up order against M. B. P. Russell and Co. Ltd. by the court the official receiver, who is an officer of my Department and of the court, recovered certain of the company's books and papers. Persons required under section 131 of the Insolvency Act 1986 to make out and submit a statement of the company's affairs may have access to these by arrangement and they may be inspected by creditors and contributories pursuant to a court order under section 155 of the Insolvency Act 1986.

Bananas

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the quantity of bananas imported in the most recent year for which figures are available into Britain from the Windward Isles; and what information he has on the percentage this is of the total banana exports of the Windward Isles.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom imported 128·7 thousand tonnes of fresh bananas originating from the Windward Isles in 1987. Information is not available on the percentage of total banana exports from the Windward Isles which this represents.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster from which countries bananas are imported into Britain; and if he will make a statement about banana imports after 1992.

Mr. Forth: In 1987, imports of fresh bananas originating from Jamaica, Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Belize and Surinam accounted for over 70 per cent. of United Kingdom total imports. A list showing all countries from which the United Kingdom imported bananas has been placed in the Library.

Projections of trade levels are not available.

Regional Development Organisation

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what level of financial support he is offering to the Regional Development Organisation in England for 1989-90.

Mr. Newton: I have offered the five English regional development organisations £3·005 million in grant aid for their inward investment promotion activities for 1989-90, over £214,700 more than in 1988-89. I have allocated the grant aid as follows:

	Up to £
Northern Development Company (in the North East)	981,750
Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association	660,000
INWARD Ltd. (in the North West)	541,000
West Midlands Industrial Development Association	400,000
Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau	422,000

In addition the Northern Development Company has also been offered grant aid of up to £200,000 for its wider activities aimed at the regeneration of the region.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department expects to make an announcement about Rolls-Royce's launch aid applications.

Mr. Atkins: After extensive discussions with my Department Rolls-Royce has decided to withdraw its application for launch aid for the development of the RB211-524J and 524L engines. The company considers that it will be able to finance the development from its own financial resources and from contributions from risk and revenue sharing partners. I wish the company every success with the launch of these engines.

Industry Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Industry Council held on 6 March.

Mr. Newton: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, agreed a common position on the financing of steel social measures and considered the use of the ECU in ECSC matters. The Commission made a statement on the restructuring of the Italian steel industry.

The Council also agreed a new SPRINT programme for technology transfer, and discussed the further promotion of European standards for high definition television (HDTV). Informal discussion also took place on the Communities shipbuilding and textile industries, and on small and medium sized enterprises.

Self-Employed Commercial Agents

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement regarding the implementation of the European Community directive on self-employed commercial agents.

Mr. Atkins: Our present intention is that the directive should be implemented by regulations under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. The regulations do not need to come into force before 1 January 1994 and will not be made before 1992.

Where the directive allows member states discretion our present conclusions in the light of consultations are as follows:

(a) Agents will be entitled to commission where they have an exclusive right to a specific geographical area or group of customers.

(b) On the termination of an agency contract, the agent will be entitled to compensation for damage in line with United Kingdom practice and not an "indemnity".

(c) The regulations will exclude from their scope those for whom acting as a commercial agent is a secondary business activity or for whom it is the sole business activity but still a secondary pursuit.

(d) There will be no requirement for agency contracts to be recorded in writing except where one party to the contract requests it.

(e) The maximum period of notice will be three months for a contract that has run three years or more.

(f) The principal will be required to notify the agent concerned within a reasonable period of his acceptance, refusal or non execution of a transaction, and also that goods have been delivered to the customer.

Nearer the time of making the implementing regulations, there will be further consultation as appropriate on the details.

British Film Fund Agency

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what sum of money was passed to the Secretary of State on dissolution of British Film Fund Agency; and to what purpose the money will be used.

Mr. Atkins: The residual moneys amounted to £6,377·27. This sum is being passed to the National Film and Television school for investment in a loan scheme designed to support the development of commercial film projects by recent graduates of the school.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the value to the north-west of England's economy of the aerospace industry.

Mr. Atkins: The gross value added (at factor cost) by the aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing industry in the north west (standard region) as at 1986 was £693·3 million.

Credit Brokers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to change the scope of the consumer credit licensing requirements contained in the Consumer Credit Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 26 October 1988 at column 299.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what has been the average annual cost of administering the licence system for credit brokers for each of the past five years for which figures are available; how many licences have been issued in each of those years; and what proportion of the cost has been borne by applicants for such licences;

(2) how many licences for credit brokers have been (a) refused and (b) revoked during each of the past five years for which figures are available; and what is the current charge to an applicant for a licence to trade as a credit broker.

Mr. Atkins: The day-to-day operation of the consumer credit licensing system is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading and I shall ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Balance of Trade (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current balance of trade in textiles (a) as a whole and (b) with other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Atkins: The crude balance of trade in textiles (defined by standard international trade classification, revision 3, division 65) for 1988, shows deficits of £1,700 million for total trade and of £1,340 million with the EEC.

Gas

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 190, if he has estimated how long it will be before effective competition is introduced into the gas supply market in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: Implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's recommendations will encourage the development of competition in gas supply. In addition the MMC recommended that, towards the end of the five years initial period for the price schedule, the Director General should review its continued appropriateness taking into account the extent to which effective competition has by then emerged, or is likely to emerge, in the supply of gas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 190, if he will make a statement about the effect that the action taken, following the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas prices, will have in the short and medium term upon the overall price of firm gas charged by British Gas to large industrial consumers.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: It will lead to similar customers being charged at the same rate. In the short term, this may mean a reduction in price for some, an increase in price for others. In the medium term, there should be a reduction in the average price paid.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to which markets large industrial users of firm gas operate in (a) Europe and (b) the world, other than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: I do not have information on export markets categorised according to their suppliers' energy use.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he accepts the conclusion of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that high United Kingdom gas prices are a cause for real concern, Cm. 500, paragraph 8.24; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: We have made clear that we accept the conclusion of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that British Gas's pricing policy has operated against the public interest in various ways including higher charges for those customers less well-placed to use alternative fuels or to obtain alternative fuels on favourable terms. Therefore we have acted on the MMC's recommendation on British Gas's pricing and contract policies in the supply of gas to large users.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will make a statement about the conclusion of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, Cm. 500, paragraph 8.23, that British Gas prices for firm gas are up to 80 per cent. higher than elsewhere in the European Community; and in what way the action taken will remove such a price differential in the short or medium term;

(2) if he will make a statement about the conclusion of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that since the latter part of 1985 prices for firm gas have fallen by 12 per cent. in the United Kingdom compared to between 30 per cent. and 48 per cent. in other European Community countries, Cm. 500, paragraph 8.22; and in what way the action taken will prevent such price reduction differential reccurring in the short or medium term.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: The Secretary of State welcomed the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and initiated action to implement its specific recommendations on pricing and contract conditions. These will bring transparency to gas prices for large users in the United Kingdom and thus encourage the development of competition in gas supply. With regard to other European Community countries, the European Commission is proposing legal action to require greater transparency in energy pricing, particularly for large industrial users.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 190, what information he has as to whether British Gas supplies firm gas to large industrial consumers in the United Kingdom on terms which are more or less favourable than those available to similar consumers in the other main gas consuming countries of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement about the effect that the action taken will have in the short and medium term upon such terms.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to tables 4 to 6 of the OFGAS study "The EEC Industrial Gas Market". The immediate effect of the action taken will be to ensure the same price for large users with similar consumption in the United Kingdom as is the case in most of the main gas consuming countries of the European Community. In the medium term, there should be a reduction in the average price paid by large users in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, (1) pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 190, what information he has as to whether British Gas pricing policies in relation to firm gas have distorted competition since the latter part of 1985 between major industrial consumers in the United Kingdom on the one hand and those operating in the other main gas consuming countries of the European Economic Community on the other hand; and with what effect;

(2) whether he has received any evidence that the difference in price for firm gas between the United Kingdom and the other main gas consuming countries of the European Economic Community has had an adverse effect on the competitiveness of United Kingdom companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 March 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the results of the survey of British Gas contract customers given in appendix 5.2 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on Gas (CM 500).

(a) 14.

(b) The total sum paid to Treasury counsel by Departments for which I have responsibility, in the current financial year, is £1,442,569.

(c) This cannot be established save at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Medical Discharge

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual expenditure by his Department on providing rehabilitation services for service men who are seriously injured and discharged from the services on medical grounds.

Mr. Neubert: Information on the cost of service rehabilitation facilities is not available in the specific detail requested.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will institute counselling and other services of assistance for service men who are discharged as medically unfit from the services within three months of the date of the medical board recommendation to that effect.

Mr. Neubert: A full range of counselling and other services of assistance are already available, as a matter of routine, for service men who are discharged as medically unfit from the services.

Courts Martial

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that adequate and proper soundproofed accommodation is provided for courts martial to be conducted at operational Royal Air Force bases.

Mr. Neubert: Royal Air Force regulations require stations to provide a suitable room (of unspecified dimensions) to house the courts martial and additional rooms adjacent for robing facilities for the court officials. The room chosen will vary from station to station dependent upon availability; no sound attenuation is laid down as a requirement. To minimise disruption and inconvenience to the court, stations restrict the level and area of flying activity during the courts martial whenever possible. In cases where disruption is unavoidable, an alternative location is provided when this is practical.

MARILYN

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to mount a recruitment campaign for the regular Army through the medium of television as a result of the MARILYN studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: We are planning a three-week television advertising campaign towards the end of this month promoting both the Regular Army and the TA, called "Today's Army".

Bombing Range

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Taunton on 1 March, Official Report, column 220, he will state how the prohibition referred to therein affects aircraft using the practice bombing range in the Bristol channel in the vicinity of Hinkley Point.

Mr. Neubert: The prohibition extends to military aircraft using the Lilstock practice bombing range.

Defence Non-Nuclear Research Establishment

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will report progress on the proposal to establish the defence non-nuclear research establishment as an executive agency.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has accepted that change is needed in the way defence research is organised in order to obtain better value for money for our expenditure on defence research and project support. It is considered that this could be best achieved through a sharper relationship between the customers for and suppliers of defence research and by better focused and strengthened internal management in the establishments.

It has therefore been decided to establish the four main non-nuclear research establishments: the Admiralty research establishment, the Royal aerospace establishment, the Royal armament research and development establishment and the Royal Signals and radar establishment as a single organisation with the intention that they should become an executive agency under the Government's next steps policy. Other parts of MOD may also be included following current studies.

There will be full consultation with trades unions. In addition, steps are being taken to select and appoint, by open competition, a chief executive (designate), who will be responsible for day-to-day management of the organisation and for developing a comprehensive management plan for the proposed agency in response to MOD requirements. In parallel, an implementation team is being set up in MOD charged with overall co-ordination of the project. Final decisions to proceed and on the status of the agency within the public sector will be taken in the light of this further work, with the aim of establishing the agency in the spring of 1991.

PRIME MINISTER

Flecknoe

Q40. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Flecknoe, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Debt Burden

Q148. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what action the Government are taking to reduce the debt burden on poor countries.

The Prime Minister: Following my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's initiative, agreement was reached at the Toronto summit for concessional rescheduling through the Paris club for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries which are following approved adjustment programmes. The United Kingdom and others will reduce interest rates to prevent debt compounding. The United Kingdom has also written off £1 billion of old aid loans, of which nearly £300 million were for sub-Saharan Africa. We have also agreed to subsidise loans to the poorest countries of up to about £750 million through a special IMF facility, the enhanced structural adjustment facility, of £4·5 billion. This makes us the largest single contributor to the interest subsidy account.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy that each Government Department will undertake to accept and implement any safety recommendation of the Piper Alpha inquiry relevant to their responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has already told Parliament that if the Piper Alpha public inquiry can recommend improvements to the present offshore safety regime these will be accepted.

Engagements

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 March.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 March.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with the Hungarian Foreign Minister. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

WALES

Departmental Management Information System

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which company was awarded the contract for Welsh Office management information service system; what is the value of the contract awarded in August 1986; how much has so far been paid to the contractors; when the contract will be concluded; and what are the reasons for the delay in completion.

Mr. Peter Walker: A contract for the supply of computer hardware and software together with computerised statistical, financial and management systems was awarded to IBM (UK) Ltd. in August 1986. The value of the contract, over 10 years, is £1·6 million. Approximately £1 million has been paid to the contractor in accordance with the terms of the contract for goods and services which have been delivered to and accepted by my Department. The contractor was unable to deliver all the components specified in the contract to the original timetable because of technical difficulties, but it is now expected that the contract will be completely fulfilled by the end of September 1989.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the estimated spending in 1988-89 by the Welsh Office on (a) TV advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material; and what is the 1989-90 budget for each of these categories of spending.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Spending in 1988-89 is expected to be (a) TV advertising £42,307, (b) radio advertising nil, (c) newspaper advertising £71,000 and (d) other promotional material £870,000.

Detailed decisions on the 1989-90 budget by media have not yet been taken but the expected overall expenditure on publicity will be in the region of £1·75 million.

Housing Capital Allocations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the housing capital allocations for each Welsh district council since 1979 and at constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The information requested is shown in the tables. Allocations for 1988-89 are provisional. The allocations for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not strictly comparable with subsequent years as a new system for local authority finance was introduced in 1981-82.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table, taking 1979 as 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing (a) in the north-east and (b) for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Atkins: No regional breakdown of manufacturing investment for 1987 and 1988 is yet available. The required information for the period 1979 to 1986 is shown in the following table:

Manufacturing investment[1] in the north-east[2], and in the United Kingdom in constant (1980) prices, as a percentage of the 1979 level

Since 1986, manufacturing investment in the country as a whole has risen sharply; and is predicted to continue rising.

Dolls' Houses (Synthetic Food)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if his Department treats the EEC directive to make illegal the inclusion of items of synthetic food in dolls' houses as falling to be considered by majority vote under the Single European Act; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on this issue;

(2) when the directive was submitted by the EEC Commission to make illegal the inclusion of items of synthetic food in dolls' houses; if the proposal is part of the measures to complete the internal market; and in what form Parliament will be asked to consider the proposals.

Mr. Forth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 14 March at column 128 to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence), in which I said that I was proposing to exempt from the proposed Food Imitations (Safety) Regulations imitation food supplied for use in dolls' houses or model scenes or settings.

Professional Services (Advertising)

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the reports of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on restrictions on advertising in the supply of the services of medical practitioners, professionally regulated osteopaths and civil engineering consultants are to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The three reports on advertising restrictions in the professions are published today. The findings of the commission with regard to each one are as follows:

Services of medical practitioners

The commission was asked to investigate and report on the advertising restrictions observed by registered medical practitioners and their effect on the public interest.

The commission finds that observance of the guidance of both the GMC and BMA governing advertising by specialists to members of the public does not operate against the public interest, except in so far as it prevents associations of specialists from responding to direct requests for information from members of the public.

The commission finds that observance of the GMC guidance (in the version currently circulated to members) and the similar BMA guidance restricting advertising by specialists to other doctors, operates against the public interest. During the inquiry the GMC amended its guidance to allow specialists to contact their colleagues as they see fit. The commission considers that these changes remove the adverse effects of this part of the GMC guidance.

The commission notes that during the inquiry the GMC relaxed, but did not entirely remove, restrictions on the ability of doctors or their professional associations to communicate with other bodies or professionals in circumstances where they are not offering medical treatment to patients. The commission finds observance of the remaining restrictions on such contacts imposed by the GMC and BMA operates against the public interest.

The commission finds that observance of those parts of the GMC and BMA guidance which restrict advertising by general practitioners to members of the public operates against the public interest. The commission also finds that one part of the guidance offered by the Royal College of General Practitioners, namely that general practitioners should ensure that their practice leaflets are acceptable to local colleagues, operates against the public interest.

The commission considers that the broad principles that should govern advertising by doctors are that advertising by them should not be of a character that could reasonably be regarded as likely to bring the profession into disrepute and that their advertising should not be such as to abuse the trust of patients or potential patients or exploit their lack of knowledge. It suggests that these principles might be reflected in guidelines for GPs' advertising, that the content of advertisements should be limited to factual information, should be legal, decent, honest and truthful and should not disparage other doctors or make claims of superiority; that no advertisement should include explicit or implicit claims to cure particular complaints and that GPs should not use "cold calling" or other means of trying to target individual members of the public and should not advertise so frequently as to cause a nuisance to potential patients or put them under pressure.

The Government welcome the conclusions and recommendations of the report and today my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek, under section 88 of the Fair Trading Act, undertakings from each of the General Medical Council, British Medical Association and Royal College of General Practitioners that it will revise its guidance on advertising, along the lines proposed by the commission and in a form to be agreed with the director general, within six months.

My right hon. and noble Friend has no doubt that the GMC, as the statutory body charged with advising doctors on standards of professional conduct, will implement swiftly the MMC's public interest findings and that the BMA and RCGP will follow a similar line. He does not therefore intend at present to use the order-making powers which are available in respect of these latter bodies.

Services of professionally regulated osteopaths

The commission was asked to investigate and report on the advertising rules observed by regulated osteopaths and the effects of their restriction on the public interest.

There are 12 bodies representing osteopaths with rules that govern advertising by their members. The members of one body, the British Osteopathic Association, are nearly all registerd medical practitioners and as such are bound by the rules of the General Medical Council, which are the subject of the report already discussed. The commission finds the observance of the rules of all the other 11 bodies is against the public interest. The commission has recommended that the rules of those bodies should be no longer observed. The commission has suggested that the 11 bodies should consider the adoption of rules avoiding the detrimental effects identified. The commission considers that the broad principles underlying any new rules should be in accordance with the principles of the British code of advertising practice, should contain nothing which would reasonably be regarded as likely to bring the profession into disrepute, and should not be such as to abuse the trust of potential patients or exploit their lack of knowledge.

The Government welcome the conclusions and recommendations of the report and accordingly my right hon. and noble Friend has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek, under section 88 of the Fair Trading Act, undertakings from each of the bodies specified in paragraphs 7.34 and 7.35 of the commission's report that it will within a period of six months revise its rules according to the principles set out in the report and in a form to be agreed with the director general.

If any of the bodies fail to agree to amend their rules in accordance with the public interest findings of the commission there are order-making powers under the Fair Trading Act which may be brought to bear.

Civil engineering consultancy services

The commission was asked to investigate and report on the advertising rules observed by consulting civil engineers and the effects of their restrictions on the public interest.

The commission was primarily concerned with two sets of rules; those of the Institute of Civil Engineers and those of the Association of Consulting Engineers.

The commission finds that observance of the ICE rules by consulting civil engineers is not against the public interest. The commission is concerned, however, that some members of ICE appear to believe that the ICE rules are more restrictive than the interpretation it was given, and the commission has suggested that ICE should take steps to clarify the situation.

The commission finds that the observance of the present ACE rules by its consulting civil engineer members is against the public interest.

The commission considers that ACE should amend its rules to avoid the detrimental effects identified. The broad principles underlying any new rules should be that consulting civil engineers are free to advertise in accordance with the principles of the British code of advertising practice but that such advertising should contain nothing which would reasonably be regarded as likely to bring the profession into disrepute. The commission was told by ACE that its council would shortly be putting revised rules to the membership for approval.

The Government welcome the conclusions and recommendations of the report. My right hon. and noble Friend has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek undertakings, under section 88 of the Fair Trading Act, from the ACE that, within six months, it will revise its rules and guidance on advertising in a form to be agreed with the director general on the principles stated in paragraph 7.35 of the report.

Given the proposals which ACE put to the commission, my right hon. and noble Friend believes that the order-making powers which are available under the Act are not appropriate at this time.

My right hon. and noble Friend has also invited the Director General of Fair Trading to discuss with ICE's council how the interpretation of its rules may be better publicised.

Renaval Programme (Plymouth)

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for Plymouth to benefit from the Renaval programme for grants to shipbuilding and shiprepair areas.

Mr. Newton: I am sending to the Commission before Easter an application for support for Plymouth amounting to £13·25 million over three years under the Renaval programme, which is financed from the European regional development fund and is intended to mitigate the effects of closures and reductions in employment in shipbuilding/repair areas. Subject to the Commission's approval, the funding will be used in particular to introduce my Department's regional enterprise grants to the area and to support infrastructure projects to develop industrial sites and tourism.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any further progress has been made on the disposal of the subsidiaries of British Shipbuilders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have agreed with British Shipbuilders that it may dispose of the assets and goodwill of its subsidiary British Shipbuilders Training Ltd to a management team. This will retain a valuable training resource at Govan on the Clyde which is already closely involved with the youth training scheme and will be increasingly involved with the employment training programme.

I have also agreed with British Shipbuilders that it may open negotiations with William Steward (Holdings) Ltd as preferred bidder for the disposal of its pipework and electrical supply subsidiary Sunderland Forge Services Ltd. Finally, British Shipbuilders' preferred bidder for its design and computing subsidiary Marine Design Consultants Ltd based at Sunderland and Dundee has withdrawn. I have agreed with the corporation's chairman that he should invite further bids no later than Friday 14 April.

Consumer Protection (European Community)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which European Economic Community Commissioners are responsible for aspects of consumer affairs in addition to the Commissioner for Consumer Protection; and which Commissioner is responsible for consumer price matters.

Mr. Forth: I have placed in the Library of the House a background note produced by the Commission, which lists the new Commissioners and their portfolios. While lead responsibility rests with Mr. Van Miert, the Commissioner for Consumer Protection, others with responsibility for areas of policy affecting consumers include Sir Leon Brittan, Dr. Bangemann and Mr. MacSharry. In line with the Council resolution adopted in October 1986, the consumer interest needs to be taken into account in all proposals which affect those interests.

TRANSPORT

Coastguard Service

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the current levels of overtime payments being made in the coastguard service, he will review his decision to reduce the operational complement of the service by 28.

Mr. Portillo: The amount of overtime worked by Her Majesty's coastguard over recent years has declined to a stable level. The reduction in the overall watchkeeping complement is commensurate with the merging of the area responsibilities of coastguard stations, and it is not anticipated that the total level of overtime payments will be unduly affected.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that employees of the coastguard service are not required to monitor and work with visual display units for excessively prolonged periods; and what is the maximum continuous period of work with display units allowed.

Mr. Portillo: Watchkeeping coastguards work 12-hour shifts, including a one and a half hour meal break, which may be taken in one or more parts. Whilst the use of visual display units has increased, it is unusual for any individual to spend more than 5-10 per cent. of the watch using one. This percentage may be exceeded during busy periods. Although there is no laid down maximum continuous period of work, there are regular breaks, and duties within the watch are varied.

Parachuting Safety

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce controls to separate hobby parachutists' landing areas and those of aircraft landing or taking off.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The air accidents investigation branch, assisted by the British Parachute Association, is investigating the recent accident in which a parachutist fell onto a taxiing aircraft and was killed. The investigation will determine whether the current controls were applied and whether they are adequate. The introduction of any further controls will depend on the recommendation arising from the accident investigation.

Thamesline River Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions there have been concerning the support from public funds of the Thamesline river services in central London; what decisions have been made; and what sums have been allocated to this service in the year 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 23 February at column 729. The estimated support from public funds in the year 1989-90 is £400,000.

Bus Miles (London)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the cost of doubling the number of bus miles travelled in London.

Mr. Portillo: The cost of doubling bus miles in London cannot realistically be assessed. In addition to substantial investment in vehicles' premises, facilities and staff, unknown factors include the routing and type of services provided, the demand for them and the revenues generated. Decisions about the appropriate level of bus services for London are matters for London Regional Transport.

Voyage Data Recorder

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are to be taken by the marine directorate to monitor the performance of the newly developed voyage data recorder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has jointly funded, with Lloyd's Register of Shipping, the development of this voyage data recorder. Consideration is now being given to additional funding to carry out further research and to monitor the performance and reliability of the recorder in service.

Ship Crew Manning Levels

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning reductions of crew manning levels in relation to ship safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Many ships carry voluntary minimum safe manning certificates issued by the Department. In addition, the larger passenger ships are required to carry approved crew muster lists. The Department has received a number of representations from Members of this House, the seafarers' union and others concerning the reduction of crew manning levels in relation to ship safety. If necessary, marine surveyors inspect the vessel to ensure that it can be operated in a safe manner.

Flight Deck Crewing

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in relation to safe flight deck crewing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Safe flight deck crewing is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation. I understand that the Civil Aviation Authority's requirements comply with internationally recognised criteria.

Marine Examination Fees

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in response to proposals to increase marine examination fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Two representations were received, which did not oppose the proposed average increase of 12 per cent. in marine examination fees, which is to be implemented on 1 April and which is broadly in line with inflation since the last changes in these fees. A third representation proposed that these and certain other fees should be abolished. We believe, however, that the costs of such services should be borne by those who use them and not by the taxpayer.

Aeronautical Safety

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken to ensure that the move of frequency for aeronautical radar can be effected without prejudice to aircraft safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I suggest that the hon. Gentleman puts his question to the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority which, together with the Ministry of Defence, is responsible for the national air traffic services.

Single Line Junctions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of junctions between double track railway routes where the former double junction has been replaced by a single track line switch and associated crossover, together with the number of such layouts where the short single line section is protected by a safety neck; and whether he has asked the railways inspectorate to carry out an assessment of the safety implications of such junctions.

Mr. Portillo: Information regarding the precise number of single line junctions, and those protected by a safety neck, is not readily available. These junctions have been used extensively throughout the British Rail network for many years. Whether or not this type of layout was in any way a contributory factor to the recent accident in Glasgow is a matter for the public inquiry, a starting date for which will be announced shortly.

Vehicle Mileages

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to respond to the proposals put to him by the Director General of Fair Trading to combat the practice of clocking vehicle mileages.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have today written to Sir Gordon Borrie. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

While deploring this criminal practice the Government do not believe that the expensive system proposed for collecting and storing data in order to deter clocking would be sufficiently reliable to warrant the cost and bureaucracy involved. The mileage information would not carry conviction with the public. We believe it may be possible to devise a voluntary alternative scheme that is more accurately targeted against vehicles more susceptible to clocking, for instance relatively new, high-mileage vehicles. It has been suggested to the Office of Fair Trading's used car working group that further work should be done on the circumstances and vehicles most likely to lead to clocking, and the true scale of the problem.

Services are already provided by private sector companies to investigate mileages where prudent purchasers wish to double-check on condition and value before buying. These could meet the public's needs better than the blanket system proposed by the group. We believe that the industry can do more to develop an odometer which cannot be covertly tampered with or replaced.

It would be better to make clocking much more difficult at the outset than create a burdensome system that still cannot guarantee to detect the offence. There is much that the industry can so more cost-effectively do than Government to combat clocking.

Computer Safety

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been undertaken to ensure protection from unauthorised penetration into any parts of the rail network that are currently computerised.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 March 1989]: I understand that British Rail's physical and electronic protection of its computerised systems is such that any unauthorised penetration would be extremely unlikely to have any effect on safety. It would not be appropriate to give details. Protection of information held on computers is wholly a matter for British Rail. If my hon. Friend has any particular problems in mind perhaps she would approach British Rail.

MARPOL Convention

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the numbers of personnel and vessels that will be made available by his Department for enforcement of annex V of the marine pollution convention within British territorial waters.

Mr. Portillo [holding reply 13 March 1989]: Department of Transport marine surveyors who already visit ships to carry out surveys for the issue of safety and pollution certificates and who inspect ships for port state control will ascertain that arrangements for complying with Annex V of MARPOL 73/78 have been made. Additionally, surveyors will verify that port reception facilities for garbage are adequate.

The use of vessels to ensure compliance is not envisaged.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Agriculture and Food Research Council

71. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the future of financial resources for the Agriculture and Food Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend recently announced an allocation from the science budget of £74·57 million to the Agricultural and Food Research Council for 1989-90. The planning figures for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 are £78·25 million and £81·74 million respectively. The allocation for 1989-90 is 22 per cent. higher than provision in the current financial year.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education Reform Act has created new opportunities for parents, employers and others in the community to be directly involved in education. In schools and colleges of further education governing bodies, which include employers and elected parents, will have responsibility for directing the policies of the institutions and managing the budgets delegated by local education authorities. We have also given parents the opportunity to seek grant-maintained status for the schools attended by their children. Over 3 million copies of a booklet designed for parents "Our Changing Schools" have been distributed: this booklet encourages parents to take a practical interest in their children's education.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) those local education authorities which include and (b) those which do not include head teachers in their calculation of pupil to teacher ratios in primary schools.

Mr. Butcher: The pupil/teacher ratios published by the Department for each local education authority in England include all qualified teachers including head teachers. The number of pupils and teachers is derived from returns made to the Department by schools in January of each year. A statistical bulletin giving the pupil/teacher ratio for each local education authority in England in January 1988 will be published shortly.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in paying grant monies under the city technology college programme for improving facilities at a school whose governors have given notice under section 14 of the Education Act 1944 to discontinue voluntary status, he will make it his policy to ensure that the governors retain the discretion to withdraw that notice.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has made clear the factors on which he will need to satisfy himself before reaching a decision on any proposals from the governors of a voluntary school to discontinue that school in order to make the premises available for the establishment of a CTC. These include agreement in principle on a funding agreement, including grant towards capital costs, which would be recoverable in the event of the CTC failing to open for any reason.

Advisory Board for the Research Councils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the membership of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The present members of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils are:

Dr. D. A. Rees, FRS—Secretary, Medical Research Council.
Dr. N. J. Shackleton, FRS—Director of Quaternary Research, University of Cambridge.
Sir David Smith, FRS—Principal and Vice-Chancellor, University of Edinburgh.
Professor W. D. P. Stewart, DSc, FRSE, FRS—Secretary, Agricultural and Food Research Council.
Sir Peter Swinnerton-Dyer, KBE, FRS—Chairman, University Grants Committee.
Sir Francis Tombs, FEng—Chairman, Rolls-Royce Ltd.; Chairman, ACOST.

Mr. J. M. M. Vereker—Department of Education and Science (Assessor).
Mr. D. A. Wilkinson—Department of Education and Science (Assessor).

The advisory board was established by the Secretary of State for Education and Science in 1972. It has the following terms of reference:—

(a) To advise the Secretary of State on his responsibilities for civil science with particular reference to the research council system, its articulation with the universities and departments, the support of postgraduate students and the proper balance between international and national scientific activity;

(b) To advise the Secretary of State on the allocation of the Science Budget among the research councils and other bodies, taking into account funds paid to them by customer departments and the purposes to which such funds are devoted;

(c) To promote close liaison between councils and the users of their research.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the remit of the committee of the advisory board for the research councils investigating the funding of the biological sciences in Britain has been extended to include a review of the research councils themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Advisory Board for the Research Councils announced the following terms of reference for its review of research councils' responsibilities for biological sciences, on 22 June 1988:

1. To review the disposition between Research Councils of responsibilities for research and training in the biological sciences and present arrangements for co-ordination.
2. To recommend any changes, in the present disposition of responsibilities and co-ordinating arrangements, that are needed to improve efficiency and effectiveness—taking account of national needs, trends in the biological sciences, and implications for Councils' responsibilities in related fields.

I understand that these have not been changed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

National Stud

70. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek powers to privatise the national stud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Prisoners (Her Majesty's Pleasure)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been sentenced to be detained at Her Majesty's pleasure in each year since 1959; and if he will state in each case (i) whether they are still detained and (ii) how many years of imprisonment they served before they were released.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The information requested on those sentenced to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure is published annually in "Criminal statistics England and Wales", (table S2.1 (A) of the latest issue, for 1987 Cm. 498) copies of which are in the Library. Information about the length of time detained in institutions other than prison service establishments is not readily available. The average time spent under sentence in prison service establishments by persons detained during Her Majesty's pleasure was between six and a half and seven years for those first released on licence in the years 1978 to 1987.

Including those recalled following an earlier release on licence, the population of such detainees held in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 31 December 1988 was about 200. Provision of further information would incur disproportionate cost.

Firearms Safety (Thames Valley)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to what were the security arrangements in operation prior to the granting and variations of the firearms certificate issued to the late Michael Ryan for the safekeeping of the rubber stamp of the signature of the appropriate chief officer of police of the Thames Valley police and as to what additional security precautions have been taken concerning such rubber stamps since the Hungerford tragedy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Arrangements for the safekeeping of office equipment are a matter entirely for individual chief officers of police.

Television and Radio Programmes (Disabled People)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of hours of broadcast programmes which (a) are subtitled and (b) have a sign language interpreter on (i) BBC1, (ii) BBC2, (iii) ITV and (iv) Channel 4 in the last year.

Mr. Renton: I understand that the BBC and IBA broadcast respectively approximately 1,650 and 1,560 hours of subtitled programmes last year for reception on teletext sets. No precise information is available on open-caption sub-titling or on signing.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of hours of broadcast programmes on (a) BBC1, (b) BBC2, (c) ITV, (d) Channel 4, (e) BBC Radio and (f) independent local radio, which are specifically directed at people with disabilities, during the last year.

Mr. Renton: I understand that the number of hours of such programmes broadcast last year on BBC television, ITV and Channel 4, and on BBC radio were approximately 40, 35 and 53 respectively. In addition, many other programmes featured items directed both at people with disabilities and at the general audience. No precise information is available for independent local radio.

Police (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the chief constables of Leicestershire since 1959 and the years they served in that capacity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	Date
Mr. J. A. Taylor CBE, QPM, DL	1950-1972
Mr. A. Goodson OBE, QPM	1972-1986
Mr. M. J. Hirst QPM	1986-

Taxi Driving Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the frequency of subject access requests to police forces from drivers in connection with applications for taxi driving licences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Applicants for subject access under the Data Protection Act are not required to state the reasons for their application.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to release data subjects from the obligation to apply to police forces for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act to procure information for transmission to a third party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. There is no such obligation under the Data Protection Act.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most recent estimate of the number of people benefiting from £5 concessionary television licences.

Mr. Renton: The concessionary licence fee is now payable per household, rather than per individual. It is estimated that on 31 January 1989 about 808,500 people in 634,110 households were covered by the concessionary licence.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the change in the number of people who would qualify for a concessionary television licence as a result of changes in the qualifying regulations effective from May 1988.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible to estimate the change in the number of people who may be able to qualify for the concessionary licence. No one who had the concession before May 1988 lost it as a result of the change in the regulations. Since May 1988 the number of people covered by the licence has increased by about 44,000.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how local authority sheltered housing provided from conversion of tower blocks into vertical warden schemes with a flat dedicated for communal use will be treated in respect of the concessionary television licence scheme.

Mr. Renton: Tower blocks are treated in the same way as any other sheltered housing schemes, and can qualify for the concessionary licence provided they satisfy the conditions set out in the regulations.

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 765, he will update the 1985-86 review of the arrangements to sell the electoral register to include consideration of (a) the ability of the electoral registrar being able to access copies of the information held by the community charge officer and (b) the restriction placed on the sale of the extract of the community charge register; if he will publish the 1985-86 review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To the first part of the question the answer is no, for the reasons given in my previous answer. Copies of the consultation paper which instituted the 1985-86 review were deposited in the Library in December 1984; subsequently, regulations authorising the supply of the register in computer-compatible form were debated in the Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments on 21 January 1986.

Police (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought against police forces for non-compliance with the Sex Discrimination Act 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Complaints alleging non-compliance with the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 are dealt with under the civil law by applications to industrial tribunals. I understand from the Equal Opportunities Commission that it is not possible to identify applications made against police forces.

Broadcasting

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the implications for community programming of proposals outlined in the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality".

Mr. Renton: We have now had over 2,700 responses to the broadcasting White Paper, including a number from charities, voluntary organisations and other organisations with a particular interest in community programming. We are considering very carefully all the responses we have received.

Police (Disciplinary Offences)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time police officers are suspended from duty awaiting the results of investigations into alleged disciplinary offences in (a) Cheshire police, (b) Greater Manchester police and (c) Merseyside police; how many police officers are currently suspended from duty for this reason in each of the three forces; and, over the past five years, how many of those suspended have subsequently had no charges or disciplinary action taken against them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Average length of time of suspension (calculated over the most recent convenient 12-month period):
(a) 11 months, (b) 7·4 months, (c) 9·6 months

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has authorised the setting up of an isolation area in the hospital wing at Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, for prisoners known to be HIV positive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Birmingham is one of a number of prison service establishments with medical facilities which the director of prison medical services considers to be suitable for the care, support and (when necessary for their own protection) isolation of prisoners with AIDS-related illness or other infectious conditions.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers at Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green (a) requested and (b) received HIV tests in 1987 and 1988; and with what results.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department does not disclose information of this nature.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines he has issued to prison governors about the association of prisoners known to be HIV positive with other prisoners;

(2) what guidelines he has issued to prison governors on the confinement of prisoners found to be HIV positive; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) what is his policy on the segregation of prisoners known to be HIV positive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department's policy on the management of such prisoners follows the broad principles of the Government's general policy but necessarily takes account of the special nature of prisons and the prison environment. Prisoners who are identified as HIV antibody positive and have no symptoms of illness are located in single accommodation or accommodated with other antibody positive prisoners, but there is no requirement that they should otherwise be precluded from associating with prisoners who are not so identified.

The guidelines to local management stress the importance of enabling HIV antibody positive prisoners to participate as fully as possible in normal prison life. It has also been made clear both to management and to staff that prisoners who have no symptoms of illness need not be located in the prison hospital or other special accommodation. However, the management of individual cases is a matter which must be decided by the governor and medical officer in the light of local circumstances and the nature and needs of the individual prisoner.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what protective clothing is available at Her Majesty's prison, Winson Green, for the use of prison officers when restraining prisoners known to be HIV positive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In January 1987 arrangements were made for all prison service establishments in England and Wales to be supplied with sets of protective clothing comprising a zip-up one piece overall, rubber surgical gloves, a paper face mask and plastic eye goggles.

Drug Abuse (TV Advertisement)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct the Independent Broadcasting Authority to withdraw the current advertising campaign relating to drugs on independent commercial radio stations to ensure that foul language is not used on the air.

Mr. Renton: No. Under section 9 of the Broadcasting Act 1981, the Independent Broadcasting Authority has responsibility for drawing up a code of advertising standards and practice and for ensuring that programme contracts comply with it.

Bail Information Schemes

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to expand bail information schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: By April 1990 we expect bail information schemes to have been extended from the present 13 to 20 courts.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase the usage of bail hostels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Resources are being provided for the creation of about 500 new bail places at approved hostels by April 1991. The attention of the courts was drawn, in Home Office circular 25/1988 issued on 11 May 1988, to the range of bail hostel accommodation facilities available for persons whom they might be considering for the grant of bail.

A consultation paper on "Bail Accommodation and Secure Bail Hostels" was issued on 13 February 1989. The paper discusses the purpose and use of existing accommodation for bailees and the concept of a more secure type of hostel for those defendants who may currently be remanded in custody because of a lack of suitable bail places. The closing date for responses is 9 May 1989.

Community and Probationary Schemes

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage the further use of community and probationary schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In "Tackling Offending: An Action Plan", issued to the probation service in August 1988 following publication of the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community", the Home Office gave guidelines for enhancing and promoting the use of non-custodial penalties, including the probation order. Fach area probation service was asked to take the lead in establishing a local action plan for work with young adult offenders, on the basis of these guidelines.

The Home Office has introduced national standards for community service orders which are due to come into effect on 1 April. Their purpose is to increase the confidence of the courts and the public in community service orders by ensuring that the orders are demanding and that they are strictly enforced.

The Government believe that there is considerable scope for increasing the use of probation and community service orders for offenders who would otherwise receive custodial sentences.

Trial Deadlines

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for the introduction of wide-scale application of trial deadlines: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 8 February at column 676.

Remand (Minor Offenders)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that minor offenders are not given remand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 23 February at column 393.

Remand System

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations took place with officers in the prison service during the course of the preparation of the report on the practicality of private sector involvement in the remand system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There was extensive consultation and discussion with prison staff at all levels including trade union representatives. Details are given in appendix II of the "Report to the Home Office on the Practicality of Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System" by Deloitte Haskins and Sells (1 March 1989), a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he can provide figures giving the number of arrests made during league football matches for each season from 1979-80 to the present time;

(2) if he will make it his policy in future to ensure that figures for arrests made at football grounds are kept separately for arrests made inside and outside grounds, respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of arrests made at Football League matches each season from 1984-85, when the Association of Chief Police Officers first collated these figures, is as follows:

Season	Total arrests
1984-85	[1]5,517
1985-86	4,143
1986-87	5,531
1987-88	6,106

[1] Includes Divisions 1 and 2 only.

These figures do not distinguish between arrests made inside grounds and those directly connected with matches made outside. Nor are the figures confined to arrests made only during the time a match was being played. Any further sub-division of these figures would be a matter for Association of Chief Police Officers.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he can provide figures for (a) the number of arrests made at Wimbledon football club as a percentage of the gate and (b) the corresponding average figures for the football league as a whole for each season from 1979-80 to the present time.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available figures are as follows:

	Arrests	Attendance	Arrests as a proportion of attendance percentage
1984-85
Wimbledon	123	92,920	0·13
Total league clubs (divisions 1 and 2 only)	5,517	13,839,261	0·04
1985-86
Wimbledon	7	95,793	0·01
Total league clubs	4,143	16,438,757	0·02
1986-87
Wimbledon	35	163,652	0·02
Total league clubs	5,531	17,427,601	0·03
1987-88
Wimbledon	49	159,691	0·03
Total league clubs	6,106	17,968,965	0·03

Television Advertising

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to change the current statutory ban on unreasonable discrimination by television companies against advertisers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC and Army Raids

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many properties have been searched by the armed forces and the Royal Ulster Constabulary during each of the last five years;

(2) if a record is kept of the denominational affiliation of the householders whose properties have been searched by the armed forces and the Royal Ulster Constabulary during the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The available information on searches of premises under section 15 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 is as follows:

Year	Army		RUC
	Occupied	Unoccupied
1984	Not available		Not available
1985	104	58	Not available
1986	137	41	1,818
1987	393	72	2,474
1988	[1]749	[1]195	4,136

[1]These figures are still subject to confirmation.

The majority of searches conducted by the Army would have been in conjunction with the RUC and are also counted in their figures.

Information relating to the religion of the householder is not kept by the police. Although it is recorded by the Army at the time of the search, it could not be made available without disproportionate cost.

Select Committees (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Only one Select Committee recommendation has been made about this Department, and then indirectly. The recommendation was in fact mainly relevant to the Department of Social Security and was not accepted by them or us.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation by his Department in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The total sum paid out in fees to outside organisations in the furtherance of privatisation is:

Year	£
1979-80	nil
1980-81	nil
1981-82	nil
1982-83	nil
1983-84	nil
1984-85	nil
1985-86	52,380
1986-87	4,298
1987-88	2,411

Precise figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are not yet available.

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many former residents of the Kincora boys' home have received compensation payments from the Eastern health board for assaults; how many former residents have made claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 15 March 1989]: Eleven claims for compensation have been received by health and social services boards from former residents of Kincora boys' home. To date three claims have been settled and payment has already been made jointly by the Eastern and Northern health and social services boards in respect of one of these. The question of compensation is entirely a matter for settlement between the parties concerned.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Frank Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for (a) the estimated expenditure by the Treasury on press and public relations during 1988-89 and (b) the budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The estimated expenditure for the current year is £539,162; the budget provision for 1989-90 is £559,980.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimated cost of work put out by the Central Office of Information to private agencies this year; what it was in 1987-88; and what it is estimated to be in 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The cost of work put out by the Central Office of Information on behalf of other Government Departments to private agencies is as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	114·6
1988-89	[1]113·2

[1] Estimated.

Detailed decisions on estimated expenditure by COI on behalf of other Government Departments for 1989-90 is a matter for departmental Ministers and the amount to be put out to private agencies is not yet known.

Employer Housing Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the number, (b) the value and (c) the cost in revenue forgone, of tax-free employer grants to employees moving to higher cost housing areas in each year this scheme has been in force; and what is his estimate for the current year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that reliable estimates are not available.

Civil Servants (Allowances and Pensions)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioner civil servants receive indexed allowances and pensions.

Mr. Brooke: Principal Civil Service pension scheme pensions, in common with other public service pensions, are index-linked under the Pensions (Increase) Act 1971, as amended. There were about 381,000 such pensions in payment to retired civil servants during 1988-89.

Netherlands Antilles (Double Taxation)

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether a new double taxation convention has been negotiated with the Netherlands Antilles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As foreshadowed in the Inland Revenue press release of 24 June 1988, the United Kingdom Government gave notice of termination of the existing convention by 30 June 1988 in accordance with the provisions of that convention. The existing convention will, therefore, cease to have effect in the United Kingdom from April 1989. Discussions are continuing at official level about a new double taxation convention. Whatever the outcome of these discussions, the Government propose, in accordance with the undertaking given in the press release, to introduce provisions for this year's Finance Bill to preserve the existing exemption from tax of interest paid from the United Kingdom to the Netherlands Antilles to fund the payment of interest on Eurobonds issued by Netherlands Antilles finance subsidiaries before 26 July 1984. These provisions will apply to interest payments paid from the United Kingdom on or after 1 April 1989.

Charities

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes the Government have introduced since 1979 to benefit charities financially.

Mr. Lilley: Successive Finance Acts, and the measures announced in the Budget on March 14 will have:

(i) reduced the period of charitable covenants qualifying for tax relief from "over six" to "over three" years (1980);

(ii) would allow heritage and conservation charities to give covenanted members free or cheap entry to properties without loss of tax relief on covenants (1989 Budget);

(iii) introduced higher rate income tax relief for charitable covenants with a £3,000 limit (1980); increased the qualifying limit to £5,000 (1983); and to £10,000 (1985); and abolished the limit completely in 1986;

(iv) raised the capital transfer tax exemption limit for gifts to charities on or within one year of death from £100,000 to £200,000 (1980) and then to £250,000 (1982) before abolishing the limit completely in 1983;

(v) provided in place of reduced rate relief, a complete exemption from stamp duty for all transfers to charities, whether by sale or gift (1982);

(vi) given tax relief for employers costs met by a company during a period of secondment to a charity (1983), and extended that to all employers (1984);

(vii) introduced relief for single donations by non-close companies (1986);

(viii) introduced VAT zero rating for cars leased to the disabled (1984). The Budget would exempt such cars from car tax as well;

(ix) extended the range of specialised goods and services eligible for VAT zero rating when acquired by charities (eg medicinal products (1986)). The Budget extends this relief to sterilising equipment and to classified advertising;

(x) largely shielded charities from the effect of the ECJ judgement on UK zero-rates by zero-rating fuel and power and new construction for charities' non-business purposes; and by not giving landlords the option to tax rent from charities non-business buildings other than offices and by phasing in over 5 years options to tax the rent on charities' business and office accommodation;

(xi) the Budget exempted from VAT fund-raising events by charities;

(xii) introduced the payroll giving scheme (1986) with an annual limit of £100, to operate from April 1987. The limit was subsequently raised to £120 (1987) and doubled to £240 (1988). The Budget would double this limit again to £480.

In addition, the 1988 Local Government Finance Act provides for charities to be relieved from April 1990 of at minimum 80 per cent. of their business rate due.

It is estimated that the total amount of tax repaid to charities in respect of income from which tax has been deducted increased from £130 million in 1978-79 to some £400 million in 1987-88; this was itself an increase of £60 million compared with 1986-87. The Government provide substantial support in grants as well as in tax relief. The total level of grants increased by over 90 per cent. in real terms between 1979-80 and 1986-87 when it stood at £1,173 million.

THE ARTS

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether staff from his Department have met the director of the Victoria and Albert museum to discuss staffing in the (a) last three months and (b) last six months.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The organisation and staffing of the Victoria and Albert museum are matters for the director and trustees of the museum.

The director has explained to me and to my Department the objectives of the plans announced by the museum on 27 January. I fully support those objectives.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the criteria on which the Civil Service college arranges sessions for new members of the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Most induction training for civil servants is carried out by Departments for their own staff. College courses are designed to meet the needs of particular groups of more senior staff, administration trainees and professional groups of whom there are only a few new entrants in any one Department each year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide figures showing the total amount of Government aid which has been sent to Ethiopia to help fight the spread of meningitis.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the last month and in response to requests from several British voluntary agencies, we have provided over £500,000 for vaccines used to combat the current meningitis epidemic. This includes our share of assistance provided by the European Community, also for vaccines.

Japan

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Minister of State's discussions in Japan on Japanese rain forest policy.

Mr. Chris Patten: I raised British concern over the destruction of the rainforest with both Japan's aid loan agency and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Both stressed that Japan is paying increasing attention to the environment in its aid programmes. Japanese officials have paid several visits to the Overseas Development Administration to study our environmental assessment procedures.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Robin Cook To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the value of the basic retirement pension as a proportion of average earnings in April 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not yet available.

War Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many representations he has received from war pensioners or war pensioners' organisations on the reduction of the full war pension disregard for housing benefit to £5 from April 1988;

(2) if he will list the local authorities which have abandoned or modified discretionary housing benefit enchancements for war pensioners after the withdrawal of a full disregard in April 1988; and if he will estimate the number of war pensioners affected by such abandonments or modifications;

(3) if he will estimate the total savings made as a result of disregarding £5 of each war pension for housing benefit purposes after April 1988 rather than the total amount as before;

(4) if he will list the local authorities who exercised a discretionary scheme to pay housing benefit at a higher rate to war pensioners prior to April 1988; and what is the number of war pensioners benefiting from such schemes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Prior to April 1988 the first £4 of a war pension was disregarded in housing benefit but local authorities had discretion to enhance the scheme—for example by disregarding war pensions or other income in full—at their own cost. The local authorities which operated such schemes are listed at A. From April 1988 discretionary local schemes other than variation of the disregard for war pensions were abolished and the statutory war pension disregard was increased to £5. Although local authorities retain the discretion to disregard war pensions in full at their own cost some chose to abandon or modify their local scheme in April 1988, as listed at B.

I regret that information on the numbers affected by local schemes is not available.

Source: 1988 returns from 476 of the 483 local authorities in Great Britain.

Broadcasting

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality."

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by the BBC. It will be for the new Channel 3 and 5 licensees to consider whether they will broadcast such messages. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television will not be affected by the proposals.

Student Grants

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if local authorities treat a full-time student who receives no grant as though he did receive a full grant, for the purpose of assessing housing benefit eligibility.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When an award is made in respect of student maintenance, the full grant is taken into account for the purposes of establishing entitlement to housing benefit. This applies even when the amount of grant payable has been reduced or extinguished by an assessed contribution in respect of the income of a parent or a spouse of the student, whether or not that contribution has actually been received by the student.

When no award has been made, however, there is no provision to take a notional grant into account.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the annual amount which will be saved as a result of the £2 cut on housing benefit transitional payments;

(2) what is his estimate of the saving in public expenditure which will result from his imposition of a closing date of 31 March 1989 for applications for housing benefit transitional payments.

(3) what is the estimated take-up of housing benefit transitional payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In view of the number of applications for housing benefit transitional payments which continue to be received and to ensure the maximum take-up of these awards the closing date for receipt of housing benefit transitional payments has been extended to 30 June 1989. It is not yet possible to estimate either the final expenditure and caseload or the effect of the £2 flat rate deduction from 10 April 1989. By the time the closing date is reached we expect the vast majority of people eligible for transitional payments to have applied for them and we do not, therefore, expect any significant saving in expenditure.

Young Homeless People

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to assist financially young people of 16 and 17 years of age who have been excluded from the parental home or who have no parental home to go to; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the means being used by his Department to determine the extent and degree of poverty among those aged 16 and 17 years who, for whatever reason, are not living in the parental home; and if he will publish the results of any such examination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In addition to our monitoring we have examined evidence from organisations such as Barnardo's and the Church of England Children's Society. We have also had discussions with representatives from these and other bodies in the voluntary sector as well as local authority associations.

Our own monitoring has included careful observation of the types of cases referred for consideration under the severe hardship provision.

Our current policies are sound for the overwhelming majority of 16 and 17-year-olds. However, our studies reveal that a minority of young people who, for good reason, have to live independently are facing difficulties. We have therefore decided to introduced the changes announced by my hon. Friend on 13 March at columns 27-28.

Elderly People (Care Provisions)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether the personal allowance element of pensions paid to elderly persons in hospitals, nursing homes and residential care homes is intended for the personal use of pensioners for the purchase of items not provided by the establishment, such as clothing and stationery;

(2) what evidence he has that some residential institutions include the personal allowance of pensions in the minimum charge demanded of the pensioner.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The level of fees in an independent residential care home or nursing home is a matter between the resident and the proprietor and depends on the level of services to be provided. The income support personal expenses allowance is intended to cover day-to-day living expenses but claimants are, of course, free to spend this money in any way they choose.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) during the benefit year April 1988 to April 1989 how many claims for attendance allowance were received; how many claims for attendance allowance were granted; how many claims for attendance allowance were awarded posthumously; and what is this figure as a percentage of total number of claims received and number of claims granted; of the posthumously awarded claims, how many were granted following a request for review or appeal after initially being refused; and what is this figure as a percentage of total claims made and number of claims granted;

(2) during the benefit year April 1987 to April 1988; how many claims for attendance allowance were received; how many claims for attendance allowance were awarded; how many claims for attendance allowance were awarded posthumously; what is this figure as a percentage of total claims made and number of claims granted; of the posthumously awarded claims, how many were granted following a request for review or appeal after initially being refused; and what is this figure as a percentage of total claims made and number of claims granted.

Mr. Scott: Information about posthumous awards of attendance allowance is not recorded as a matter of course and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. The information which is available is in the table.

Table

Attendance allowance: Numbers of claims received and awards made 1987-88 and 1988-89

Year	Number of claims received	Number of awards made
1987-88	351,554	213,907
1988-89	[1]292,485	[2]156,137

[1]To 28 February 1989.
[2]To 31 December 1988.

Family Credit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the extra spending on family credit is attributable to the freeze in child benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When the 1989 uprating was announced it was estimated that the total cost of the family credit uprating would be £128 million, of which £23 million was directly attributable to the 45p added to the child credit rates as compensation for the child benefit standstill.

Benefit

Mr. Battle To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion and how many supplementary benefit/income support claims from couples are made by women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of supplementary benefit claims from couples made by women is 19,000. This represents 1·77 per cent. of supplementary benefit claims from couples.

I regret income support information is not yet available.

Note: Number of claims rounded to nearest thousand.
Source: May 1987 Annual Statistical Inquiry.

Retirement Age

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost for equalising retirement ages for men and women at the ages of 60, 62, 63 and 65 years assuming everyone elects to retire at the specified age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1989, c. 598]: I regret that the reply given has been found to contain an error. The information requested with the amended figures is as follows.

The most recent estimates, which are based on 1985-86 benfit rates, are that the approximate net annual cost to public funds of equalising state pension age at 60 years would be £3,000 million and at 63 years £800 million; equalisation at 65 years would save about £500 million. Estimates are not available for equalisation at 62 years.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the anticipated end of the year out-turn on the numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure, (b) the most recent figures for the numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure and (c) the anticipated numbers of claimants and levels of expenditure for 1988-89 for (i) funeral payments from the social fund and (ii) maternity payments from the social fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 13 December 1988, c. 534]: The available information is as follows:

Anticipated end of year out turn

Type of payment	Number of claimants	Expenditure £ million
Maternity payments	173,000	15
Funeral payments	48,000	21

Actual claims and expenditure to and including October 1988

Type of payment	Number of claimants	Expenditure £ million
Maternity payments	102,603	9
Funeral payments	28,582	11

EMPLOYMENT

Perivale Skill Centre

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the Perivale skill centre.

Mr. Cope: Perivale skill centre is part of the Skills Training Agency which, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 13 March, is to be offered for sale through a private tender process.

Wages Council

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central, 6 March, Official Report, column 412, whether he will now indicate the current level of total responses received on his wages councils consultative document; and if he is now in a position to break down the responses into those supporting and those opposing the abolition of wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: The current level of total responses is 394. The breakdown of the responses into those supporting and those opposing the abolition of wages councils will be published in due course.

Employment Training

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many approved employment training agencies deal solely with unemployed graduates; and if he will list them.

Mr. Nicholls: None. All training agents and training managers will deal with unemployed graduates as required.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many unemployed graduates are currently on employment training courses;

(2) how many unemployed graduates have left employment training courses since September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the number of graduates on or leaving employment training is not yet available.

Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the level of unemployment in the Docklands urban development area as a percentage of the total London figure in each year since 1981; and what are the same calculations for the three Docklands boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Newham and Southwark.

Mr. Cope: The following information is also available from the Library. The table shows the annual average number of unemployed claimants in London docklands and the London boroughs of Newham, Southwark and Tower Hamlets for the years 1983 to 1988, in absolute numbers and as a percentage of the number of unemployed claimants in Greater London. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available on the same geographical basis. Comparisons are affected by changes in the coverage of the count.

Tourism

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the review of tourism will be published.

Mr. Lee: We shall announce decisions following the review of tourism policy as soon as possible.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many TECs he is planning for London.

Mr. Cope: The prospectus for training and enterprise councils was published on Friday 10 March. It is now for business leaders wishing to establish a TEC to come together and apply for development funding, and it is for the employers themselves to propose the area the TEC should cover, having consulted the regional director of the Training Agency.

Because of London's unique labour market, it is important that the development of the TEC network there should be considered very carefully, particularly in the centre of London. I have therefore decided, in consultation with Brian Wolfson, chairman of the National Training Task Force, that a small temporary group of employers should look at the issues in London and report to the task force accordingly.

Allen Sheppard, chairman and chief executive of Grand Metropolitan plc and a member of the task force, has agreed to lead the group's discussions. Employers and others wishing to make their views known to the group should do so through the Training Agency's regional director for London, Mark Addison.

Open College

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has plans for further funding for the Open college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I am pleased to announce that we have decided to provide further funding for the Open college to develop its important work. We are currently discussing with the college arrangements for this further funding, which would be up to a maximum of £12 million for its commercial activities over the next three years, and further £6 million for broadcasting activities.

The college's recent performance has been very encouraging. Sales of courses are now running at over 5,000 a month, and over 60,000 learners have taken college courses since its start. Some 600 companies are associated with the college and many major companies and institutions are collaborating with the college to produce training materials to meet their specific training needs.

The achievement of self-financing of the college within the next three years remains our firm goal. However, in order to give the college the secure base it needs to achieve this, further funding would be required. Support will also be needed for broadcasting.

In order to ensure the best value for money for the public purse, this funding is subject to important conditions, not least that the college should have agreed with us the next stage of its business plan setting out the route to self-financing over the three year period without any further calls on public support thereafter. The plan would also outline how the college's work over this period would support out training objectives. Michael Green, the college's chairman, has welcomed our decision and fully accepts these conditions.

This further funding provides the opportunity the college needs to secure its work with others in industry and education in helping to meet the nation's skill needs. The college will encourage employers to provide more effective training for their workforce; it will help individuals including the unemployed to gain the skills they need to contribute effectively to the economy; and will support us in our task of persuading individuals and employers increasingly to invest in their future by providing effective training.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has given consideration to the recent Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill, passed by the South African Government, which will place restrictions on organisations in South Africa receiving financial support from abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We made clear to the South African Government our serious concern about certain features of the draft Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill, which has since been amended substantially. We shall continue to make clear the unacceptable nature of any legislation which restricted or inhibited the provision of aid funds to the black community.

Sudan

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Sudan.

Mr. Waldegrave: We call on all parties in Sudan to work for the restoration of peace and stability and the early implementation of the plan of action agreed in Khartoum on 9 March by the United Nations conference on the displaced.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the occasions on which the Government have introduced the guillotine since 1979 and indicate after how many hours in Committee on each Bill.

Parliamentary Passes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many passes have been issued to persons acting as secretarial or research assistants to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on (a) 1 October 1988, (b) 1 November 1988 and (c) 1 February 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: It would be inappropriate for me to provide information about passes sponsored by individual right hon. and hon. Members.

SCOTLAND

Agriculture

72. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last made a speech outlining the Government's plans for developing Scotland's agriculture in less populated areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The importance of agriculture in Scotland's rural areas is a regular theme of speeches by my right hon. and learned and noble Friends. Most recently my noble Friend dealt with this among other issues in his keynote address to the annual general meeting of the Scottish National Farmers Union last week.

Dialysis

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new patients per million population in Scotland received (i) haemodialysis and (ii) continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis in 1988 or the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available in the exact form requested. In 1987 (the most recent year for which figures are available) the number of new patients per million of the population (pmp) received on to all forms of dialysis was 58·2. This includes continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis. The total number of patients (both new and existing) receiving dialysis in 1987 was as follows:

	Actual
Hospital dialysis	264
Home dialysis	181
Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis	346

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 749, he will update the 1985-86 review of the arrangements to sell the electoral register to include consideration of (a) the ability of the electoral register being able to access copies of the information held by the community charge officer and (b) the restriction placed on the sale of the extract of the community charge register; if he will publish the 1985-86 review; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans for a further review, for the reasons given in my previous answer to the hon. Gentleman on 24 February at column 749. Copies of the consultation paper which instituted the 1985-86 review were deposited in the Library in December 1984; subsequently, regulations authorising the supply of the register in computer-compatible form were debated in the Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments on 21 January 1986.

A850 Broadford-Kyleakin Road, Skye

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposal which he has received from Highland regional council concerning the upgrading of the A850 Broadford-Kyleakin road, Isle of Skye, with particular reference to (a) the number of objections received and (b) whether he intends to call the application in for public inquiry procedures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend considered the notice of intention to develop, submitted to him by Highland regional council as planning authority on 15 December 1988, together with the 213 letters of objection received, and has decided that the issues involved do not warrant his intervention. A letter was sent to Highland regional council on 23 February indicating that planning permission for the proposed development was deemed to have been granted.

Youth Unemployment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures from all available sources as to the number of 16 to 18-year-olds in Greenock and Port Glasgow without a YTS place, and known to the local careers office to be without work.

Mr. Lang: The only information available on the number of young people seeking YTS places is that held by the local careers services. I understand that on 9 March 1989, 116 young people were registered for work or a YTS place at careers offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Self-Governing Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the two hospitals he expects to have self-governing status by 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This will be a matter for discussion with health boards in the light of responses to the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Crack

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Government measures being taken to reduce the availability and use of the drug known as crack.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's strategy and the wide range of measures being taken to deal with the problem of drug misuse, including the interdiction of cocaine of which "crack" is a derivative, are described in "Tackling Drug Misuse—A Summary of the Government's Strategy", copies of the third (1988) edition of which are available in the Library.

Single European Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of his Department are employed specifically to assist firms preparing for the single European market of 1992; and if he will give a breakdown of the number by grade.

Mr. Rifkind: Within the Industry Department for Scotland there are 63 officers, plus appropriate clerical support staff, employed to deliver assistance to industry under the enterprise initiative. This number comprises:

1 Grade 3
2 Grade 5
1 Grade 6
6 Grade 7
8 Senior Executive Officers
1 Senior Scientific Officer
1 Senior Professional and Technical Officer
22 Higher Executive Officers
21 Executive Officers

The enterprise initiative schemes, although capable of wider application, can all be used by companies to help prepare for the single market. There are also staff in other Scottish Office Departments whose duties include the monitoring of single market developments in specific industrial sectors and to provide appropriate assistance to their client groups.

Investment Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total number of applications (a) received and (b) approved for investment grants from 1 April 1988 to 31 December 1988; what was the total amount of expenditure involved; and what the total estimated expenditure planned for that period;

(2) what was the total number of applications (a) received and (b) approved for innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to 31 December 1988; the total amount of expenditure involved; and the total estimated expenditure involved and (c) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period;

Mr. Lang: The information requested is shown below for the period 1 April to 31 December.

Regional Selective Assistance

	Number
Applications received	188
Applications processed	171
	£ million
Payment authorisations made	23·5

The provision of the financial year 1988-89 is £60·4 million. Expenditure under this scheme is normally concentrated in the last quarter of the financial year.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many firms or businesses have been relocated with London Docklands development corporation assistance since 1981; how many of these firms were moved to locations outside the urban development area; and how many jobs were in firms or businesses relocated with London Docklands development corporation assistance since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the London Docklands development corporation has done to co-ordinate information on job opportunities, trends and forecasts, training needs and take-up of training opportunities.

Mr. Trippier: Several employment and training co-ordinating groups have now been set up in Docklands, which exchange information of this type, and on which the LDDC, local authorities, other agencies and the private sector are all represented.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what gaps in training provisions the London Docklands development corporation has identified; and what intervention it has undertaken to remedy them.

Mr. Trippier: This is primarily a matter for agencies responsible for training provision. The corporation is helping by providing information, improving co-ordination among those involved, and by its contribution to a wide range of training projects.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to see that a high proportion of jobs at Tobacco dock will go to local people.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 31 January at column 201.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown and analysis of existing jobs in the Royal docks area of Newham.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the LDDC's 1987 census of employment, a copy of which has been laid in the Library.

National Newspapers (Docklands)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people, employed by national newspapers who were previously located in the Fleet street area, are now located in Docklands.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held by the Department.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the number of refrigeration units in the United Kingdom containing chlorofluorocarbons that will need to be disposed of by 1995; and what plans are in place to ensure the safe disposal of these units without releasing the contained chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are estimated to be some 30 million domestic refrigerators and freezers in use in the United Kingdom. Some 2 million appliances are disposed of each year. As yet no techniques for the safe disposal of the insulation material have been developed. At least one retailer of domestic refrigerators and freezers will collect the old appliance and recover the refrigerant for recycling. Recycling services, provided by both United Kingdom manufacturers of CFCs and by some refrigeration companies, are widely used by commercial and industrial refrigerants.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations are in place to segregate wastes containing chlorofluorocarbons from other wastes at municipal disposal sites.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. Officials of the Department will shortly be meeting representatives of the local authorities to discuss their role in efforts to reduce emissions of CFCs.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions he has made to ensure that obsolete fridges, aerosols and packaging containing chlorofluorocarbons are disposed of in a way that does not release the chlorofluorocarbons into the atmosphere.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) contained in aerosols are emitted to the atmosphere as their contents are used—old aerosol cans do not therefore generally contain CFCs. The difficulties inherent in identifying which packaging materials contain CFCs, and the logistical problems involved, mean that to legislate for their safe disposal is not a practical proposition. The industries are in any case rapidly moving away from the use of CFCs. For the disposal of refrigerators, I refer to the answer that I gave the hon. Member earlier today.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in research into chlorofluorocarbon replacement (a) HCFC-22 and (b) HCFC-134a.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: HCFC-22 is already commercially available. HCF-134a is expected to be available in commercial quantities in the early 1990s, subject to the satisfactory outcome of toxicological testing and environmental evaluation.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards reducing ozone layer depletion following the conference on saving the ozone layer on 5 to 7 March; and what agreements have been reached with the People's Republic of China to ensure their production of chlorofluorocarbons is minimised.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Progress expected to flow from the saving the ozone layer conference is summarised in the chairman's message prepared by my right hon. Friend. The message will be delivered to the first meeting of the contracting parties to the Montreal protocol in Helsinki in May. I am arranging for the message and the rapporteur's more detailed account of the conference to be placed in the Library. At the conference the People's Republic of China was one of a number of countries to indicate that it would give serious consideration to acceding to the Montreal protocol.

Environmental Council

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings of the Council of European Community Environment Ministers he has attended in person since taking office; and if he will make a statement on the basis on which it is decided which Minister should attend such meetings.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 6 December 1988 at col. 153.

Home Insulation

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will discuss with the local authority associations a joint programme of home heating insulation and make the necessary finance available.

Mr. Trippier: The local authority associations are consulted each year on the method of distributing capital allocations for housing to individual local authorities. In setting allocations, the Department takes into account authorities' own assessments of needs, including that for insulation and heating. A specific sum is currently set aside to finance grants under the homes insulation scheme, but it is otherwise for authorities to determine their own investment priorities for insulation within the total resources available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, on the same basis as table F5, in the Green paper, "Paying for Local Government", what percentage of householders in Leyton constituency whose equivalent net income falls in the range of (a) £100 to £200 per week and (b) £400 to £500 per week would, on 1988-89 figures, pay a higher net community charge, without safety nets, than net rates.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not available. The table in the Green Paper was based on a sample survey which cannot provide reliable estimates for individual constituencies.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) all Government publications relating to the community charge which are to be made available in ethnic minority languages and (b) the languages to be used in each case.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Copeland on 16 February at column 383. My right hon. Friend and I have been preparing a programme for public information which includes these important matters and we shall be making an announcement on our decisions on minority translations in the near future.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of how many people will pay more in poll tax than they currently pay in rates in the Nottingham, North constituency.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Nor have we any estimate of the numbers of gainers and losers in each local authority or constituency, as a result of the introduction of the community charge. Figures published on 15 December 1988 show that nationally nearly 60 per cent. of all households would pay less with the community charge than they do now with domestic rates.

Litter

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the abatement of litter by local authorities a statutory obligation as provided for in the Litter Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Litter Act 1983 gives local authorities powers to take action on litter. We are pursuing a series of initiatives within the existing legal framework and will consider whether any strengthening of the legislation is necessary, including the possibility of implementing section 4 of the Act to require authorities to prepare litter plans.

Detergents

Mr. William Ross: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantities of phosphorus-free detergents were (a) produced and (b) used in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years for which figures are available; what percentage of these were domestic detergents; and whether he has any plans to encourage the wider use of such detergents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Over the last three years there has been no production of phosphate-free detergents in the United Kingdom. Usage, from imports, is estimated to be well below 0·5 per cent. of the total United Kingdom market for detergents. The environmental safety of some current phosphorus substitutes is uncertain. The Government have no plans at present to encourage the wider use of phosphate-free detergents.

Methane Gas

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what initiatives he has under consideration for improving data collection and monitoring of the sources and sinks of methane gas in respect of the rate of increase of methane concentration in the air; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what initiatives he has under consideration to investigate reasons for the rate of increase of nitrous oxide in the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Inventories and assessments of atmospheric concentrations of methane and nitros oxide are in hand under the DOE's research programme as part of the NASA global atmospheric gases experiment. The results will be available for the work of the UNEP/WMO intergovernmental panel on climate change. The chemical sinks of methane are also being studied under DOE's research programme.

Tenants' Charter

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that all local authorities bring to the attention of their tenants and to those on their housing waiting lists, particularly single people, the provisions of the tenants' charter in the Housing Act 1980 with particular reference to the creation of sub-tenancies.

Mr. Trippier: Responsibility for informing their existing and potential tenants must lie with local authorities, but leaflets on the tenants' charter and, specifically, on lodgers, are distributed widely by my Department.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to hold discussions with local authority associations with a view to devising a fairer and more realistic waiting list system for the public housing sector.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans to do so.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report for each local authority in England the number of (a) single people under the age of 21 years and (b) single mothers under the age of 21 years registered as seeking public sector housing.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available centrally.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to require local planning authorities to pay the costs of appeals by applicants against their decisions that are upheld.

Mr. Chope: The Department's circular 2/87 makes clear that costs may be awarded following a public local inquiry if any party to a planning appeal is judged to have acted unreasonably. The Government have no plans to alter the basis for awarding costs.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives of other Governments regarding catalytic converters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Discussions at ministerial level on vehicle emission control issues are a frequent feature of the European Community Environment Council meetings and the preparations for them. If the common position on stage II of the Luxembourg directive for small cars reached at the November 1988 Council is adopted following completion of the co-operation procedure with the European Parliament, we expect that virtually all cars will need to be fitted with some form of catalytic converters.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish fully the Brunel university study into racial harassment which his Department commissioned; and when he expects to announce new proposals to counter such activity.

Mr. Trippier: I cannot yet say when any products of this study will be published; we do not yet have a final draft of the proposed good practice guide, or a draft of the study report.

Air Pollution

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures for the comparative level of (a) carbon monoxide and (b) nitrogen oxide in the air in British cities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 14 March 1989]: The results of air quality monitoring programmes carried out for the Department have been published annually since 1979 in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" and its complementary "Statistical Bulletins". Copies of these documents are placed in the Library of the House. Results for carbon monoxide were first published in Digest No. 2, 1980, and for nitrogen oxides in Digest No. 3, 1981.

New Towns

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the remaining new town development corporations to have completed the development of their respective towns.

Mr. Trippier: Following statutory-consultations, I have announced that Warrington and Runcorn development corporation will be wound up in September 1989. The proposed wind-up dates for the remaining development corporations are September 1991 for Telford and March 1992 for Milton Keynes.

Rural Communities Council

73. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Rural Communities Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of Action with Communities in Rural England, the national body representing rural community councils, on 21 December 1988, when they formed part of a deputation from Rural Voice to discuss rural housing issues. He also spoke about rural housing to the annual general meeting of the Gloucestershire rural community council on 1 September 1988.

Right to Buy

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether officials from his Department have had meetings with officials of the London borough of Sutton to discuss the right to buy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Officials in my Department last met officials of the London borough of Sutton on 19 May 1988 to discuss right to buy. The Government continue to keep a close interest in the performance of all local authorities under right-to-buy legislation.

Turtles

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to curb the import of North American box turtles; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Anyone wishing to import these turtles into the United Kingdom is already required to obtain a licence under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976. We are satisfied that trade does not at present pose any threat to the survival of the species, and it is therefore generally permitted. However, it is and will continue to be carefully monitored so that, if necessary, stricter controls can be introduced to ensure that the animals do not become endangered in the wild.

HMS Cambridge

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will call in the decision by the South Hams district council to refuse permission to erect a five foot high security fence around the borders of HMS Cambridge, the gunnery school at Wembury near Plymouth;

(2) if he will hold a public inquiry into the proposal to erect fencing around the boundaries of HMS Cambridge, the gunnery school at Wembury near Plymouth.

Mr. Michael Howard: No proposal for fencing at HMS Cambridge has been referred to the Secretary of State. Crown development which would require planning permission if carried out by a private owner (including fencing over two metres in height) is the subject of consultation with the local planning authority. So also is development which would not need specific permission but would have a significant planning impact, visually or otherwise, beyond the Department's own site; circular 18/84 sets this out. If the local planning authority objects, the matter must then be referred to the Secretary of State for the Environment. If a proposal is referred, there is provision for a non-statutory public local inquiry.

Incinerators (Pollution)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for new limitations on pollution from incinerators of municipal rubbish; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health and Safety (Emissions into the Atmosphere) (Amendment) Regulations 1989, which are due to come into force on 31 March 1989, will bring under the control of the national air pollution inspectorates all incinerators capable of burning 1 tonne or more of municipal waste per hour. When drawing up control requirements the inspectorates will ensure compliance with the EC directive on the prevention of air pollution from new municipal waste incinerators. Agreement on this directive was reached at the Council of Environment Ministers' meeting on 2 March 1989. Discussions are continuing within the Community on a draft directive dealing with existing municipal waste incinerators.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for new guidance on practices at incinerators to limit dioxin discharges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From 31 March all large incinerators will be under the control of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution. We propose to minimise emissions of dioxins by the strict control of combustion conditions. This is the approach adopted in the EC directive on the prevention of air pollution from new municipal waste incineration plants agreed by the Council of Environment Ministers on 2 March. The EC Commission is setting up a working party of experts to report on control of dioxins from incinerators. We will co-operate fully with this work.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of the newspaper advertisements, "Council Tenants—Who Should Manage Your Home?" placed in the press on Sunday 12 March.

Mr. Trippier: Approximately £81,350.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his definition of the term "acceptable rent" referred to in his Department's advert placed in the Sunday press on 12 March; to which section of the Housing Act 1988 it refers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The term "acceptable rent" is a reference to the proposals for rents (including arrangements for rent review) which tenants transferring under tenants' choice will have accepted in consultations under section 102 of the Housing Act 1988.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had an opportunity to consider the consultants' reports on housing action trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have today published the consultants' reports on the six areas that we proposed for housing action trusts. Copies of the reports have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The consultants have concluded that, having regard to the matters listed in section 60 of the Housing Act 1988, the Loughborough and Angell town estates in Lambeth; the North Peckham and Gloucester grove estates in Southwark; and the Downhill, Town End farm, Hylton castle and part of the Red house estates in Sunderland justify the establishment of trusts. I therefore propose to proceed in these areas, subject to some minor boundary changes.

In Leeds, the consultants consider that the Halton moor, Seacroft South and Gipton estates meet the criteria for designation: but that the most compelling case for a trust is at Gipton. I therefore propose to proceed in that area only.

In Sandwell, the consultants consider that there is not a strong enough case to establish a HAT for the Lion farm, Wallace close and Titford estates; but that the Windmill lane estate would benefit from a trust and that there is also a case for treating a widee area of the Cape hill community. I agree with the consultants' findings. I am therefore asking them to carry out a further study to help us decide whether to proceed with proposals for a trust in that area and where to draw the boundaries.

In Tower Hamlets, the consultants conclude that the problems associated with the six run-down council estates they studied justify the establishment of a HAT. However, a trust could tackle the overcrowding that exists on the estates only if it had enough land to provide more housing for the people who now live there. This could involve considerable disruption of the existing communities and would require a much larger area for a trust than we originally proposed. I have therefore decided not to proceed with my original proposal. If, after discussion with tenants, the council wishes to bring forward a proposal for a different trust area, I would be prepared to consider it.

The Housing Act requires me to consult local authorities and hold a ballot of tenants in each proposed area before I can seek Parliament's approval to orders setting up a trust. My hon. Friend is writing to the leaders of the councils concerned today. I also intend to consult local people fully about how we propose to take matters forward. As a first step, we are sending explanatory leaflets to all individual residents in the proposed trust areas. I also propose to appoint consultants to discuss the proposals with residents and to seek their own ideas for improving the design, condition, management and general living conditions of their estates. Tenants will have time to consider the ideas which emerge from these consultations before they vote on a trust in a ballot.

The creation of trusts provides an opportunity to target extra Government resources on some of our most difficult estates. But it will be for individual tenants to decide whether they want me to proceed. If they do not want a trust, then the available resources can be used to tackle areas of problem housing elsewhere. I am therefore prepared to consider sympathetically any proposal which other councils or tenants wish to bring forward for a trust in their area.

HMS Cambridge

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) in the light of the designation of land at HMS Cambridge in South Hams as an area of outstanding natural beauty, great landscape value, and part of the heritage coastline, if he will ensure that any security fencing in and around the camp is designed with the consent of the parish council and the district council; and if he will make a statement on the present situation;

(2) if he will ensure that no security fencing is erected in or around HMS Cambridge at Wembury in South Hams without planning consent being first obtained from the relevant authority or from him on appeal;

(3) if he will ensure that any security fencing around HMS Cambridge, the Gunnery School at Wembury in South Hams is confined to the immediate area justified by security considerations.

Mr. Neubert: I have been asked to reply. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Architecture (Protection)

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the guidance his Department issues on the protection of squares and other specific forms of architectural layout against inappropriate development in (i) London and (ii) elsewhere.

Mr. Chope: Where there is a clear policy in an up-to-data local plan, which is consistent with the relevant provisions of the structure plan, it will carry considerable weight, and I will be guided by it and my inspectorate in dealing with planning appeals, particularly where the proposal in question raises purely local considerations. The Government recognise the importance of many of London's squares and are satisfied that any proposals affecting them are regulated in the public interest through the planning system.

Many squares also have conservation area protection; special attention must be paid to the desirability of preserving or enhancing the character or appearance of a conservation area in the exercise of development control.

HEALTH

Student Midwives

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student midwives already holding registered nurse qualifications have been seconded by their health authority for their midwifery course; and what proportion is this of all student midwives who are registered nurses.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of research into the sudden infant death syndrome and the Government's contribution to such research.

Mr. Freeman: The Medical Research Council (MRC), the main agency through which the Government sponsors biomedical and clinical research, has, over the years, funded a wide range of research related to sudden infant death syndrome.

I am, however, advised that no particular clinical factors have yet been unequivocally identified as the cause of sudden infant death syndrome. For current MRC research I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend, the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 20 February at columns 524-5. A number of epidemiological factors have been shown to be associated with sudden infant death syndrome. But again none have been unequivocally identified as the cause.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the number of hearing aids dispensed, and their subsequent usage.

Mr. Mellor: We are at present giving detailed consideration to suggestions for changes to the current arrangements for the provision of hearing aids in the context of proposals made by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the current organisation of hearing aid services.

Mr. Mellor: Sixty-two representations have been received calling attention to the recent proposals made by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the "Hearing Aids—the Case for Change" proposals brought forward by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

Mr. Mellor: The suggestions for changes in hearing aid services which have been made by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf are being carefully considered.

Audiology Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf to discuss audiology services.

Mr. Mellor: The most recent meeting on this subject between the Department and representatives of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf was at official level and took place on 25 November 1988. The then Minister of State for Health—my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton)—and my hon. Friend the Minister for the Disabled met representatives of the institute on 29 June 1988 to discuss their views on audiology services.

Midwives (Pay)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Royal College of Midwives to discuss its rates of pay.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met the president and the general secretary of the Royal College of Midwives on 7 December. They had a friendly and useful discussion on a range of issues arising from the 1988 pay award and associated regrading exercise, which gave midwives an average pay increase of over 20 per cent. last year.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest available figures for the number of people on waiting lists in the area of the Trent regional health authority, and the percentage of those on waiting lists who have been waiting for (a) six months or more and (b) one year or more.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the publication "Hospital In-patient waiting lists—England at 30 September 1988—National Regional and District summaries", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Social Workers

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names, professional qualifications and occupations of members of the Central Council for the Education and Training of Social Workers.

Mr. Mellor: The names and occupations of members of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work are set out in the list. There is currently one vacancy on the council. A new council will be appointed from 1 September 1989. We do not hold centrally information concerning the professional qualifications of members.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many post-qualifying social work courses specialising in mental health and mental disorder have been approved by the Central Council for Education and Training of Social Workers; and how many students completed these courses in each year since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: During the period that the Approved Social Worker (ASW) Examining Board was in being (1983-1986), 1,660 candidates working with mentally ill people were successful in ASW examinations. Since 1986 the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work has approved 60 training courses for ASWs in local authorities with places for approximately 900 students. In addition, since the 1983-84 academic year CCETSW have approved the following relevant post-qualifying courses:

(c) Other post-qualifying training courses: a further 103 social work students undertook options in this area of work as part of other post-qualifying studies.

Parallel Imports

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy not to issue product licences for parallel imports for products originating from countries that are not members of the pharmaceutical inspection committee.

Mr. Mellor: No. The United Kingdom product licence (parallel import) scheme covers products from any member state of the European Community. To discriminate against those member states which are not members of the pharmaceutical inspection convention (PIC) might be interpreted as a quantitative restriction on imports and as such would offend article 30 of the treaty of Rome.

Medical Control Agency (Director)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make an announcement regarding the appointment of a director for the Medicines Control Agency.

Mr. Mellor: The appointment of Dr. Keith H. Jones as the first director of the Medicines Control Agency was announced on 3 March 1989. A copy of the press release is in the Library. The agency will come into operation from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to expand the provision of genito-urinary clinics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I wrote to regional health authorities on 28 February announcing that for 1989-90 the Department was doubling the resources available to the National Health Service for the prevention of HIV infection and the provision of services related to HIV infection and AIDS from £58·6 to £129·5 million. In the letter I asked authorities to give particular prominence in the use of the extra money to substantial upgrading of genito-urinary medicine services.

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether every regional health authority area contains secure psychiatric units; how many such units there are in each region; and what steps are being taken to provide further such units;

(2) how many secure units are available to his Department for accommodating mentally disturbed individuals; whether they are available for use by mentally disturbed prisoners; what capacity is available for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Every regional health authority, except South West Thames, has a regional secure unit and many also have interim secure facilities. Officials are to meet representatives of South West Thames Regional Health Authority in April to discuss their proposals for secure provision. Following is a list of regional secure units and interim secure facilities.

All these units are able to take mentally disturbed prisoners where it is clinically appropriate.

Drugs

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many companies have not agreed their annual financial return under the PPRS for the following years (a) before 1985, (b) 1985, (c) 1986 and (d) 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The number of annual financial returns under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme not yet cleared for each of the years concerned is as follows:

	Number
pre 1985	1
1985	3
1986	6

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent, in settling pharmaceutical company annual financial returns under the PPRS, he is taking into consideration the general return to British industry as reflected in the FT 500 index or comparable index.

Mr. Mellor: The renegotiation of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme in 1986 included agreement on percentage rates of return on capital employed for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88. From 1988-89, the Department is required to review the rate of return each year on the basis of principles set out in the scheme. These include taking account of any "significant alterations since the last PPRS rate change in the underlying average return on capital of British industry as brought out for example in relevant changes in the FT 500 index." This requirement is being followed in the Department's operation of the scheme.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmaceutical companies supplying the National Health Service have not applied for a price increase in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested, for companies providing full financial returns under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, is as follows:

	Number
1984	29
1985	38
1986	37
1987	30
1988	31

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the indexed aggregate cost of National Health Service medicines supplied under the PPRS in relation to general inflation from 1986.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have the information in the form requested.

The table shows the indexed aggregate expenditure in NHS medicines in total in 1986-87 and 1987-88; this includes expenditure on generic drugs which are not covered by the PPRS.

	1986-87	1987-88
Indexed aggregate expenditure on NHS medicines in total	100	110·7
Index of GDP deflator	100	105·3

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions have been and are taking place on amending the grey area of PPRS; when an interim review is scheduled; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions have been and are taking place on amending the research and development allowance element of PPRS; when an interim review is scheduled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have been discussions between officials of the Department and representatives of the pharmaceutical industry clarifying the Department's implementation of the provisions in the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme relating to "grey area" excess profits and research and development support arrangements. No amendments to the scheme's provisions are being considered. The scheme provides for either party to request a review "after not less than three years"—i.e. from October 1989.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount spent on drugs in the National Health Service per head of population for each year in the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

Total expenditure on drugs in the NHS, per head of population

NHS (Review)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received on his White Paper on the review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a number of representations on the White Paper. Many still have questions but I have been very pleased by the positive and constructive nature of many of them.

Junior Hospital Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how far the target maximum of one night in three rota commitment for junior hospital doctors has been achieved in each year from 1982 in terms of (1) the number of such rotas and (2) the number of doctors working them.

Mr. Mellor: The information in the form requested is not readily available. The number of junior hospital medical and dental staff in England and Wales who were contracted for 84 hours (broadly equivalent to a one in three rota commitment) or less is estimated to have increased from 9,796 at 30 September 1986 to 10,724 at 30 September 1987.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of contracted hours of duty of junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Mellor: The average weekly number of contracted hours of duty of junior hospital doctors in England and Wales was 83 on 30 September 1987. A survey in 1985 showed that the average weekly number of hours actually worked as against on duty was 57.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior hospital doctors are known to have contracted hours of duty in excess of 104 hours per week.

Mr. Mellor: In England and Wales on 30 September 1987, 1,463.

Consultants (Support Staff)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional staff other than consultants have been assessed as necessary to support consultants in acute specialties under circular EL 88 P82.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities will report their staffing proposals under this circular to the Department in October this year.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments he expects to make to self-governing hospital trusts assuming 250 such trusts and a board of 10; and if he will estimate the value of such appointments assuming the chairpersons of such trusts were remunerated on the present basis of district health authority chairs and the other directly appointed members received £1,000 each.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As the hon. Member will be aware from chapter 3 of the White Paper "Working for Patients", I shall be responsible for appointing the chairman of each National Health Service hospital trust and up to three out of a possible five non-executive members. I am considering the question of remuneration for the chairman and non-executive members. There is little point in calculating the value of these appointments on the basis of assumptions plucked out of the air.

Health Authorities (Allocations)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will provide exemplifications of allocations to regional health authorities on a weighted capitation basis for 1988-89 and 1989-90 on the assumption that direct payments between regions have the same net effect as cross-boundary flow adjustments;

(2) if he will list the cash allocations to regional health authorities for 1984-85 and subsequently both before and after later cross-boundary flow adjustments, and expressing those adjustments as a percentage of the initial allocation.

Mr. Freeman: Under the resource allocation working party method of resource allocation, inter-regional flows were taken into account by adjusting the weighted populations used to determine target shares of resources available. Within the formula, their impact on weighted populations was relatively small. Actual allocations reflected the acceptable pace of change towards these targets over time. It is therefore not possible to disaggregate the cash element of cross-boundary flows in regional health authority allocations to date.

Prescribing Costs

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the per capita prescribing cost for each family practitioner committee in England and Wales in 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The net ingredient cost per capita of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors for each family practitioner committee in England in 1987 was as follows:

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available about per capita prescribing costs for individual general practitioners or general practitioner practices.

Mr. Mellor: A prescribing information system, known as PACT, provides GPs within a practice with information on the number of items per patient and the average cost per patient for their practice, compared with the FPC average. The practice average is calculated using the number of patients on the practice list.

Performance-related Pay (Sunderland)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the bonus paid in 1988 to the Sunderland district general manager and each of his unit general managers.

Mr. Mellor: No. Additions to salary paid under the performance-related pay scheme are confidential between managers and their employing authority.

NHS Policy Board

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the professional qualifications of each member of the new National Health Service policy board;

(2) if he will summarise what expertise and experience in the management and planning of health care provision each member of the new National Health Service policy board has.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not yet decided on the membership of the National Health Service Policy Board.

Hospital Trusts

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if an application to establish a National Health Service hospital trust by the chairman and general manager of a district health authority will be sufficient to initiate the process; and what is the procedure of appeal against establishing a hospital trust.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It will be open to a variety of interests, including the chairman and general manager of a district health authority, to initiate the process. There will be no formal appeal procedure but, in considering an application, I will take account of the views of those with an interest.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any decisions have yet been taken on the remuneration that will be paid, when a National Health Service hospital trust is established, to (a) the chairman, (b) executive members of the board of directors and (c) non-executive directors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. I will set the level of any remuneration for the chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS hospital trusts with the consent of the Treasury. The executive directors will be employees of the trust and their remuneration will therefore be a matter for the trust to determine.

District Health Authorities

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what remuneration the current chairmen and members of district health authorities receive.

Mr. Mellor: Chairmen are entitled to receive remuneration which currently stands at £11,868 a year. They may as an alternative choose to claim financial loss allowance. Members do not receive remuneration, although in certain circumstances they may claim financial loss allowance. Both chairmen and members are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances.

Resource Management Initiative

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of the resource management initiative; and what savings its introduction has achieved.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health has contributed £2·3 million to the six pilot acute resource managment sites to date. In addition, health authorities, both regional and district, have provided some funding to the projects. Piloting at the six sites is still continuing and the initiative is scheduled to be evaluated by the joint consultants committee and the management executive, the co-sponsers of the projects, in October 1989. Financial savings and quality of care benefits will mainly accrue at the sites once their new systems are fully implemented. At most sites this will be during 1989-90 at which point the sites should be absorbing their continuing running costs. To date, benefits have been mainly in the form of an improvement in the working relationship between staff groups and in planning and budget setting.

Dental Charges

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much, on average, dental check-ups are costing patients since December 1988.

Mr. Freeman: From 1 January 1989 the charge for a dental examination is £3·15. Dental examinations are free for people under 18, full-time students under 19, pregnant women and women who have had a baby in the previous 12 months, recipients of income support and family credit and others on a low income.

Benodiazepines

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the average length of time that it takes for those addicted to benodiazepines to be free of all withdrawal symptoms from these drugs.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has no information on this matter.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that benzodiazepines are still being routinely prescribed as sleeping tablets in hospitals; and for what periods.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect centrally information about prescribing patterns of hospital doctors.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any more recent estimates than that published in 1986 of the number of people addicted to or dependent on benzodiazepines; and whether he will give financial support to help people withdraw from these drugs.

Mr. Freeman: There are no precise figures to show the level or trend in benzodiazepine dependence. Significant sums have been invested in the treatment of drug misuse including £17·5 million centrally in grants to 188 local projects many of which also offer help to tranquilliser victims. Regional health authorities have since 1986 received earmarked funds annually for the development of services for those experiencing problems from the use of illicit or prescribed drugs. In 1989-90, the sum will be increased to £14 million. In addition, we are funding MIND to establish a national directory of services for tranquilliser dependants and to produce up-to-date publicity material, and Tranx UK has this year received £10,000 towards its national activities.

Cholesterol Screening

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his Department's standing medical advisory committee to report on mass cholesterol screening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I expect to receive the standing medical advisory committee's report on the cost-effectiveness of opportunistic cholesterol testing by late summer. The standing medical advisory committee has established a working party which is considering the issues and taking expert advice. I understand it will report back to the main committee shortly.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 March 1989]: Eight officers in the Department are wholly engaged in work related to the EC. Others are involved from time to time. Expenditure on travel on EC business is not differentiated from other departmental travel expenditure.

Hospitals (Nurseries and Creches)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the health authorities that provide nursery and creche facilities at hospitals in their district, the names of the hospitals concerned; the number of places available, and the fees normally charged.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 March 1989]: We do not collect this information centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bees

5. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the health of bees is improved rather than impaired by modern agricultural practice.

60. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has commissioned on the effect on the food chain of pesticides and changes in habitat of bees.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Improvement of bee health is primarily a matter for beekeepers themselves. However, I believe that bees will benefit from environmental and set aside measures that we are now taking.

My Department commissions research in several areas relating to pesticides, the habitat of bees and the human and broader food chains. More specifically, we are undertaking research on techniques for monitoring pesticide residues in agricultural produce, on spray drift and on the foraging behaviour of bees and the way of deterring their exposure to pesticides whch are applied to crops.

Bovine Somatotropin

10. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the veterinary products committee to report on its consideration of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The veterinary products committee will recommend whether or not any BST product should be licensed when it has received and evaluated all pertinent data. I cannot say when this will be.

Fraud (EC)

14. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to tackle fraud in the European Community.

Mr. MacGregor: I have regularly been raising the matter of fraud in the Council of Agricultural Ministers. I have suggested various lines of action at the February Council and I shall continue to press the European Commission and the Council of Ministers to strengthen the controls in agricultural legislation against fraud and to follow up vigorously the work done by the Court of Auditors.

Farm and Conservation Grants

15. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has received to his announcement of the farm and conservation grants scheme.

Mr. Ryder: This new scheme was given a warm welcome by organisations with an interest in countryside and environmental matters, such as the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Council for the Protection of Rural England, as well as by the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association.

Research and Development

20. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the future of research and development in his Ministry.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department remains firmly committed to supporting strategic research and work of a public good nature in relation to issues such as food safety, environmental protection and animals welfare. We are engaged in talks with the industry on the Government's decisions that it will in future look to the industry to fund within a reasonable timescale near-market research which is primarily of benefit to the industry.

Sheep Scab Dipping

21. Mr. Fry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account has been taken in his Department's review of sheep scab dipping policy of the consequential benefits in the control of other sheep ectoparasites.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the course of our review we have consulted widely, and considered carefully all the comments received, including those on the incidental benefits in the control of other ectoparasites as well as the scab mite. We have concluded that our control arrangement should include an annual nationwide compulsory dip. There should therefore continue to be benefits in the control of other ectoparasites.

National Farmers Union

23. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the National Farmers Union; and what issues were discussed.

24. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Farmers Union, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the President of the National Farmers Union on 1 March 1989 to discuss potato marketing.

46. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next due to meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no present plans to do so.

Development Advisory Service

25. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the Agricultural development advisory service.

Mr. MacGregor: ADAS continues to provide excellent service. Its future size depends in part on the extent to which industry is prepared to fund near-market R and D and pay for appropriate advisory services.

Veterinary Schools

26. Mr. Adams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for animal health of the proposed closure of the Glasgow or Cambridge veterinary schools.

Mr. MacGregor: My concern is to ensure that sufficient qualified veterinarians are available. This is important among other things to meet the needs of my Department's veterinary service and to ensure that animal health requirements are enforced.

The recommendations of Sir Ralph Riley's report on veterinary education are not about the availability of veterinary manpower but concentrate on the structure of veterinary schools.

These matters are primarily for the Universities Funding Council and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

42. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the implications for the supply of veterinary surgeons for the agricultural industry of plans for the future of the United Kingdom veterinary schools.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received representations from the veterinary profession on this subject.

Meat Products

27. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Shropshire county council trading standards officer regarding compositional standard in meat products.

Mr. Ryder: The trading standards department of Shropshire county council wrote to my Department in April 1985 concerning the labelling of meat products which contain mechanically recovered meat, and again in December 1986 about the meat content of various meat products.

We received yesterday a further letter on the former subject and are examining its content, carefully. The chief trading standards officer has also written to officials about water in poultry meat.

Nature Conservancy Council

28. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council on 7 November last year when we discussed a wide range of subjects.

Scrapie

29. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to make scrapie a notifiable disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to make scrapie a notifiable disease.

Food Safety

30. Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what particular research projects his Department has commissioned, or is assisting, into the cleanliness and safety of food for human consumption.

Mr. Ryder: Those projects sponsored by MAFF, in its 1988-89 food R and D programme, that are relevant to food hygiene and the microbiological safety of foods are as follows:

51. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to set up an independent body to monitor food health.

Mr. MacGregor: Food and Health Ministers already receive advice on this subject from a number of independent scientific committees of the highest standing. In addition we are extending the present arrangements by setting up an expert committee, chaired by Sir Mark Richmond, vice chancellor of Manchester university, to provide authoritative advice on microbiological aspects of food safety; the committee will publish reports both on specific issues referred to it by the Government and on such matters as it considers need investigation.

57. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration is given to food safety by his Ministry.

Mr. MacGregor: The safety of foodstuffs is central to the Government's food policy. From this point of view all aspects of the nation's food supply are kept under continuous surveillance, and the results of that work are carefully assessed by independent experts who advise the Government on any action that may be necessary.

Fishing Industry

31. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the current state of the fishing industry in north east England and the likely impact on that industry of conservation proposals now under consideration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Current fishing opportunities for north-east England fishermen remain broadly unchanged from those in 1988 with the exception of cod and haddock, the stocks of which are giving rise to concern.

We are actively discussing with the industry, including representatives of the fishing industry in north-east England, and in the Community, ways in which the present technical conservation measures might be adjusted to assist the improved conservation of these stocks. Any proposals which emerge will take into account their likely impact on the industry.

Discussions (EC)

32. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his European Community counterpart Mr. McSharry; and what matters were discussed.

33. Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of employees in the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

Mr. Ryder: I have not had any meetings with representatives of employees in the Agriculture and Food Research Council, but my noble Friend Baroness Trumpington attended the annual delegate conference of the Agriculture and Food Research Council branch of the Institute of Professional Civil Servants on 9 February this year.

Green Top Milk

34. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have any plans to ban the sale of unpasteurised green top milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister gave to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 23 February at columns 712-3.

Consumer Protection

35. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the size of the budget within his Ministry for work related to consumer protection; and what plans he has to vary it.

Mr. Ryder: Many of the Ministry's programmes relate wholly or partly to consumer protection. In 1987-88 the programmes devoted entirely to this area of work took up an estimated 5 per cent. of the Ministry's total budget, and 8 per cent. of its running costs. Further details are given in our publication "Ministerial Information in MAFF (MINIM) 1988", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Near Market Research

36. Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the level of future funding for research and development in near market research in horticulture.

Mr. Ryder: The level of future funding for research and development in horticulture will not be decided until after our consultations with industry on near-market research have been completed.

Fish Discards

37. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for reducing the scale of fish discards by fishing vessels in British waters.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are actively discussing with our fish industry and in the Community possible measures which are practicable and do not have unwanted consequences to increase the conservation of fish stocks in the North sea, including reducing discards.

Countryside Commission

38. Mr. Day: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Countryside Commission; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the chairman of the Countryside Commission on 7 November when we discussed many issues of concern to the countryside. I am always ready to discuss matters of mutual concern with the Countryside Commission.

Country Landowners Association

39. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I met the president of the Country Landowners' Association on 15 February when we discussed various matters relating to the tenanted sector, and I also met him on 1 March at a dinner given by Mr. J. Clayton the chairman of the agricultural training board.

Infant Food

40. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has chosen to prohibit the inclusion of certain beef products in infant food.

Mr. Ryder: As my right hon. Friend announced on 27 February, following the publication of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy, the measures that we propose to take to restrict the composition of baby foods are purely precautionary.

Veterinary Officers

41. Mrs. Maria Fyfe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has of his future requirements for veterinary officers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The requirements for staff are under constant review in the light of changing demands and where an increasing need is identified recruitment is undertaken.

Intervention Board

43. Mr. Madel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to extend the responsibilities and duties of the intervention board for agricultural prices, Reading, Berkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no such plans.

Veterinary Service

44. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I consider it of great importance that this country should have a veterinary service dedicated to the maintenance of our high health status. The structure of this service, along with other, similar Government services, is kept under review.

45. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has had discussions with the Institution of Professional Civil Servants about the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials are in frequent contact with the Institute of Professional Civil Servants about matters concerning their members, including those employed in the state veterinary service.

48. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary officers he currently employs in the state veterinary service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: From information available at 1 February 1989 there are 439 permanent veterinary officers in all grades employed in the state veterinary service.

British Veterinary Association

47. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the British Veterinary Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have not met the British Veterinary Association recently but my officials are in frequent contact with them.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

49. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will increase the compensation payable on cattle found to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I believe the compensation paid is fair, given that the animals are suffering from a terminal illness but are valued as though unaffected by the disease.

11. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the sale of those organs from all cull cows and sheep that are known to carry the viral agent which causes bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to the Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Cheese

50. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the use of mineral hydrocarbons in cheese wares.

Mr. Ryder: I have spoken with the Dutch Minister of Agriculture. All representations related to the use of mineral hydrocarbons in cheese rind.

EEC Policies

52. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present agricultural policies within the European Economic Community.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission's most recent statements about the CAP emphasise the need to respect the decisions on budgetary discipline and CAP reform taken by the European Council last February, to promote more market-orientated management of the CAP, to make Community agriculture more competitive, to pursue environmental objectives, and to tackle CAP fraud.

Hedges

53. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many new miles of hedges have been created in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ryder: Figures for new hedge planting carried out without grant aid are not available. However, grants paid in England and Wales under the agriculture improvement scheme for hedge planting, hedge laying and associated gates and stiles broadly equate to 320 miles of hedge in 1986, 1,000 miles in 1987 and 1,450 miles in 1988 (to September only).

Set-aside Scheme

54. Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of arable land will be set aside in 1989; and how many hectares have been registered for possible future set-aside.

Mr. MacGregor: Nearly 58,000 hectares (143,000 acres) of arable land is being set aside in the United Kingdom during the current crop year; and about 3 million hectares (7 million acres) have been registered by farmers not yet setting aside land in case they should wish to apply to join the scheme later.

CAP

55. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met European Community Agriculture Ministers to discuss common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met European Community Agriculture Ministers at the 6-7 March Agriculture Council in Brussels on which I reported to the House on 9 March at columns 621-2.

58. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce de facto discrimination against British producers within the European common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I have always argued that measures adopted by the European Community should be non-discriminatory, and that the burden of CAP reform should be borne equally by all member states. In current negotiations on the Commission's 1989 price proposals I am opposing two measures which would disadvantage United Kingdom producers; the preferential treatment proposed in the agrimonetary arrangements for member states which are members of the exchange rate mechanism; and the proposed timetable for tightening the definition of double-low rapeseed which I believe should be delayed until there are varieties available to our growers which will meet the new definition. The review of the sheepmeat regime and operation of coresponsibility levies are among the other areas where I shall be particularly vigilant to ensure equitable implementation throughout the Community.

Animal Feed

56. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to extend the ban on the inclusion of animal protein derived from ruminants in animal feed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The ban on the inclusion of ruminant-derived protein in ruminant feeds will remain in force until processing methods which are sufficient to destroy the agent which causes BSE have been developed and are widely available.

GATT

59. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on agricultural trade issues in the current general agreement on tariffs and trade round.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster reported to the House on 12 December 1988 at column 400 the outcome of the ministerial mid-term review of the GATT negotiations, including the absence of agreement on agriculture at that stage.

Since then informal consultations have been taking place on agriculture and three other unresolved issues under the auspices of the GATT director general. A meeting at official level of the trade negotiating committee of GATT is to be held in Geneva in the first week of April. The Government hope that firm agreement will be reached there on a framework for action and further negotiation on agricultural reform and will be working to that end from within the Community.

Salmonella

61. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his response to the Agriculture Select Committee report on feed salmonella problems, published on 1 March.

Mr. MacGregor: As I have already indicated the Government will be considering the Agriculture Select Committee's report and will respond formally in due course.

Thames Flood Barrier

62. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times the Thames flood barrier has been (a) tested and (b) used in the last five years.

Mr. Ryder: During the five years, the Thames barrier has been closed 59 times for tests and used for flood protection purposes four times.

Milk Marketing Board

63. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

National Consumer Council

64. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Consumer Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 16 February, Official Report, column 356.

Land Release

65. Mr. Favell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the release of grade 1 agricultural land for residential building in environmentally non-sensitive areas.

Mr. Ryder: Government policy on development involving agricultural land was explained in Department of the Environment Circular 16/87 (Welsh Office Circular 25/87) issued on 8 May 1987. Grade 1 agricultural land is a national resource which should, in general, be protected from irreversible development. Government advice to planning authorities is that such land should not be built on unless there is no other site suitable for the paticular purpose. Responsibility for development control rests primarily with local planning authorities.

Sheepmeat Regime

66. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest developments regarding the reform of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. MacGregor: Discussions on the Commission's proposals to reform the sheepmeat regime have made little progress. The revised voluntary restraint agreement with New Zealand will be considered again by the Agricultural Council next week.

67. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the sheepmeat sector of the agriculture industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall continue to maintain regular contacts with all the farming unions on matters relating to the sheepmeat sector.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

68. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares have been entered into the environmentally sensitive areas initiative; and what proportion of suitable land this represents.

Mr. MacGregor: To date 103,640 hectares have been put forward into the ESA scheme representing some 87 per cent. of the land we considered suitable.

Research (Funding)

69. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the funding of agricultural research.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 7 March at column 463.

Lug Worms

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the threat posed by the recent increase in the gathering of lug worms in the Burry estuary to the Penclawdd cockle industry and the whole area.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the management of the Burry inlet cockle fishery rests with the south Wales sea fisheries committee which has introduced a byelaw to limit the level of bait digging within the fishery. The Committee are currently reviewing the effectiveness of the byelaw.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for the lug worm, arenicola marina, to be included in the list of commercial maritime species to enable it to be included in the bye-laws of sea fisheries committees.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Oils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations have been received by his Department's food advisory committee on the use of tropical oils or vegetable oils from unspecified sources which have increased saturation through hydrogenation processes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The food advisory committee has received no such representations; I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 March 1989 at column 833.

Laboratories

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary and other laboratories were directly under the auspices of his Department in each year since 1979; what proposals he has to maintain these laboratories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 7 March 1989]: The information requested is shown in the table:

[2] The 3 Food Science Laboratories are to be co-located at a purpose built site during 1989-90.
[3] Royal botanic gardens transferred to a board of trustees on 1 April 1986.
Note: My Department will continue to maintain an apropriate number of facilities.

Exports

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the Commission of the European Economic Community has considered proposals for a Council regulation on the monitoring of payments of amounts granted on export of specified quantities of agricultural products to third countries; if this has been considered by the Council of Ministers; and when it will next consider these proposals.

Mr. MacGregor: Following a request from the United Kingdom, the Commission stated at the ECOFIN Council on 13 March that they would bring forward a revised proposal on the monitoring of export refunds which would take account of the points made by the Court of Auditors.

Dog Licences

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of attacks on livestock in the 12 months preceding the abolition of dog licences; what change in the number of attacks on livestock there has been since the abolition of dog licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: National statistics on attacks on livestock by dogs have not been collected centrally since 1978. There is no doubting that such attacks are a serious and continuing problem, but there is no evidence that they have increased recently. The Ministry campaigns continuously to encourage owners to take a responsible attitude and keep their dogs under control in livestock areas.

Poultry Farmers

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will apply the balance of the funds made available for the scheme for compensating poultry farmers for egg production destroyed towards compensating producers in full for their losses from slaughtering of poultry stock.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An order under section 29 of the Animal Health Act 1981 came into operation on 1 March, providing for the compulsory slaughter where necessary of flocks in which salmonella has been confirmed. Compensation will be paid as required under the provisions of the Act.

Import Levies

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money the International Board has owed for over 12 months to ships store merchants by way of repayment of import levies.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under Community regulations, no payments are due in respect of repayment of import levies for ships' stores. Delays have occurred in the payment of export refunds but no claims upon which all necessary information has been properly submitted are delayed as long as 12 months. Compensation is payable on delayed payments under the scheme announced to the House on 28 July 1988.

Food (Destruction)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each food item, and the quantity of it, destroyed during 1988 under the European Community farm regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following were the types and amounts of produce withdrawn from the market in the United Kingdom in 1988 under European Community arrangements, together with the quantitites of each product marketed in the same period.

EC Price Negotiations

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out for each commodity the Government's objectives in the forthcoming EEC agricultural price negotiations; and if he will specify the Government's overall objectives in the negotiations.

Mr. MacGregor: I indicated the Government's reactions to the Commission's 1989 price proposals during the agriculture debate on 27 February. I am seeking to build on the reforms of the CAP achieved so far, to ensure compliance with budget discipline, and to obtain an equitable outcome for United Kingdom producers.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the proposed grant allocation from his Department to the two city technology colleges in Cleveland and Gateshead for each of the next five years and the proposed grant allocation for secondary schools within Durham local education authority for each of the next five years.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend will pay an annual per capita grant to meet the normal running costs of each CTC in line with average costs in LEA-maintained secondary schools in similar areas. The grant for each CTC will depend on a number of factors and the precise levels for the colleges in Cleveland and Gateshead are still under consideration.

The rate support grant is paid in support of local authority services on the basis of an annual settlement. It is not hypothecated to particular services or components of those services. Revenue support grant will operate on similar principles, and it is therefore not possible to define a grant allocation for an authority's secondary schools over a five-year period.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the capital investment allocation from his Department to the two city technology colleges in Cleveland and Gateshead and of the capital allocation for secondary education for Durham local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: The cost of the Macmillan CTC in Middlesbrough, Cleveland will be not more than £7·5 million of which the maximum contribution from the DES will be £5·625 million. A design and cost study is at present in hand on the Gateshead CTC and decisions on the level of capital funding will be taken in the light of this work.

Durham's allocation of prescribed capital expenditure for 1989-90 is £2·133 million of which £2·116 million is for schools. Within that sum no separate allocation is made for the secondary sector.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the expected number of pupils of each of the two city technology colleges in Cleveland and Gateshead for each of the next five years and the expected number of pupils attending secondary schools within Durham local education authority for each of the next five years.

Mr. Butcher: The Macmillan CTC in Middlesbrough Cleveland will open in September 1989 and places have been offered to 195 first-year pupils. The college will admit around 180 first-year pupils in each of the four succeeding years. No decision has yet been made on early recruitment of a sixth form. No decision has yet been taken on admissions to the proposed Gateshead CTC.

Projections of pupil numbers for individual local education authorities are not available centrally.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition Choice and Quality".

Mrs. Rumbold: As education information normally falls outside the guidelines for what can be included in public service broadcasts, these do not emanate from the Department.

Teacher Shortages (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by the four district authorities in South Yorkshire, how many vacancies exist currently in primary, junior, middle, high and secondary schools for teachers in English, mathematics, languages, science, craft and arts subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: Numbers of vacancies in January 1988 for full-time permanent teacher posts in maintained schools of the four authorities in South Yorkshire are listed in the table. Primary school vacancies are not broken down by subject specialism, and they include middle deemed primary and nursery. Middle deemed secondary and high school vacancies are incorporated in the secondary figures.

Under-Fives

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing, for each year 1981-82 to 1987-88 the amount of grant-related expenditure assessment in respect of the additional educational needs of under-fives as a percentage of the total recurrent spending by local authorities on under-fives; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what has been the difference in cash terms, for each year 1981-82 to 1987-88, between the control total for recurrent spending by local authorities on under-fives and the outturn total spending in this category; if he will estimate the amount of any such difference for 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available in the form requested. Grant-related expenditure for the education of under-fives falls under two separate control totals of the grant-related expenditure assessment for education. The nursery control total has 49 per cent. distributed by reference to the additional educational needs index, while the primary total, which includes an allowance for under-fives in primary classes, has 11 per cent. distributed by reference to the additional educational needs index. The under-fives element of the primary control total is not separable from the rest of the total and it is not therefore possible to make the comparison requested.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the grant-related expenditure assessment in respect of primary schools takes account of the numbers of under-fives (a) in nursery classes of primary schools or (b) in ordinary classes of primary schools; what adjustments were made to the grant-related expenditure assessments in respect of primary schools in the years 1981-82 to 1987-88 in connection with the numbers of under-fives in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The grant-related expenditure assessment for primary education takes account of expenditure on under-fives in primary classes. Nursery classes in primary schools fall within the grant-related expenditure assessment for nursery education. The relevant control totals for these GREAs have been increased by 9·7 per cent. and 6 per cent. respectively in real terms between 1981-82 and 1987-88; movements in pupil numbers have been one of the factors taken into account.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the proportions, for each year 1988-89 and 1989-90 of the present grant-related expenditure assessments in respect of the additional educational needs of under-fives in relation to the control totals for recurrent spending by the local authorities on under-fives; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the grant-related expenditure assessment for nursery education in 1988-89 and 1989-90, 49 per cent. is distributed by reference to the additional educational needs index for each authority. Under-fives being educated in primary classes fall within the primary total for grant-related expenditure, of which 11 per cent. is distributed by reference to the additional educational needs index for each authority.

Women Teachers (Career Breaks)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implications of career breaks for women teachers for the problems of teacher shortages identified by his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department's memorandum to the Education, Science and Arts Committee, a copy of which is in the Library, explains the importance of continuing to secure a high rate of teachers returning to the profession, both women and men. I commend to all local authorities the supportive career break schemes developed by some, which provide information and training for teachers out of service and which can ease their return to the profession.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implication of the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 on delegation of staffing responsibilities to governing bodies for the level of adoption of career break schemes for women teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government do not expect the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 to affect the level of adoption of career break schemes for women teachers.

English Teaching

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for English in the national curriculum for pupils aged five to seven years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today published for consultation a draft order with an associated document setting out the attainment targets and programmes of study for English in the national curriculum, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act. The order relates to key stage 1—pupils aged five to seven. Those consulted are asked to respond no later than 21 April. I aim to make the final order in May and implementation will begin in schools this autumn. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order reflects the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council, following consultations on our proposals for English for ages five to 11. I am most grateful to the council and to its officers for their work on this report. The attainment targets and programmes of study I am publishing today relate to key stage 1 pupils aged five to seven only, since requirements for pupils aged seven to 11 will not be implemented until 1990. They build upon the council's recommendations so as to set rigorous objectives, such as the council and I both wish to promote. I am also publishing a statement of reasons why the draft order differs from the precise terms of the council's recommendations, in accordance with section 20(5)(a)(ii) of the Act.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting on the draft order under the provisions of section 21(3) of the Act.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time (a) before cases come to court and (b) for which remand prisoners are held before trial (i) in the Nottingham area and (ii) in England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. John Patten: National estimates of the time taken to process criminal cases in magistrates courts are published regularly in Home Office statistical bulletins—the most recent being issue 2/89 of January 1989. The table also gives the estimated number of days from offence to the date of first listing at magistrates court for Nottingham.

Information is not available centrally on the average time spent on remand in individual establishments. The information available relates to the average time spent on remand in all prison service establishments by untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners and is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.1 of the latest issue for 1987, Cm 547). Copies of both the bulletin and the Command Paper are in the Library.

Butane Gas Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many retailers have been prosecuted in the last year for failing to obey the law in respect of selling butane gas canisters or gas refills to minors; and whether he has given any advice to police forces about pursuing a more vigorous prosecution policy in this area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics of prosecutions brought under the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985 do not distinguish between the supply of butane gas canisters and of other volatile substances. In 1987—the latest year for which information is available—15 people were prosecuted for supplying such substances to minors, and 11 of them were found guilty. Circulars have been issued to police forces giving guidance on solvent misuse and drawing attention to the provisions of the 1985 Act. Enforcement of the Act is an operational matter for chief officers of police.

Senior Police Officers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has for each police force of the number of (a) senior management, (b) detective inspectors and (c) officers in specialist crime squads, and as to the numbers of men and women in each group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the sex of detective inspectors and officers in specialist crime squads is not held centrally. Information on the senior officers down to chief superintendent level in each force is set out in the table.

Mentally Disturbed Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to institute a system of psychiatric bail hostels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A consultation paper "Bail Accommodation and Secure Bail Hostels" was issued on 13 February 1989. Among other issues, the paper raises the question of bail hostels for the mentally disturbed and invites comments by the closing date of 9 May 1989.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to keep mentally disturbed individuals remanded in custody out of prison or police cells for minor offences when those individuals declare they have no fixed abode; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Bail hostels and other accommodation for bailees are available for mentally disturbed individuals who have no fixed abode as for any other individual at risk of remand in custody. Courts have information about such accommodation drawn regularly to their attention.

Armed Forces (Personnel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of service personnel who take up employment in (a) the police force and (b) the prison service after leaving the armed forces; and what percentage of these are armed forces personnel who left before fulfilling their contract of engagement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the purposes for which 111,313 classic lethal dose 50 or lethal concentration 50 tests were undertaken in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The figures, under the headings used in table 2 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1987 (Cm. 515), are as follows:

Primary purpose	Scientific procedures Thousands
A. Body-system studies (fundamental and applied)
Respiratory or cardiovascular	6
Alimentary	4
Other system of body, multiple, or system not relevant	39
B. Applied studies or purposes
Diagnosis	2
Safety	59
Production	1
Total	111

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to remove the requirement for LD50 tests where he considers these no longer necessary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Secretary is not responsible for any such requirements.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what severity level was permitted in toxicity tests involving 1,902 beagle dogs in 1987 for substances used in agriculture, substances used in households, testing of food additives and testing for cosmetics and toiletries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally.

"The Satanic Verses"

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he received from Moslem organisations concerning Mr. Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses" prior to 14 January.

Mr. John Patten: About 90 letters. In addition, I met a delegation of ambassadors from three Islamic countries and the director of the Islamic cultural centre of London.

Bristol University Bombing

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable for Avon and Somerset as to the section of the Prevention of Terrorism Act under which the 10 people arrested following the recent bombing at Bristol university were held.

Mr. Hurd: I am informed that 10 people were arrested in connection with offences of criminal damage and detained under the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

"Punishment, Custody and the Community"

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations and individuals who have made written responses to date to the Green Paper entitled "Punishment, Custody and the Community"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received over 160 responses to the Green Paper. These came from judges, the Magistrates Association, benches of magistrates and individual magistrates; from the Central Council of Probation Committees, the Association of Chief Officers of Probation, the National Association of Senior Probation Officers, some probation committees and chief probation officers; from police representative organisations; from the Justices Clerks Society and the Prison Governors Association; from the Association of County Councils, the Association of Directors of Social Services, the British Association of Social Workers, the Conservative Women's National Committee, the Labour party, the Law Society, NACRO, the Prison Reform Trust, Victim Support, and other organisations and individuals. We are considering these comments carefully and a further statement will be made in due course.

Gibraltar Inquest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the number of Metropolitan police officers who were assigned to duties in Gibraltar in March 1988 unconnected with the circumstances which led to the deaths of three terrorists and as to what advice was given to them as to whether to appear as witnesses at the inquest into the deaths of the alleged terrorists.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that four Metropolitan police officers were assigned to duties in Gibraltar in March 1988 to carry out inquiries into criminal activities unconnected with the circumstances which led to the deaths of the three terrorists. They were there with the permission of the Gibraltar authorities. It was a matter for the coroner to decide whom to call as witnesses at the inquest. Those four officers were not called.

Drink Driving

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on blood samples taken in drinking and driving cases in the Greater Manchester police area since 1986.

Mr. Hurd: All forces in England and Wales, other than the Metropolitan and City of London forces, are supplied with blood sampling kits by the Home Office. Between March 1987 and December 1988, police stations in the Greater Manchester police area were issued with kits in which the alcohol-free swabs had been replaced by the stores department of the force with swabs acquired from an independent source.

It was later found that these locally substituted swabs contained a solution with a very small percentage of alcohol. The blood analysis results in a number of these cases may therefore have been affected. The Home Office was notified by Greater Manchester police as soon as this knowledge became available. I am arranging to review as quickly as possible convictions which may be unsafe as a result and will also consider representations from individuals who believe that they were wrongly convicted.

This was a regrettable error within the Greater Manchester police. The unsuitable swabs were withdrawn from use in Greater Manchester immediately the problem came to light. This affects cases in the Greater Manchester police area only. Inquiries have established that no other force has substituted unsuitable swabs for those supplied by the Home Office.

Prisoners (Family Ties)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to promote prison inmates' family ties.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have taken a number of steps in recent years to help prisoners in maintaining contact with their families, in particular through increased opportunities for home leave, the introduction of payphones in open prisons and the abolition and relaxation of routine censorship of inmates correspondence in open and category C establishments.

From April the prison department will for the first time be able to make grants towards the costs of running visitors' centres outside prisons. Such grants may be made either to help start up new centres or to help existing ones in financial difficulty. In some cases these grants are likely to be crucial to the survival of the centres concerned. The department is also encouraging the establishment of creches within prison visiting rooms wherever practicable, to improve the quality of visits for small children and for their parents alike. The assisted prison visits scheme, under which close relatives on low incomes may have the costs of their visits to prisoners paid by the Government, is to be extended so that assisted visits to sentenced prisoners may take place straight after reception. Cardphones for inmates' use are to be installed in all category C prisons and their equivalents in the female and young offender systems later this year. Revised prison standing orders which come into force on 1 April will abolish long-standing restrictions on the purchase of stamps by inmates from their own money and relax restrictions on the purchase of phonecards. All these measures will help prisoners to keep in touch with their families while in custody and, we hope, help them to stay clear of crime after their release.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on British Shipbuilders' external finance limit for 1988-89.

Mr. Newton: British Shipbuilders' external finance limit for 1988-89 was originally set and published in the 1987 Autumn Statement at £80 million. Against the background of the disposal and closure of British Shipbuilders subsidiaries, I have now set a revised EFL for 1988-89 of £145 million. This increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Tibet

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Chinese Government regarding the latest actions by Chinese troops in Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Chinese Government are aware of our dismay at further violence and loss of life in Lhasa. We believe that the most promising solution to the problem of Tibet is through dialogue between the Chinese Government and the Tibetan people, including the Dalai Lama. We have called for the early start of such a dialogue which the Chinese Government have themselves proposed.

Brazil (Debt Rescheduling)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussion with Sir Kit McMahon, chairman of the Midland bank, about the rescheduling of debt to Brazil, and the consequences for Amazonia.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed Amazonia or the rescheduling of Brazil's bank debt with the chairman of the Midland bank.

WALES

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will show 1986-87 outturn expenditure, 1987-88 estimated expenditure and 1988-89 planned on (i) trunk roads, broken down into (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance, and (c) routine maintenance, and (ii) local authority roads broken down into (a) new construction and improvements, and (b) maintenance, (iii) public transport administration and (iv) local authority car parks, broken down into (a) capital and (b) current (net), and (c) road safety in Wales.

Housing Sites

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how much of the 200 acres designated for housing in the valleys, housebuilding has started; at what sites; for how many dwellings; of what approximate final selling cost; and by what private companies or housing associations.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The current total figure for Land Authority for Wales land designated for housing in the valleys programme area is 245 acres.

Since the start of the programme the authority has sold or contracted to sell sites totalling 27 acres at Penpedairheol and Pontypandy, which will result in approximately 170 new starts on dwellings in the first year of the programme and are as follows:

i. Penpedairheol (19 acres)—purchased by Wimpey.
Start 1st phase, 90 dwellings, week commencing 20 March 1989.
Selling price—complete range of dwelling types from 2 bedroomed terraced to 4 bedroomed detached from £40,000-£95,000.

ii. Pontypandy, 8 acres—purchased jointly by Eastlake and Deri Homes, Caerphilly.
Start 80 dwellings mid summer 1989.
Selling price 30 per cent. under £40,000; 40 per cent. £40,000-£55,000; 30 per cent. £60,000-£75,000.

The land authority anticipates bringing forward 40 acres per annum, mid-year to mid-year, to cater for all sectors of the housing market and envisage further sales will take place between now and the middle of the current year.

In addition to disposing of its existing land bank in the area, the authority is actively investigating the purchase of additional sites throughout the programme area, and are also discussing co-operative ventures with Tai Cymru and the WDA.

EMPLOYMENT

Passive Smoking

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Health and Safety Executive's advice on passive smoking.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive advises employers to limit the exposure at work of non-smokers to tobacco smoke. I welcome the publication by the executive in November 1988 of a free booklet, "Passive Smoking at Work", which recommends that employers, in consultation with employees or their representatives, develop and implement policies to control smoking in the work place. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Training Boards

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what level of funding and what percentage of the training within each industry is provided by the statutory training boards;

(2) in each industry for which statutory training boards exist, what is the estimated amount of funding spent on training outside the training boards.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the forms requested. Details of the activities of industrial training boards are published in their annual reports, which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what relationships he envisages between statutory and non-statutory training boards and training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Cope: Industrial training organisations, whether statutory or non-statutory, have important sectoral training roles including standard settings which were set out in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s". The TECs will not set their own standards. We expect that ITOs and TECs will seek to work together to promote training and enterprise among employers in particular sectors at local level.

Job Clubs

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what period unemployed people are enabled to make use of the services of job clubs for the purposes of seeking employment.

Mr. Lee: There is no time limit on job club membership. Members can stay for as long as it takes to find a job, provided that they continue to comply with the terms of membership.

ENVIRONMENT

Gravelines Nuclear Plant (Leak)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was informed by the French nuclear safety authorities about the leak in the reactor housing of the Gravelines nuclear plant on the Channel in February; and what assessment he has made of the danger it posed to members of the United Kingdom public.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We were not informed of this incident. We understand that there was no release of radioactivity to the environment, and consequently there was no need for Her Majesty's Government to be informed.

Historic Sites

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a breakdown of central Government support for sites of historical interest by any convenient chronological classification of the date of the sites.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not possible to analyse expenditure according to types or age of sites. Public funds for the recording, preservation or maintenance of sites of historical interest are provided through a number of channels.

English Heritage has powers to make grants for the repair or maintenance of individual buildings of outstanding architectural or historical interest and, where necessary, to acquire buildings or to assist local authorities or the National Trust to do so. It also funds rescue archaeology, aimed at making a record of important sites before development. Total central Government grant in aid for English Heritage's activities during 1988-89 was £66·1 million. Funds were allocated as follows:

	£ million
Properties in care	18·0
Grants for historic buildings and ancient monuments/buildings in conservation areas	24·0
Archaeology	7·3

Activities equivalent to those of English Heritage are carried out in Scotland and Wales by the Scottish Development Department and the Welsh Office respectively.

The Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England exists principally to maintain the scholarly archive on architecture and archaeology. In 1988-89, it received £3·9 million from central Government funds. Similar activities to those of the English Commission are carried out by its Scottish and Welsh counterparts.

The National Heritage Memorial Fund is empowered to give financial assistance towards the cost of acquiring, maintaining or preserving land, buildings, works of art and other objects of outstanding interest which are also of importance to the national heritage. There must be some connection between the subject of an application for assistance from the fund and the United Kingdom. Grant in aid for 1988-89 amounted to £3 million.

The Redundant Churches Fund seeks to preserve certain Church of England churches of special historic, architectural or archaeological significance, which have become redundant. Central Government assistance for 1988-89 was £0·95 million.

The Department of the Environment has direct responsibility for managing and maintaining the royal parks and palaces estate. In 1988-89, the net provision for this purpose was £45 million.

In addition, the Property Services Agency has a large number of historic buildings and monuments in its care, including the Houses of Parliament and major government buildings.

Amazon Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission an urgent study of the effects on the climate of northern Europe of widespread destruction of the Amazon rain forest, particularly in relation to westerly air currents, originating in the area of the Andes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Work on the potential impact of Amazon rain forest destruction on global and regional climate change is already in hand as part of the Meteorological Office's research programme. An international review of all aspects of the science of climate change, of which rain forest destruction is only one, is currently being carried out by the inter-governmental panel on climate change, set up under UNEP/WMO auspices in November 1988. The science review is led by the director general of the Meteorological Office, Dr. John Houghton, with funding from the Departments of Environment and Energy and is expected to report in mid-1990.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition Choice and Quality."

Mr. Ridley: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by the BBC. It will be for the new Channel 3 and 5 licensees to consider whether they will broadcast such messages. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television will not be affected by the proposals.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will send guidance notes to community charge registration officers reminding them that any personal data held by them cannot be used or disclosed for any other purpose unless specifically allowed for by legislation or supporting regulations; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Detailed guidance on data protection and the community charge is contained in community charge practice note No. 4, which was published in August 1988, and in practice note No. 10, published in February 1989. Copies of all practice notes are in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how many responses he has received to the regulations on students and the poll tax; what was the balance of opinion in these responses; and if he will list the organisations that have responded, and place their responses in the Library.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 7 March 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. We have received 43 responses to the draft regulations on students and the community charge. Most of the comments concern the detail of the draft regulations and it is not therefore possible to attribute a balance of opinion to the responses. The organisations which have responded are listed in the table. Their responses were not submitted on the basis that they would be published although anybody who wished could make their own response known.

Engagements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for 4 January, the places visited by him, his travel arrangements and the mileage involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Parish Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist to prevent (a) a chair of a parish council and (b) a parish councillor, also holding the post of clerk to the same council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: By section 80(1)(a) of the Local Government Act 1972, anyone holding a paid office (other than chairman or vice-chairman) under a local authority is disqualified for membership of that authority. Neither the chairman nor a member of a parish council may therefore be a paid clerk of the council. By section 112(5) of that Act, however, any member of a parish council may be appointed as an unpaid officer of the council. A chairman or member of a parish council may thus be an honorary clerk to the council.

Local Authority Assets

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to issue guidance to local authorities on the privatisation of local authority assets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Specific guidance is issued on such matters as the transfer of local authority housing, as appropriate. The Audit Commission report on local authority property management published in February 1988 has already recommended that local authorities regularly review their property portfolio to ensure that it is being put to appropriate use and is not surplus to their requirements. Progress in implementing these recommendations is being monitored by the Department in consultation with the Audit Commission and the local authority associations.

Redbridge (Voluntary Transfer)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations on the London borough of Redbridge's intention to spend £500,000 on its proposals for voluntary transfer.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has received no such representations.

Asbestos Water Pipes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what adverse effects have been identified from the use of asbestos pipes for water supplies; what is the total estimated use of such pipes; what is the current estimated cost of replacement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 March 1989]: There is no evidence of a risk to health from the levels of asbestos found in drinking water in the United Kingdom, including any derived from the use of asbestos cement pipes.

About 10 per cent. of water mains in the United Kingdom are made of asbestos cement. The cost of replacing them is not known.

Thames Water Authority (Land)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North, Official Report, 14 December 1988, columns 904-5, he will state what exclusive, or near exclusive, arrangement has been made by the Thames water authority concerning disposal of land it deems surplus to operational requirements.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 15 March 1989]: The arrangements made by water authorities for the disposal of surplus land are a matter for those authorities subject to the statutory obligation to achieve the best price reasonably obtainable for the property they sell.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the railway inspectorate to examine whether the design of passenger carriages in new trains proposed for any of London's Underground lines provide for either (a) fewer seats or (b) more people to stand, than the current carriages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The railway inspectorate examines as a matter of course all aspects of proposed designs for new underground rolling stock submitted to it by London Underground Ltd.

Exit Barriers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the annual year-on-year estimated cost of repairs and maintenance for the automatic exit barriers installed in London Underground stations following completion of the installation programme; and what is the estimated life of such barriers.

Mr. Portillo: These are management matters for the Underground, to which the questions should be addressed.

Transport Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the real unit cost of each additional officer recruited to the transport police.

Mr. Portillo: Additions to the complement of the BTP are estimated to add some £30,000 per annum per officer to the total cost of the force in a full year.

Ticket Machines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to what items of information are held on the magnetic strips of the weekly, monthly and season tickets used in London Transport's automatic ticket machines.

Mr. Portillo: The magnetic strip holds data relating to the type and validity of the ticket but the precise details are commercially confidential to prevent fraud.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prevent the installation of automatic ticket machines which can trace or monitor the movements of a particular ticket holder; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. The matter of compliance with or enforcement of the Data Protection Act is a matter for the Data Protection Registrar.

Milford Bypass (Sound Barrier)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the construction of sound barrier banks on the A3 Milford bypass; how many residents will benefit from them; and what compensation is being paid to those where no barrier is proposed.

Mr. Channon: Sound barrier banks will be provided at no additional cost. Some 70 properties will benefit by a noise reduction of 1dBa or more. Compensation will be payable under the relevant legislation. The amounts, which will be subject to negotiation with the district valuer, cannot be estimated at this stage.

High-Speed Rail Line

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department's financial evaluation of British Rail's high-speed line proposal will be expected to show, after using a commercial discount rate, a positive net present value in the year in which construction commences to ensure compliance with the provisions of section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Mr. Portillo: Before this project can proceed, the Government will require any British Rail investment in it to show a positive net present value discounted at the discount rate agreed between the Department and British Rail. For the purpose of such calculations the year to which the costs and revenues are discounted is immaterial.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what he estimates will be the minimum discount rate that will be applied to his Department's financial evaluation of British Rail's high-speed line proposed to ensure compliance with the provisions of section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Mr. Portillo: If the new line were to be financed by British Rail, the board would need to demonstrate that the project would produce a commercial return. The discount rate used to test this (currently 7 per cent.) will be agreed between BR and the Department. It will need to reflect the Treasury's required rate of return, which is intended to ensure that commercial public sector investment programmes (such as BR's) provide a rate of return which is broadly equivalent to that which could be achieved in the private sector. The required rate of return was set in 1978 and is currently under review.

Driver Licensing (Harmonisation)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consult motoring and other transport organisations about the European Commission's proposals to harmonise driver licensing in member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are today consulting interested organisations about the Commission's proposals for driver licensing. A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

Bringing our driver licensing system into line with other European countries makes sense. Drivers who go abroad will benefit from having an internationally recognised licence. There is still a good deal of work to be done on the details of the proposal. Our objectives in the forthcoming negotiations will be to ensure that:

- road safety remains the first priority of driver licensing and the transport needs of all United Kingdom citizens are fully recognised in the years ahead;
- licence holders from other member states who come to live in Great Britain are required to obtain a British licence;
- drivers of minibuses used for non commercial purposes and light goods vehicles up to 7·5 tonnes are not forced to take a second test;
- the degree of detail relating to disabilities required to be shown on the licence is reduced to a level that is compatible with our licensing arrangements.

Provided that we can get these important points satisfactorily resolved, the proposed European Community regulations should benefit drivers by ensuring that when they go abroad they have an internationally recognised licence, and do not face complications about their rights or abilities to drive different categories of vehicle.

Motorway Service Areas

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy and practice for providing new motorway service areas in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our general policy for motorways is to provide service areas at strategic sites roughly 30 miles apart. Motorway service area (MSAs) rank as Crown developments and the general policy is that their siting, planning, design and operation are arranged by the Department to ensure:

(1) The development of an adequate national network of MSAs;

(2) Genuine competition between prospective operators through the competitive tendering of sites;

(3) Road safety, by restricting access to the motorways; and by preventing inappropriate activities at MSAs, in particular consumption of alcohol;

(4) The maintenance of the necessary range of facilities for 24 hours a day, including facilities for the disabled and provision for heavy goods vehicles.

In practice, the Department identifies sites, seeks planning clearance for a proposal and acquires the freehold of a site, either by agreement or by compulsory purchase. Competitive tenders are then sought from the private sector for the development and a long lease of the site in return for a premium payment. The successful tenderer then builds and operates the MSA.

It is sometimes suggested that service areas would be developed more quickly if the Department were to withdraw from MSA provision. There is no reason to believe this would be the case. There would remain a need for careful choice of site subject to the normal planning processes, and delay would be likely to arise from the need to determine competing planning applications, particularly where public inquiries were necessary. There have already in fact been cases where competing applications have delayed provision of the Department's strategic sites.

To ensure the development of a national network and the other objectives of competition, road safety and range of facilities, it is essential for the Government to take the lead in the provision of MSAs.

TRRL (Research Marketing)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives exist for the transport and road research laboratory to market British research in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 16 March 1989]: As part of the United States strategic highway research programme, the Department of Transport has co-financed (with the science and engineering research council) a representative to join the permanent staff in Washington.

This officer's duties include seeking opportunities for British research organisations to tender for contracts within the $150 million SHRP budget. The transport and road research laboratory has submitted a tender within this framework, together with several other United Kingdom organisations.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will send guidance notes to community charge registration officers reminding them that any personal data held by them cannot be used or disclosed for any other purpose unless specifically allowed for by legislation or supporting regulations; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Data protection guidelines for community charges registration officers in Scotland which cover the disclosure of personal data have been prepared by the Scottish Assessors Association following discussion between themselves and the Data Protection Registrar. My right hon. and learned Friend does not propose to issue any additional guidance on this matter.

Taxi Driving Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the frequency of subject access requests to police forces from drivers in connection with applications for taxi driving licences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Applicants for subject access under the Data Protection Act are not required to state the reasons for their application.

Mentally Disturbed Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in each year for the past five years the number of suicides in each establishment for which he is responsible; how many of those concerned were known to have had a history of mental disturbance; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table below.

Penal establishment: Number of suicides

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Barlinnie Prison	2	3	3	3	5
Cornton Vale Institution	—	—	1	—	—
Dumfries Young Offenders Institution	—	—	—	1	—
Edinburgh Prison	1	—	1	1	1
Glenochil Institution	1	2	—	1	1
Perth Prison	—	1	2	—	—
State Hospital
State Hospital, Carstairs	—	2	2	—	—

Of the 34 cases of suicide, 14 of the inmates were known to have had a history of mental disorder.

Wherever inmates are considered to be at risk preventive measures are taken in relation to their accommodation and observation. In the event of a suicide, careful consideration is given to the subsequent findings of the fatal accident inquiry or internal investigation and procedures reviewed. Although the greatest care is taken by staff to identify, protect and treat those who are thought to be at risk, deaths from unpredictable and determined acts of self-destruction do occur.

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show 1986-87 outturn expenditure, 1987-88 estimated expenditure and 1988-89 planned expenditure on (i) trunk roads, broken down into (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance, and (c) routine maintenance and (ii) local authority roads broken down into (a) new contruction and improvements, and (b) maintenance, (iii) public administration and (iv) local authority car parks, broken down into (a) capital and (b) current (net), and (c) road safety in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

£ million cash	1986-87 Outturn	1987-88 Outturn[1]	1988-89 Estimate
1. Motorways and Trunk Roads
(a) New construction and improvement	79·2	94·6	88·6
(b) Structural maintenance	15·9	18·2	22·9
(c) Routine and winter maintenance	19·3	17·8	18·7
2. Local Authority Roads
(a) New construction and improvement[2]	130·5	115·5	130·8
(b) Maintenance	156·2	172·4	192·7
3. Public Transport Administration[3]	25·2	27·8	29·0
4. Road Safety in Scotland[4]	1·5	1·7	1·7

[1] Local authority outturn figures are provisional only.
[2] Includes local authority expenditure on car parks which is no longer separately identified.
[3] Local authority expenditure on administration of roads and transport services.
[4] Excludes expenditure by the Department of Transport on national road safety publicity. Expenditure on new construction and improvements and on maintenance also contributes to road safety.

Appledore-Ferguson Ltd.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received a letter from Mr. Hugh Hagen, convenor shop-stewards' committee, Appledore-Ferguson Ltd., Newark Shipyard, Port Glasgow on the negotiation on the disposal of the yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend received a letter on 7 March from Mr. Hagen requesting a meeting with him to discuss the future of the Ferguson yard. In view of the statement made to the House on 24 February by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, when he announced that British Shipbuilders were inviting new bids for Fergusons by 31 March, it would be premature for my right hon. and learned Friend or me to meet representatives of the work force at this stage. My right hon. and learned Friend has written to Mr. Hagen accordingly.

Lurcher's Gully

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all inquiries which have been undertaken into the status and development of Lurcher's Gully since 1979, giving in each case the cost to public funds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The inquiry held in 1982 is the only inquiry under the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Acts which has been held into possible development at Lurcher's Gully. The cost of that inquiry to public funds could not now be established except at disproportionate cost. The Select Committee on Scottish Affairs made recommendations about future skiing development at Cairngorm in the report of its inquiry into the Highlands and Islands Development Board in 1985, but the cost of that inquiry is not a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend.

THE ARTS

Museum of Mankind

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will ask the trustees of the Museum of Mankind to mount an exhibition and seminar to promote Amer-Indian art from the Brazilian rain forest.

Mr. Luce: The exhibitions policy of the British museum, of which the Museum of Mankind is a part, is a matter for the museum's director and trustees and is not something in which I should intervene.

I understand, however, that between 1985 and 1987 the museum mounted a major exhibition entitled "The Hidden Peoples of the Amazon", which included two thirds of the Amazonian collections of featherwork, costumes, pottery and other everyday artifacts, many of which show a strong artistic inspiration. The exhibition was supported by a series of films and lectures at which contemporary environmental and cultural problems were discussed.

In 1978 the museum hosted a smaller exhibition on the art of the Brazilian Indians and it continues to provide many schools, specialists and general inquiries with information about the native peoples of Amazonia.

DEFENCE

Frequency Transmissions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on human health;

(2) what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on plant life;

(3) what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on animal life;

(4) what information he has regarding the effects of extremely low frequency electric and magnetic radiation on plant, animal and human life.

Mr. Sainsbury: Long-term studies of the effects of ELF and power line frequencies have produced no evidence to suggest that there are adverse public health effects or adverse effects on plants and animals. The fields that would be produced by the proposed system are several orders of magnitude less than the National Radiological Protection Board's reference level figures for the protection of persons.

Frequency Transmissions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the antennae for the planned trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland will be mounted above ground or buried below ground;

(2) to which local authority application will be made in regard to planning permission for the planned trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland.

(3) when planning permission will be applied for in regard to the planned trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland;

(4) what is the proposed maximum power requirement for the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland; and what will be its maximum power output;

(5) what areas of the United Kingdom have been identified as potential sites for operational extremely low frequency transmitters;

(6) if the exact site characteristics and possible cable routes for the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland have now been identified;

(7) if he will state the conductivity, in mho per metre, of the underlying bedrock of the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland;

(8) what will be the maximum range of the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland;

(9) what area, in hectares, the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland will cover.

Mr. Neubert: The present plan for the proposed trial ELF transmitter at Glengarry forest is that a notice of proposed development (NOPD) is to be produced with a view to submission to the Highland regional council later this year. The NOPD will be a comprehensive formal document containing information about the purpose of the ELF aerial, its proposed course, the unique features of the site, positioning of related facilities, technical and civil engineering concepts, design proposals and methods of construction.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the total cost to date of the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland; what is the latest estimated construction cost of the project in the years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993; and what is the current total estimated cost of the project;

(2) how much has been spent, to date, by his Department on the area of extremely low frequency communications; and how much it is planned to spend by the end of 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to give out details of expenditure on specific research projects.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the progress of the upgrading programme for the Royal Navy very low frequency communications system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 10 February 1989 at columns 859-60.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any contracts have been awarded to Rediffusion Radio Systems, in regard to extremely low frequency communication systems.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet determined whether or not extremely low frequency communications systems will have an operation role to play in improving the operatinal effectiveness of Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: One of the functions of the ELF demonstrator programme is to investigate what operational capabilities such a system might offer. No decision on the use of ELF will be taken prior to the results of such research being available.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there has been any co-operation between the United Kingdom and French Governments with regard to the use of extremely low frequency technology for the purpose of communicating with submarines;

(2) if there have been any agreements between the United Kingdom and French Governments regarding the use of extremely low frequency communications facilities for the purpose of communicating with submarines;

(3) if it is proposed that there will be any co-operation between the United Kingdom and French Governments with regard to the use of extremely low frequency technology for the purpose of communicating with submarines;

(4) if it is proposed that there will be any agreements between the United Kingdom and French Governments regarding the use of extremely low frequency communications facilities for the purpose of communicating with submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: While it is the policy of the United Kingdom Government to partake in research collaboration with other nations in order to make the most efficient and cost-effective use of our resources; it is not our policy to disclose specific topics which are the subject of such collaboration.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any agreement exists between the United Kingdom and United States Governments regarding the use of TACAMO very low frequency communications systems for communication with Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United States TACAMO very low frequency communication system is used with a NATO role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: TACAMO is a United States communication system. It could therefore be used to relay NATO messages to United States forces assigned to NATO.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if any Royal Navy submarines are currently equipped to receive extremely low frequency transmissions;

(2) how many Royal Navy submarines will be equipped to receive extremely low frequency transmissions from the proposed trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest in Scotland when it becomes operational in 1993.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on operational matters of this kind.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Royal Navy submarine has ever used the United States TACAMO very low frequency communications system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any agreements exist covering the use of the extremely low frequency transmitters in Wisconsin and Michigan, USA, for the purpose of communicating with Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no agreements between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments concerning the use of these transmitters.

Nuclear Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the United Kingdom first entered into negotiations towards nuclear disarmament under the terms of article VI of the 1970 non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Article VI of the non-proliferation treaty requires the parties to it to pursue negotiations on effective measures connected with nuclear disarmament. Since the United States and the Soviet Union possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons it is universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations falls to them. The United States and the Soviet Union are currently engaged in such negotiations which aim at 50 per cent. reductions in their strategic nuclear weapons.

"Peace and Security"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the book "Peace and Security" edited by Susan Forrester.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence library already has a copy.

Scientists Against Nuclear Arms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any invitation has been received for officials in his Department to attend as observers at the annual conference of Scientists Against Nuclear Arms on 22 and 23 April.

Mr. Sainsbury: To the best of my knowledge, no invitations have been received for officials in my Department to attend as observers at the annual conference of Scientists Against Nuclear Arms.

Condor 2

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the range of the Condor 2 ballistic missile system under development by Argentina.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no reason to doubt recent press reports which suggest that the Condor missile could have a range in the region of 600 miles (1,000 km).

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role was played by Her Majesty's Government in the drafting of (a) the 1983 Montebello agreement and (b) the 1987-88 intermediate nuclear land forces treaty of Washington.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On the first part of the hon. Member's question, Her Majesty's Government were fully involved in both the preparation of the high level group report and in the subsequent ministerial meeting at Montebello in October 1983.

On the second, the 1987-88 intermediate land nuclear forces treaty is a treaty between the Governments of the United States and the Soviet Union. However, as one of the five European basing countries, Her Majesty's Government were kept fully informed at all stages of the negotiations.

Calder Hall and Chapelcross

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has with (a) British Nuclear Fuels plc and (b) any other corporate organisations in respect of Calder hall and Chapelcross; and what is their value.

Mr. Sainsbury: British Nuclear Fuels plc produces and processes special nuclear materials for the Ministry of Defence, but for security reasons and in accordance with the practice of successive Governments, details and costs of the programmes undertaken by the company cannot be disclosed.

Vehicle Testing

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what criteria roughly 470 miles of cross country use on each of two medium mobility DROPS validation vehicles is considered adequate troop trialling;

(2) what mileage onroad, offroad, and cross country he will expect future medium mobility vehicles to complete in trials; and what similar mileages have been demanded of other medium mobility vehicles in the past;

(3) why he has not so far submitted the performance and reliability of the latest design of MMLC DROPS to protracted cross-country trialling; and if he will make a statement on the implications for the confidence of soldiers and the general public in such equipment of the absence of such trials.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 March 1989]: Trials requirements for medium mobility vehicles vary according to their roles and battlefield missions. In the case of the DROPS medium mobility load carrier they are particularly demanding, but the programme is nevertheless ahead of schedule. In addition to troop trials, in the evaluation and validation phases the DROPS vehicle has so far covered some 146,000 km including some 10 per cent. cross-country and 20 per cent. off-road. The design of vehicle recently trialled by BAOR is essentially the same as that originally evaluated and has been accepted by the Army as meeting the operational requirement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Desert Locust Control Organisation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Desert Locust

Control Organisation in 1988; whether its work has been restricted in any countries; what action the Government have taken to maximise the Desert Locust Control Organisation's effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1988 we contributed a total of over £700,000 for the locust control activities of the Desert Locust Control Organisation in Eastern Africa (DLCO-EA), mainly in the form of emergency supplies. We also committed £1·75 million for its armyworm control project, of which we spent over £60,000 in 1988. We understand that conflict in northern Somalia and Ethiopia restricted DLCO-EA's ability to work in certain areas.

Following a review of DLCO-EA in 1987, carried out with the European Community, we are providing an operations adviser, two pilots and training for DLCO-EA staff to help to improve operational performance. We have also offered to provide expert advice in strategic planning, financial management and vehicle fleet management, together with a number of trucks. Only when we receive confirmation that DLCO-EA is implementing the recommendations of the 1987 review will we consider providing further long-term support.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total fees paid out by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and each year to date; and what is the estimate for the current year.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The estimate of fees to be paid to outside consultants in the current year and amounts spent in each of the last four years is as follows:

	£ thousand
1984-85	1,217
1985-86	2,041
1986-87	2,094
1987-88	2,347
1988-89	2.510

Comparable figures for the years 1979-80 to 1981-82 are not available because of machinery of Government changes and the figures for 1982-83 and 1983-84 could only be given at disproportionate cost. The figure for the the current year is a forecast outturn. Information distinguishing between different types of consultancies (for example, management and other) is not available.

Fish Farms

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to on what advice or research work, with respect to disease and parasite control stocking density and site separation, the Crown Estate Commissioners have based their revised guidelines for the siting and design of fish farms.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 14 March 1989]: In preparing revised guidelines on fish farming the Crown Estate Commissioners have drawn on a wide range of experience [illegible]esearch. Guidelines on the siting and design of marine fish farms in Scotland were published in 1987 following consultation with the relevant departments, agencies and interest groups. Further experience and commissioned research provide the basis now for an expansion of the locational framework and the advice on operating standards. One of the most important elements is the distance between fish farms and the indicative standards recommended in the guidelines reflect the range of expert opinion.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to which interested parties are being consulted over the Crown Estate Commissioners' revised guidelines for the siting and design of marine fish farms.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 14 March 1989]: The Crown Estate Commissioners have consulted the following bodies with a draft of their development strategy and area guidelines:

Scottish Office Departments
Highlands and Islands Development Board
Countryside Commission for Scotland
Nature Conservancy Council
Relevant Planning Authorities
National Farmers Union of Scotland
Scottish Salmon Growers Association
Association of Scottish Shellfish Growers

HEALTH

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his Department's study of child abuse to make its report.

Mr. Mellor: Perhaps the hon. Member would specify which study he is referring to.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom responses to the White Paper, "Working for Patients" from organisations representing patients should be sent; and by what date they should be sent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Each working paper gives the name and address of a contact point in the Department. Where proposals depend on primary legislation the necessary discussions with interested parties need to be completed by May 1989.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from rural general practitioners since the publication of the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a very small number of representations from individual GPs.

Medical Audit

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on medical audit in other European Economic Community countries, including the cost thereof.

Mr. Mellor: Comprehensive information on EC work on medical audit could only be provided at disproportionate cost, but I have lodged a list of publications in English, compiled by the Kings Fund Centre, in the Library.

Malaria

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conveniently available figures he has for the costs of research, work and treatment of malaria and related disease.

Mr. Freeman: There is no central figure available for the cost of treatment of malaria and related disease. The number of cases of malaria notified in England and Wales in 1986 (the latest year for which figures are available) was 1,663.

The main agency through which the Government support medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. In the financial year 1987-88, the total cost of projects with relevance to malaria supported by the MRC was approximately £1·8 million. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for funding in competition with other applications.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton, Official Report, 22 February, columns 671-72, if he will list separately in the Official Report for (a) each district health authority and (b) each family practitioner committee the number of members from black and ethnic minority communities as at (i) 1 January 1979 (ii) 1 January 1984, and (iii) 1 January 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The appointment of district health authority members is the responsibility of the relevant regional health authority and local authorities. In our guidance about how these appointments should be made we encourage them to draw members from ethnic minority groups where appropriate.

We do not monitor the ethnic composition of family practitioner committees. However, FPCs are asked when seeking nominations to ensure that organisations representing ethnic minorities are encouraged to put names forward.

Broadcasting

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the likely implications on public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition Choice and Quality."

Mr. Mellor: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by the BBC. It will be for the new Channel 3 and 5 licensees to consider whether they will broadcast such messages. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television will not be affected by the proposals.

Organ Transplants

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he can report on the introduction of the Hoffenberg system of audit of brainstem deaths; whether there has been any increase in the number of transplanted organs since previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The national audit of deaths in intensive care commenced on 1 January 1989. We shall shortly be assessing its operation; it is too early to draw general conclusions from the study.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are currently on the waiting list for kidney and other transplants.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service the number of National Health Service patients waiting for organ transplants in the United Kingdom on 12 March 1989 was:

Organ	Number
Kidney	3,556
Heart or Heart/Lung	442
Liver	47

Decade of Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department is giving to the United Nations global project to promote the decade of disabled persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor : The Department of Health is providing rent-free office accommodation at its premises in London for the project manager of the global secretariat of the United Nations global project.

South Cumbria District Health Authority

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes in front-line staff in South Cumbria district health authority have been achieved since 30 September 1982 in both numbers and percentages.

Mr. Mellor: The information is shown in the table:

NHS staff in post in South Cumbria district health authority at 30 September: Front line staff[2]

Whole-time equivalents[1]		Change 1982 to 1987
1982	1987	WTE[1]	Percentage
1,280	1,330	+50	+3·9

Source: Department of Health Annual Census of NHS Medical and Non-Medical Manpower.

[1] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole time equivalents. Changes calculated on unrounded figures.

[2] Includes medical and dental (permanent paid, honorary and locum staff, nursing and midwifery [including agency] and professional and technical [excluding works]) staff.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been in the numbers of both in-patients and out-patients treated since 30 September 1982 by South Cumbria district health authority, including percentages.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table:

In-patients and out-patients treated, South Cumbria District Health Authority 1982 and 1987-88

	1982[1]	1987-88	Percentage change
In-patient cases	17,313	22,088	27·6
New out-patients	24,291	30,720	26·5
Total out-patients attendances	107,419	129,961	21·0

[1] Data prior to 1987-88 was collected on a calendar year basis, and since then on a financial year basis.

Doctors (Contracts)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will summarise the responses he has so far received to his proposals to change the doctors' contract.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's plans for improving the family doctor service and making it more responsive to patients were set out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health". The objectives of this White Paper were widely supported in many quarters including the representatives of general practitioners, the general medical services committee. Following 12 months' consultation with the GMSC negotiators, I recently set out the Government's plans in more detail in the report "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", which I sent to all general practitioners.

I have received a variety of responses in person, in writing and through the helpline set up for GPs in my Department. The response of individual GPs depends to some extent on their circumstances. Those who provide fully comprehensive services and are attracting patients to their lists are able to see how their practice incomes can increase as a result of the reforms we advocate. Others are recognising the need to change the way they run their practices if they are to maintain practice incomes at present levels. To summarise, the responses vary, but a number of important changes are enthusiastically welcomed, such as the greater emphasis on health promotion and disease prevention and on health care in areas of deprivation.

I intend to have a further meeting with the GMSC negotiators myself and I still regard myself as engaged in a process of consultation with them, despite the outspoken comments of some of their leaders and of some of their local medical committees.

NHS (Pay)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from National Health Service staff regarding the new pay round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have received almost 700 letters since the beginning of August about the 1989-90 pay round of staff groups covered by Whitley councils; mostly about the pay of professional and technical staff.

Social Workers (Training)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work has provided guidance to local authorities about refresher training for social workers approved in connection with the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work is to publish guidance on refresher training for local authorities for approved social workers later this year, following widespread consultation.

M. and I. E. Dentsply

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to re-examine the allegations that Mr. Richard Gibson, formerly an employee of M. and I. E. Dentsply, has made in relation to the manufacture of hospital anaesthetic equipment; (2) whether, in the light of the allegations made by Mr. Richard Gibson, he will order an immediate inspection of all the medical equipment the National Health Service has purchased from M. and I. E. Dentsply.

Mr. Freeman: No. I am satisfied that the allegations have been properly investigated and evaluated.

Occupational Therapists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how short of its official establishment of occupational therapists, expressed in percentage terms, is (a) the National Health Service, (b) the Trent region and (c) the Leicestershire health authority.

Mr. Mellor: The most recent survey data published in the evidence to the pay review body indicate that nationally just over 14 per cent. of occupational therapy posts are unfilled after three months. The figure for the Trent region is 19·3 per cent. We do not hold centrally data on unfilled posts at district level.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the waiting time for a first visit by an occupational therapist in (a) the Market Harborough area, (b) the Leicester area, (c) the Trent region and (d) nationally, today; and what were the comparable waiting times (i) five years ago and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally. Local authorities are responsible for the provision of domicilliary occupational therapy. My hon. Friend may care to write to the relevant local authority for the details he requires.

Stair Lifts

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average delay in assessing a request for the installation of a stair lift (a) nationally, (b) in the Trent region and (c) in the Leicestershire health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. Assessments of need for the installation of a stair lift are the responsibility of local authorities who are required under section 4 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to make an assessment when requested to do so by a disabled person or their carer.

Mechanical Equipment (Safety)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many anaesthetic machines were recalled during August, September or October 1988; by which companies they were manufactured; and what were the circumstances behind the decision to recall.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions in the last five years metal particles or swarf have been discovered in anaesthetic gas systems; and by which companies the machines were manufactured;

(2) what information he has on the effect the presence in an anaesthetic gas system of metal particles or swarf could have on the machine and the anaesthetised patient.

Mr. Freeman: No such incidents have been reported from the NHS to the Department in the period in question under our defect reporting system. The scale of any problem would depend on the size, shape and distribution of particles within the system, the type of breathing system in use, and the positioning and type of filter within the gas system.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what circumstances an order is issued by his Department to recall a piece of medical equipment; and what criteria are used when deciding whether to issue such an order.

Mr. Freeman: The circumstances under which medical equipment is recalled vary with the type of equipment, the nature of its use and the potential hazard involved. It is recalled primarily where there is an unacceptable risk to the safety of patients or staff.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any faults were found by his Department's inspectors with the quality assurance systems of M. and I. E. Dentsply in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: A small number of points were raised as a result of the inspections and were remedied by the company shortly afterwards. The company remains registered under the Department's manufacturer registration scheme.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department's guidelines allow the purchase of anaesthetic tables for the National Health Service to contain certain industrial valves which have had to be modified for medical use.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. International standard ISO 5358 is the relevant standard and health authorities purchase to this standard.

Kidney Disease

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of kidney disease in the Norwich health district and nationally in the most recent year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the incidence of disease is not collected centrally. The estimated number of in-patient cases treated in 1985 (the latest year for which statistics are held centrally) are shown.

Estimated number of in-patient cases treated with main diagnosis of kidney disease in NHS non-psychiatric hospitals, England, 1985

The sample numbers held in the Department's database are too small for reliable estimates to be made for Norwich health district.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a detailed breakdown of his Department's expenditure on the launch of the White Paper, "Working For Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The costs of the launch of the "Working for Patients" White Paper were as follows:

Operating Department Assistants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals the Whitley council is considering in relation to improvements in the pay and conditions of operating department assistants; what consideration the Bevan committee is giving to recommendations concerning operating department assistants; and what grade operating department assistants are currently employed on.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 March 1989]: A Department of Health study on staffing and utilisation of operating theatres is being overseen by a steering group chaired by Professor Peter Gilroy Bevan. A final report is due shortly. It is expected that the report will contain some recommendations on the grading and deployment of operating department assistants.

Operating department assistants are employed in 3 grades, trainee, basic and senior. Their pay and grade structures are being examined by a working group of the management side of the professional and technical staff B Whitley council.

Benzodiazepines

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in the light of large-scale addiction to benzodiazepines, he proposes to change the present system of regulating the pharmaceutical companies; and what measures have been taken to ensure that such addictive drugs cannot be introduced in future.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 March 1989]: I have no plans to change the present regulatory system which pharmaceutical companies must follow before a medicinal product can be licensed for sale or supply in the United Kingdom. Benzodiazepines are only available on prescription, and doctors have been issued with guidance on prescribing these drugs in the light of the latest evidence on addiction. When considering whether to advise that a new medicinal product should be licensed on the basis of safety, quality and efficacy, the Committee on Safety of Medicines takes account of all relevant factors including any evidence there may be that the product may be addictive. Its advice would be given only after weighing very carefully the likely benefits of the product against anticipated risks. Where appropriate, suitable advice would be issued to prescribers.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken or is going to be taken following the chief medical officer's meeting with the leaders of the medical profession to discuss benzodiazepine prescribing.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 March 1989]: A number of useful suggestions were made at the meeting including the development of guidance on good practice which could be used at practice level. A research study has been funded to fill some existing gaps in our knowledge with the aim of giving doctors a practical means to improve their prescribing of benzodiazephines.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received the report, "The Transport of Plutonium by Air and Sea", written by Jonathan Spink and Paul Helliwell for the European Proliferation Information Centre on behalf of the national steering committee of the nuclear free zone authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has received a copy of the report. A copy of my Department's reply on the security and proliferation issues raised in the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Historical Mine Equipment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what steps are being taken to preserve historical mine equipment in particular when a pit is being closed and the site cleared; and whether he is aware of any records of the original fire engine at Barnburgh pit, Doncaster.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

CEGB (Capital Investment)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the current rate of return sought by the Central Electricity Generating Board on new capital investment;

(2) by how much he has increased the rate of return as new capital investment by the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The current required rate of return on new investment by nationalised industries is 5 per cent.

Lea Hall

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discuss with the Central Electricity Generating Board when Lea Hall power station at Rugeley, Staffordshire, will be retrofitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the Central Electricity Generating Board and its successors to determine the order in which large coal-fired power stations should be retrofitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment in order to meet their share of the United Kingdom's commitment to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions. The board recently announced the award of a contract to retrofit flue gas desulphurisation equipment to the Drax coal-fired power station.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Graduates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the likely demand on a national basis, for veterinary graduates in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sir Michael Swann's committee of inquiry into the veterinary profession recommended in 1975 that the manpower needs of the profession should be reviewed by the Government at intervals of approximately five years. The last review, chaired by Lord Stodart of Leaston, recommended in 1985 that the annual intake of students by veterinary schools between 1986 and 1990 should be 302 per annum.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I are currently considering whether to carry out another review.

Green Product Labelling

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations his Department has received concerning the creation of an independent expert investigative body to examine green product labelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 16 March 1989]: No representations have been received concerning the creation of an independent body to examine green product labelling.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Household Incomes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the rise in real household income between 1979 and 1985, broken down by economic type, for all decile groups and the average, in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh South, 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 819-20.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A table providing this information has been put in the Library. It should, however, be noted that the principal objective of the "Households Below Average Income" statistics is to measure improvements in living standards in different parts of the income distribution for the population as a whole. The tables are not designed to measure the living standards of individuals by economic status within each decile of the population. Although compositional figures by economic status are included in the main "Households Below Average Income" statistics, it should be noted that the information on real income increases by economic status within each decile provided in reply to this question does not provide a meaningful guide to improved living standards.

Hostels

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 27 October, Official Report, column 337, he intends to defer any change in hostel dwellers' benefits until after April 1990; and when he expects to make an announcement of any new system of benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 16 March at columns 546-48.

Statistics

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the scope of statistics recorded by receptionists at his Department's local offices; and what details are included.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local social security office receptionists keep a simple tally of all callers plus, in the case of some income support and social fund callers, information about identity, residence, and reasons for the call and its outcome. The information about numbers is required for staffing purposes, and about individuals for claim processing purposes. A statistical exercise is conducted for a short period each year to establish caller waiting times. This information is not necessarily recorded by receptionists.

Pensions (Canada)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions have been held between his Department and the Canadian Government regarding the uprating of pensions payable to pensioners residing in Canada; and when the most recent meeting took place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The most recent meeting between officials of the Department and Canadian officials to discuss a possible agreement to include the uprating of pensions payable to British pensioners in Canada was in 1983. Further progress has not been possible because of the considerable public expenditure implications—about £48·5 million a year at April 1988 pension rates—of such a change to a policy consistently followed since 1955.

Family Credit

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates family credit take-up to have been in 1988 in terms both of expenditure and caseload; and if he will explain the basis on which those estimates have been calculated.

Mr. Moore: For employees, the estimated family credit expenditure take-up during 1988 was 65 per cent. Take-up by caseload was about 50 per cent.

Figures obtained by modelling 1985 and 1986 family expenditure survey data suggested that caseload take-up was approaching 50 per cent., but we wanted to substantiate this with a direct estimate from up-to-date information. We therefore asked the social survey division of the OPCS to carry out a manual examination of FES returns for the period April to December 1988. Five thousand three hundred and six returns were examined. All family credit recipients were identified. Households with no dependent children or no adult in full-time work were eliminated and those families whose income clearly made them ineligible were also excluded. A detailed calculation of family credit entitlement was carried out for the remainder. The results of this exercise indicate a lower total eligible employee population than the assumption originally made in October 1987, and show that in 1988 it was about 500,000. This compares with an average live load during 1988 (including eligible cases awaiting award) of about 253,000. The basis of this estimate is the same as that which was always used to estimate family income supplement take-up. Families which include someone who is self-employed are also eligible for family credit. During 1988 the average number of such families receiving family credit was about 24,000.

Whilst the sift and calculations were carried out to a very high standard, the results are subject to the uncertainties of small sample sizes. This exercise provides the best and most up-to-date information available, and supports the results we had already obtained from modelling 1985 and 1986 FES data.

These estimates show that during 1988 there were probably still over 250,000 families who were eligible to receive family credit but who did not claim it. This underlines the need for the major advertising campaign which my Department is planning to start in April to ensure that these people who are, or may become, eligible for family credit are made aware of that eligibility and given every opportunity to claim.

Transport Disasters (Social Fund)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether there have been any demands on the social fund contingency reserves following the series of transport disasters; and if there is a fixed sum set aside;

(2) how much has been paid out in social fund crisis loans by the Department of Social Security offices covering the Lockerbie area following the air crash and in Inverness following the recent floods; and if any other Department of Social Security offices have call on this contingency fund.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The local office which serves the Lockerbie area is Dumfries. To date no applications to the social fund have been received as a result of the air crash.

The local office at Inverness has received four applications to the social fund in respect of the recent flooding in Inverness. These applications resulted in three awards of community care grants totalling £1,571 and one award of a budgeting loan of £260·52. There were no applications for crisis loans.

A contingency reserve of £2 million is held centrally and is primarily intended to meet additional and unforeseen expenditure arising from disasters and emergencies which individual local offices cannot meet. There are no specific sums set aside within this reserve. To date there have been no applications for additional amounts from the contingency reserve.

Pensioners (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the additional living costs of pensioners in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of how claimants' benefits will be affected by the £2 a week reduction in housing benefit transitional protection in April; which groups will have their payments reduced; and in what circumstances the reduction will not apply.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It has been made clear from the outset that housing benefit transitional payments would be reduced as increases in other benefits make them less necessary. The flat rate deduction of £2 in April 1989 will apply to the majority of recipients, but will ensure that the majority of them gain in cash terms from the uprating. There will be special arrangements to protect the small number of people dependent on social security benefits who would otherwise see a cash loss.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the predicted income support increases from October of £95 million in 1989-90 and £195 million in 1990-91 will be offset by savings in expenditure on income support transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available. Transitional protection will not be affected when the increases are introduced in October.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the allocated funds for transitional protection will be spent in the current year, based on the number of claims received, the proportion of successful claims and the average award; and if he will give an indication of the expected expenditure on the scheme in 1990 on this basis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the 445,885 applications for housing benefit transitional payments received at 13 March 185,726 (45·6 per cent. of those assessed) have been successful, 219,314 refused and the average award is currently £3·91 a week. The majority of cases outstanding are because of inquiry forms not having been returned from local authorities. In view of the recent decision to defer the closing date for applications until 30 June 1989 and the number of applications still being received, it is not yet possible to estimate the expenditure in 1988-89 or 1989-90.

Social Fund

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will list, for each social security office in Scotland, for each month of the current financial year, the number of (a) successful claims and (b) unsuccessful claims for assistance from (i) social fund grants and (ii) social fund loans; and if he will give a breakdown of the number of unsuccessful claims at each office into categories of reasons for refusal.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of successful and unsuccessful claims and applications is available in the Library. Information about unsuccessful claims and applications broken down into categories of reasons for refusal could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will list, for each social security office in Scotland, the amounts allocated for (a) social fund grants and (b) social fund loans for the current financial year and the total amounts spent from (a) and (b) at the end of each month of the current financial year, expressing the latter figures also as percentages of the total allocations for the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available from the details in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in view of the effect of the Housing Act 1988 on rental levels, he has any plans to impose cash limits on housing benefit payments for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such plans. Housing benefit will continue to be available to help those on low incomes with their reasonable housing costs up to market rent levels.

Peto International Institute

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had about providing some financial assistance for the Peto international institute in Budapest; and whether he has yet made a decision.

Mr. Scott: Ministers received an invitation from the Hungarian Government in December 1988 to participate in developing an international Peto institute. I met a delegation from the Hungarian Government in London on 17 January to discuss the Hungarian plan in greater detail, and ways in which any financial contribution from the United Kingdom could benefit children in this country, both through their use of the international institute, and through continued Hungarian support for related developments in the United Kingdom. These discussions are continuing.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table of each social security change since the major reform of social security in April 1988 including changes as part of the April 1989 uprating, showing the gainers and losers and the spending and savings as a result of each measure.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 February 1989]: The majority of the changes made in social security since April 1988 are set out in the amendments to the regulations made under the Social Security Acts. Major changes have been announced in statements to the House by my right hon. Friend. These include the changes to the capital rule and transitional protection on housing benefit, announced on 27 April 1988 at columns 356-61; the uprating of social security benefits on 27 October 1988 at columns 455-58, which included details of the additional resources available for low-income families with children from April of this year and the extra help for poorer pensioners announced on 24 November 1988 at columns 241-49.

Other changes have been given in written answers, in particular the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 18 July 1988 at columns 487-88, which detailed changes to board and lodging arrangements; the reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 28 February at columns 161-62 concerning widows' benefits and the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 13 March at columns 27-28 which gave details of additional help to vulnerable 16 and 17-year-olds. Precise estimates of the effect of every change in social security since April 1988 are not readily available. Estimates of the numbers affected by individual changes, where available, were included in the announcements. The "Impact of the Reform Structure of Income-Related Benefits" shows the estimated effects on claimants of the changes that took place in April 1988.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Britannia Bridge

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any assessment of (a) the cost or (b) the effects on safety of a reversible lane on the Britannia bridge on the Commercial road (A13) at Limehouse.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The provision of a reversible lane, while the repair works are being carried out, was ruled out for safety reasons.

Engineering Materials

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the progress of the inquiries by British Transport police into contracts for engineering materials; when they are likely to be completed; and if he will make a statement on the involvement of any managerial staff.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that inquiries by the British Transport police are continuing and are likely to take some time to complete. These are matters for the British Transport police, the Attorney-General and the Lord Advocate.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards encouraging the use of catalytic converters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply he received from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 16 March at column 319.

Hazardous Substances (Road Transport)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to increase the fines payable by haulage firms failing to comply with regulations on the safe transportation of dangerous substances by road; and if he will make a statement on the EEC report on long-distance drivers and safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to do so.

Most relevant offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 are dealt with summarily in magistrates' courts, where the maximum penalty for each single offence is £2,000. Magistrates can refer serious cases on indictment to the Crown court, where the maximum fine is unlimited.

The study of hours worked by drivers engaged in international road transport was carried out in Holland in 1984-85. It recommended that drivers should work fewer hours, and that there should be increased enforcement.

The 1986 EC drivers hours regulations include provisions for increased weekly rest and a recent EC directive setting minimum levels of enforcement came into effect on 1 January 1989.

Fissile Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the regulations to be met by consignors of plutonium and other fissile materials exported by sea.

Mr. Portillo: The regulations and conditions for the transport of all radioactive materials (including plutonium) are based on the internationally accepted standards of the International Atomic Energy Agency safety series No. 6. A copy is held in the Library.

For United Kingdom sea consignments these are given effect by:

The Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981 (SI 1981 No. 1747).

The Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) (Amendment) Regulations 1986 (SI 1986 No. 1069).

In addition, the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 1333) apply to all modes of transport.

City of Westminster (Coach Parking)

Mr. Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with the City of Westminster council regarding parking arrangements for coaches in London SW1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I met the chairman of Westminster City council's planning and development committee in December last year as part of my continuing effort to support the council with its coach parking responsibilities. Our discussions concentrated on how illegal on-street parking by tourist coaches might be discouraged and how legal parking arrangements might be improved.

These discussions have been taken forward by my officials. Westminster have met the Metropolitan police, who have written to the Bus and Coach Council explaining that in a bid to minimise illegal coach parking, especially in streets surrounding Buckingham palace, the Houses of Parliament and Westminster Abbey, they will be carrying out an advice and enforcement campaign starting this month and continuing throughout the summer.

My officials also attend Westminster's coach working party, which discusses a range of coach parking issues across London; and the Department has commissioned a major comprehensive study of tourist coach traffic in London, which is due to report later this year.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation to abolish bus lanes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to abolish the power of local highway authorities to install bus lanes. My hon. Friend will know from my answer to his question on 10 February that we believe that bus lanes can be justified when the benefit to bus users exceeds the cost to other road users. I am writing to him enclosing a copy of our current technical advice on the subject.

City of Westminster (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet officials of the City of Westminster council to assess the bus lanes and the traffic flow between Vauxhall bridge road and Drummond gate, London SW1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are not aware of any particular reasons for an assessment of bus lanes and traffic conditions between Vauxhall bridge road and Drummond gate.

Freight (Continental Europe)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the proportion of freight to continental Europe by (a) weight and (b) value which will be carried (i) through the Channel tunnel, (ii) by air and (iii) by sea, broken down where possible by individual port, on completion of the tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The Department of Transport does not produce forecasts of cross-channel freight traffic in total or by mode. Instead, on certain occasions, when the pattern of future cross-channel freight traffic has implications for the public sector, it forms its own view on the available forecasts.

Air Services (Malta)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now designate British Island Airways as a British carrier for the Gatwick-Malta and Manchester-Malta routes commencing on 10 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: British Island Airways was designated for these routes on 10 March 1989.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive in his Department the written decision from the Civil Aviation Authority regarding the recent route licence applications by Air Europe, Air UK, Monarch and British Island Airways to Malta starting on 1 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has received a copy of the decision, which was dated 10 March 1989.

Air Transport Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many air transport licences have been revoked in each of the last 10 years other than for non-use;

(2) how many air transport licences have been revoked in each of the last 10 years for subsequent non-compliance with statements of intent given at Civil Aviation Authority route licence hearings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These are matters for the Civil Aviation Authority. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Coastguard (Breeches Buoy Equipment)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by whom the line-throwing breeches buoy equipment withdrawn from Her Majesty's coastguard on 31 March 1988 has been purchased; if he will give details of the number of sets of this equipment sold and the moneys received in payment; and how the funds realised from the sale of this equipment will be invested.

Mr. Portillo: All line-throwing rockets and launching devices, which formed an integral part of breeches buoy equipment, were over age or obsolete and destroyed. Some ancillary equipment plus a variety of miscellaneous items, were purchased by the Department of Marine of the Republic of Ireland at a total cost of £6,940. The remainder will be disposed of as Government surplus. All receipts count towards departmental appropriations-in-aid, and are not available for direct use by Her Majesty's coastguard.

Sub-Post Offices (Vehicle Excise Duty)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to add to the network of sub-post offices which issue vehicle excise licences.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sub-post offices provide an efficient and convenient vehicle excise relicensing service, particularly in rural areas. There are currently 3,550 offices providing this service. Some 2,000 are sub post offices. Following negotiations with Post Office Counters Ltd. we are pleased to be able to announce that a further 60 sub-post offices will be added to the relicensing network over the next few months. The choice of offices will be made by the Post Office, but I shall be writing to right hon. and hon. Members in whose constituencies individual offices are situated.

Fishing Vessels and Submarines (Incidents)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on incidents which took place on 27 February and 3 March, involving fishing vessels and submarines; what investigations he is undertaking into the incidents; and what action he is proposing to take to avoid similar incidents recurring.

Mr. Portillo: On 27 February 1989 a near miss incident was reported involving three fishing vessels and a submarine near Little Cumbrae Island, Firth of Clyde. On 3 March 1989 the fishing vessel Seagull reported a near miss involving an unidentified unlit vessel near the Cock of Arran. The Department's marine surveyors are investigating both incidents. When their inquiries are completed appropriate action will be considered.

Vale of Rheidol Narrow Gauge Railway

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the purchaser of the Vale of Rheidol narrow gauge railway; when he expects the sale to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is proposing to sell this railway to the Brecon mountain railway company, subject to my right hon. Friend's consent. We are considering the evidence on the case and we shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Road Noise

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding provision of double glazing, secondary glazing and other measures in connection with noise from road traffic;

(2) what steps he takes to monitor noise levels on urban and suburban roads;

(3) if he will introduce a minimum noise level which would automatically attract grant assistance for noise insulation.

Mr. Bottomley: Government policy is to seek to reduce the effect upon residential properties of noise from new roads by careful design, including where appropriate the use of earth bunds and noise barriers. Under part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973, owner-occupiers can claim compensation from the Government in respect of depreciation in the value of their property arising from the use of a new road. Claims may be made as from 12 months after the road comes into use.

In addition, under the Insulation Regulations (1975 to 1988) the Government offer secondary glazing for eligible rooms of dwellings where it is estimated that maximum noise levels, during the 15 years after road opening, will be at least 68 dBA on the L10 18 hour scale, with a contribution of at least 1 dBA from traffic using the new road. Where insulation has been offered or installed, its benefit is taken into account when setting the level of part I compensation. These provisions apply to roads constructed on behalf of the Secretary of State. Local authorities follow similar procedures. The regulations also allow insulation to be provided on a discretionary basis in respect of noise insulation arising from road alterations.

For older, unaltered roads, there is no entitlement to compensation or noise insulation. In respect of trunk roads, the Department does occasionally exercise a discretion to provide noise barriers where the noise levels are high and where the benefits of barriers would be substantial.

We have no proposals to alter the qualifying noise levels under the noise insulation regulations or to seek to introduce qualifying noise levels for houses beside older roads. There is no general monitoring by the Department of noise levels on urban or suburban roads.

HM Coastguard

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of the amount of overtime being undertaken by Her Majesty's coastguard and the hours worked, for safety in handling emergency rescues.

Mr. Portillo: Overtime working by individuals is voluntary but is strictly controlled to ensure that performance is not impaired. The average among watchkeepers is 4·7 hours/week and among sector officers is 1·4 hours/week. There is no indication that hours worked have had any adverse effect on the safe handling of emergency rescues.

A36 (West Wellow)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the contract for the study of the A36 through West Wellow was put out to competitive tender.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A study was commissioned in September 1986 without competition. The appointment of consultants for design announced on 14 March 1989 followed competitive tender.

Dr. Tony Ridley

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he can now announce the terms on which Dr. Tony Ridley resigned from London Regional Transport.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport will pay to Dr. Ridley a sum equivalent to six months' pay in lieu of the notice provided for under the terms of his appointment, that is £30,000. LRT will pay sums to make up the difference between the immediate reduced pension which Dr. Ridley had already earned on 10 November 1988, and the actuarially reduced pension which would have been payable to him on retirement at the end of his appointment on 31 August 1991.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Irish Teachers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether Irish teachers who qualified in the Republic of Ireland will become licensed teachers from September when employed by British local education authorities;

(2) whether Irish teachers who qualified in the Republic of Ireland will, from September, be fully and automatically recognised by his Department on application by the employing local education authority; and whether applications for recognition will be processed within a two-week period;

(3) whether route 2(b) application procedure for his Department's recognition by Irish teachers seeking qualified teachers' status will still be available from September as the self-advocacy route to his Department's recognition;

(4) whether route 2(e) application procedure for his Department's recognition by Irish teachers seeking qualified teachers' status will be abolished in September.

Mrs. Rumbold: We propose, subject to further consultation, to lay regulations before the House introducing the licensed teacher route to qualified teacher status from September 1989. This will replace all existing routes to qualified teacher status other than the successful completion of a course of initial teacher training in England or Wales. Local education authorities will then be free to employ teachers trained in Ireland as licensed teachers who will progress to qualified teacher status after up to 2 years' satisfactory performance as licensees.

Teachers (Shortages)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy towards providing financial support for teacher recruitment and retraining initiatives by local education authorities in relation to the problems of teacher shortages identified by his Department;

(2) what information is available to his Department on any teacher recruitment and retraining initiatives being undertaken by local education authorities in relation to the problems of teacher shortages identified by his Department; what steps are being taken by his Department to promote good practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The recruitment, employment and deployment of teachers is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools. It is for them to determine the level of recruitment and retraining necessary in the light of their own needs. The costs of retraining are eligible for support through the LEA training grants scheme. The Department is aware of good practice and special measures in a number of local authorities. The teaching as a career unit whose remit has just been extended for three years, promotes good practice in recruitment on the basis of guidelines agreed by my Department.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards future numbers of re-entrant qualified teachers, with appropriate retraining, in relation to the problems of teacher shortages identified by his Department; what actions he has taken in pursuit of this policy in recent years, and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend recognises the great importance of encouraging former teachers to re-enter the profession. My Department's memorandum to the Education Science and Arts Committee—a copy of which is in the library—indicates the importance of re-entrants as a source of supply and highlights good recruitment practice to attract returners. In recent years the proportion of teaching posts filled by former serving teachers has risen steadily to about 50 per cent. This proportion has been achieved without the widespread use of special measures by local authorities who, as employers, have responsibility for the employment and re-training of re-entrants. With proper publicity for employment opportunities, good employment practices and support and training measures the proportion of posts filled by re-entrants can remain substantial. The costs of re-training are eligible for support through the LEA training grants scheme.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there is any religious group from which he would automatically reject a proposal to sponsor a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: All proposals put to us for the establishment of city technology colleges are considered strictly on their merits. My right hon. Friend would not, however, find any proposal acceptable which sought to provide exclusively for applicants from particular religious groups.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the criteria to be used in evaluating a proposal from a sponsor to support a city technology college based on the principles of any religion.

Mr. Butcher: In considering any proposal from prospective sponsors my right hon. Friend will first look at whether it meets the objectives and requirements of the CTC programme. A number of such sponsors have indicated that they would wish to place an emphasis on Christian values in their CTCs. This is entirely complementary to the fundamental CTC objective of preparing young people more effectively for their adult responsibilities and opportunities. But no CTC will admit pupils on the basis of their religious beliefs; and we shall ensure that all CTCs are fully representative in all respects of the communities they serve.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any proposals or representations from companies or trusts to establish city technology colleges based upon religious principles other than Christianity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No such proposals or representations have been received.

Universities (Public Funding)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the administrative forms which universities have to fill in to comply with procedures for the control of public money they receive.

Mr. Jackson: The control of public money is not meaningfully separable from the range of dealings between the University Grants Committee and individual institutions. However, the committee's main source of information on financial matters is the annual return form 3 (finance).

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is, for each year, since 1974 the amount of public funds given to universities in (a) Austria, (b) Denmark, (c) France, (d) Germany, (e) Holland, (f) Italy, (g) Spain, (h) Sweden, (i) Canada, (j) the United States of America and (h) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: The readily available information covering higher education is shown in the table and is on a per capita population basis to enable comparisons to be made.

Public recurrent expenditure[1] on higher education in 1983 and 1984 (calendar years)

	Current expenditure per capita (£)

"School Governors: A New Role"

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many copies of the booklet "School Governors: A New Role", have been supplied to the Conservative party; and what payment was made for them.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sample copies of "School Governors: A New Role" were distributed to a wide range of organisations, including representatives of political parties. Further copies are supplied free of charge to any individual or organisation asking for them. So far over 750,000 copies have been distributed: the Department does not keep a record of the number supplied in response to each individual request.

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will give an indication as to the projected time scales for reaching a decision on proposals to establish voluntary-aided schools.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend's objective is to reach a decision within five months of the publication of such proposals.

Teachers (Salaries)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that funding by local education authorities for schools through the local management scheme takes into account the actual salaries paid to teachers, rather than the average level of salary within that local authority area.

Mrs. Rumbold: The central determinant of schools' funding under schemes of local management should be the numbers and ages of pupils. Pupils of the same age should therefore attract the same resources, including the same element for teaching costs, irrespective of which school they attend within the local authority area. It will be for governing bodies to manage their costs, including salaries, from within their budgets as derived on this basis. In practice, variations from average salary costs will be limited. My right hon. Friend has made clear that schools with fewer than 10 teachers, excluding the head teacher and deputy, may receive enhanced funding where they have above average salary costs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide in the Library an updated report stating the extent to which Her Majesty's Government have implemented the recommendations relating to mentally disturbed inmates in the third report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1985-86 into the prison medical service and the Government's response thereto, Cm. 115; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am arranging for this to be done.

Mentally Disturbed Prisoners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the number of psychiatric reports prepared outside prison department establishments on persons remanded to all prisons and cells in England and Wales for each year from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent and current studies he has commissioned into mentally abnormal and disordered offenders in prisons; whether they include those held on remand; whether any recommendations have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Two studies are under way and the Department expects to decide on a third shortly.

In October 1987 a contract was entered into with the institute of psychiatry, university of London, to produce over a three-year period a definitive statement of the dimensions of the problem of sentenced mentally disordered offenders in the prison system. This will provide a basis for the consideration of the development of policy in the medium and long term. In November 1988 the institute of criminology, university of Cambridge, was contracted to research into sentencing by the courts in relation to the use of sections 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in making hospital and restriction orders. The intention is to obtain reliable information on whether, and if so to what extent, the courts are unable to make hospital and restriction orders in all cases that they wish, and to examine the factors affecting their decisions.

The third study is currently under consideration. This would also be carried out by the Institute of Psychiatry. It would focus on the working of the procedures for courts to remand defendants to obtain medical reports.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many secure units are available to his Department for accommodating mentally disturbed offenders (a) specifically for such offenders and (b) along with convicted prisoners not so categorised; and where they are situated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prisoners who meet the criteria under the Mental Health Act 1983 may be transferred to special hospitals or regional secure units. Within the prison service there is a variety of provision for mentally disturbed prisoners. This includes the CRC special unit at Parkhurst C wing, which is intended exclusively for convicted prisoners with a history of psychiatric illness and who also pose persistent control problems.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when was the last full-scale review in his Department of out-of-prison alternatives for mentally disturbed prisoners who are (a) sectioned and (b) in other categories; and what plans he has for the provision of such alternatives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An interdepartmental working group of Home Office and DHSS officials on mentally disturbed offenders in the prison system in England and Wales which reported in May 1987 carried out a review of all alternatives to imprisonment for mentally disturbed prisoners. The provision of facilities for the treatment of the mentally disordered outside prison is a matter for the Department of Health. The consultation paper issued last month by the Home Office on bail accommodation and secure bail hostels included discussion of the use of bail hostel accommodation for mentally disturbed defendants.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he categorises (a) prisoners requiring psychiatric attention and (b) mentally disturbed offenders; how many are in each category; and what is the proportion of the prison population as a whole for each category and in total.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prison medical officers, in examining inmates on reception, identify as a priority those who by reason of their mental state may require particular attention whether of a medical or general management nature. In such cases referral to a psychiatrist would be an early course of further action. Where an inmate is considered to be suffering from mental disorder of a nature or degree which would satisfy the criteria of the Mental Health Act 1983 for detention in hospital for medical treatment, the prison medical officer would use the procedures of that Act to seek the inmates removal to an appropriate hospital. Two hundred and ninety inmates of prison service establishments in England and Wales were on 30 September 1988, the latest date for which figures were available, considered by prison medical officers to meet those criteria. That figure represents 0·58 per cent. of the prison population of 49,922 on that date.

Information as to the total number of inmates in the much wider range of those considered to be mentally disturbed but not such as to satisfy the criteria of the Mental Health Act 1983 is not held centrally. Two censuses were undertaken by prison medical officers of inmates serving sentences of six months and more considered to require specialised therapeutic facilities by reason of mental disorder or abnormality. The censuses showed that on 4 December 1985 1,583 inmates and on 1 October 1986 1,340 inmates were in that category. Those figures represent respectively 3·38 per cent. of the prison population of 46,752 on 6 December 1985 and 2·85 per cent. of the prison population of 46,912 on October 1986.

The study being undertaken by the Institute of Psychiatry, referred to in the answer to another question by the hon. Member, is designed to produce a comprehensive psychiatric profile of the sentenced prison population.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the prison population the number of inmates referred to National Health Service consultant psychiatrists and other National Health Service psychiatrists represented in the last year for which figures are available, and to what extent inmates may be referred to more than one psychiatrist.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988 12,285 inmates were referred by prison medical officers to NHS psychiatrists appointed to visit establishments on a sessional basis or to NHS consultants for domiciliary consultations. In addition, psychiatric consultations were arranged for 4,151 inmates at the instigation of inmates' legal advisers.

On the imformation available it is not possible to calculate that the sum of those numbers represents a given proportion of the prison population since that population is not static. While the average prison population in 1987-88 was 49,300 (including an average of 750 prisoners in police cells) the number of first receptions to prison service establishments in the course of that year was in the order of 136,000.

Prison medical officers have unfettered clinical discretion to call other medical practitioners into consultation and are not restricted as to the number consulted in any individual case.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the current extent, and regularity, of police training including that involving professional psychiatric expertise, in dealing with mentally disturbed individuals who create a disturbance; whether there are any plans to improve this training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Training for all ranks in the police service aims to develop oficers' interpersonal skills, knowledge and attitudes to enable them to deal effectively with all sections of the community, and to foster an understanding of the social context of policing and the role of other agencies. As part of this integrated approach, officers will study such areas as responding to illness—including mental disturbance—in the street, dealing with distressed persons and the social causes of crime.

Chief officers and commandants may invite members of the psychiatric profession to contribute to training in forces and at district training centres. The police staff college involves members of the psychiatric profession in a number of its courses. Police training is kept under regular review by the police training council, which seeks to ensure that all training meets the needs of the police service and the community at large.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether disturbances at Bedford prison during 1988 involved mentally disturbed prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No prisoners diagnosed as mentally ill (who would be held in the prison hospital) were involved in any incident of violent concerted indiscipline at Bedford during 1988.

Body Belts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate each prison establishment in which body belts were used during 1987, the number of inmates upon whom they were used for each establishment, the number of inmates fitted with body belts twice or more, and the extent of injuries or deaths arising as a result.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following information for 1987 relates to prison establishments in England and Wales. It is additional to the particular case of which the hon. Member has knowledge and which involved the use of a body belt in transit between establishments. The table shows, by establishment, the number of occasions on which a violent or refractory inmate was kept in an establishment under restraint by means of the application of a body belt, and the number of inmates:

Prisons and remand centres
Albany	1	1

[1] Includes one prisoner to whom a body belt was applied twice.

I am not aware of any case in which a causal connection between death and the application of a body belt has been proven. Such information as is available centrally about injuries to inmates does not enable injuries sustained in circumstances where a body belt was in use to be separately identified.

Michael Bettaney

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long Michael Bettaney has spent in solitary confinement; and what are the reasons for it.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Bettaney is not held in solitary confinement.

Street Lighting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 588, what early action Her Majesty's Government propose to take substantially to improve lighting in public areas and streets to combat crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I announced today that the Home Office has undertaken to fund a major research study at Southampton university. The research will assess the impact of street lighting on crime and the fear of crime, and the study will be carried out in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Children's Television Programmes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his proposals for children's programmes.

Mr. Renton: Our broadcasting White Paper envisaged that the BBC would continue to be expected to provide high quality programming across the full range of public tastes and interests, and that Channel 4 would be required to cater for any interests under-represented by other parts of the independent television sector. It also envisaged a broadcasting environment in which there would be more outlets and opportunities for many different types of programming such as children's programming. We are now carefully considering the comments we have received on the White Paper.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of whether the level of policing on motorways is adequate to ensure compliance by heavy goods vehicles with road traffic regulations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is a matter for individual chief officers of police to determine how to deploy their resources. I have no reason to believe that the level of policing on motorways is unsatisfactory.

Correspondence

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the hon. Member for Easington's letter dated 6 February concerning prisoner Ian Armstrong.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I replied to the hon. Member on 14 March.

Mr. Hafiz Ali Akbar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to take a decision in the case of Mr. Hafiz Ali Akbar who has applied to enter the United Kingdom; when Mr. Akbar's case was referred to him by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; when Mr. Akbar, ref. A380937/2 and GV 100/2878, applied to enter the United Kingdom and when he last was interviewed in Pakistan; what inquiries he has made in the United Kingdom; and when Mr. Akbar can expect to be told whether his application has been granted.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 March 1989]: Mr. Akbar applied for entry clearance on 6 July 1987 and was interviewed in Islamabad on 5 October 1987. His application was referred to the immigration department on 6 March 1988. Further information and supporting evidence was sought from the secretary of the Burnett place mosque on 15 March 1989. I much regret the long delay in dealing with this case. Once our inquiries are complete the application will be determined as quickly as possible and Mr. Akbar will be notified of the decision by the entry clearance office. I shall write to the hon. Member in due course to let him know the outcome of the case.

Miss Michelle Renshaw (Imprisonment)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the facilities provided during the imprisonment of Michelle Renshaw for contempt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I am satisfied that the normal facilities were afforded to Miss Renshaw during her imprisonment.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a recommendation on the application of Mr. Zulfiqar Khan ref. GV 100/5117, to enter the United Kingdom; and when Mr. Khan's application was referred to him.

Mr. Renton: Mr. Khan's application was referred to my Department on 6 April 1988 for an interview of the sponsor, Mrs. Yasmeen Akhtar. The immigration service at Hull interviewed Mrs. Akhtar on 19 February 1989 and its report dated 9 March was sent to Islamabad on 13 March. A decision on Mr. Khan's application will be made by the entry clearance officer in Islamabad.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when papers concerning the application to enter the United Kingdom by Mrs. Musarat Bibi, ref. GV100/5248, were passed to the Immigration Office at Leeds/Bradford airport; and when any report is to be sent to the European Community officer at the British embassy in Pakistan.

Mr. Renton: The papers were passed to the immigration office at Hull on 19 January 1988 so that the sponsor could be interviewed. Further investigations proved necessary and these were carried out first at Hull and then at Leeds/Bradford airport. A full report was sent to the immigration department on 22 February 1989.

The entry clearance officer in Islamabad was authorised on 16 March to issue entry clearance to Musarat Bibi.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why, in the light of letters to him dated 7 December and 16 February from the hon. Member for Bradford, West, concerning an application for British citizenship by Mrs. Sarwar Begum, ref. IMP R 161633/3(S), the hon. Member was not informed until 13 March that a certificate of registration had been sent to Mrs. Sarwar Begum via the British embassy in Islamabad on 16 January.

Mr. Renton: The letter of 7 December was not referred to the nationality division for advice until the hon. Member responded on 16 February to my Private Office's request for additional details to identify the case. I then replied to the hon. Member as soon as possible. These events did not however delay the nationality division's action on the application, which was granted in January.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make inquiries into the position of Mr. Govinden Vythelinghad who submitted a nationality application to Lunar House (ref: V6/80/43) in October 1987; and when Mr. Vythelinghad can expect a decision.

Mr. Renton: I am writing to my hon. Friend.

Prisoners (Escape Attempts)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners attempted to escape from prisons in England and Wales in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Details of offences punished of attempting to escape or abscond are given in chapter 9 of the published prison statistics, of which copies are available in the Library.

Magistrates' Courts

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute a review of procedure in magistrates' courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: It has been apparent for some time that some aspects of criminal and domestic procedure in magistrates' courts are unwieldy or outmoded. I have, therefore, decided to initiate a thorough review. This will be carried out by a working party of officials and experienced practitioners under Home Office chairmanship. Its terms of reference will be:

"to review the criminal and domestic procedure of magistrates' courts; to consider what changes could be expected to make that procedure more effective, efficient and economical, consistently with satisfactory provision for due process; and to make recommendations".

EMPLOYMENT

Chlorofluorocarbons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will assess the employment creation potential of chlorofluorocarbons-free refrigerator production.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to assess the employment creation potential of producing refrigerators free of chlorofluorocarbons. However, the eventual production in the United Kingdom of CFC-free refrigerators should benefit both our manufacturing industry and the world environment.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in order of size, showing in each case the extent to which they are above or below the electoral quota.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is contained in "Electoral Statistics 1988" (HMSO) a copy of which is in the Library.

Statistics relating to the 1989 electoral registers are still being assembled centrally. They will be published in "Electoral Statistics 1989" (Series EL No. 16) at the end of May, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

ENERGY

Offshore Safety

30. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he proposes to take to improve safety in the offshore oil and gas industry.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to the reply, 27 February 1989, c. 81]: A consultative document containing our proposals for a set of regulations for pipeline safety valves on offshore installations has been issued today. Copies of this document are available in the Library of the House.

As a consequence of the technical investigation carried out by my Department into the Piper Alpha accident last July, my director of safety contacted all pipeline operators on 24 August 1988 to reassess the location and operation of their pipeline isolation systems.

Following a review by my Department of the operators' responses I have decided that it is necessary to introduce regulations requiring emergency shut-down valves on pipeline risers serving offshore installations together with the periodic inspection and testing of these valves and their control systems. In addition, it is proposed that an Order in Council will be made whereby these valves will become part of the certification process of the installation.

These proposed regulations represent an important further step in securing improvements in the safety of offshore pipeline systems. I shall in due course be laying further regulations to deal with subsea isolation systems, however these present very difficult technical problems which require further study before I can make firm proposals.

Employment Training

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a breakdown of the target figures for employment training for (a) September 1988, (b) December 1988 and (c) March 1989 on (i) a national and (ii) an area office basis.

Mr. Nicholls: Targets both nationally and for Training Agency area offices for the number of filled employment training places are for internal management purposes only.

Wages

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much the average weekly wage in the north-west of England has increased since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees in the north-west of England increased by 138 per cent. between April 1979 and April 1988.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to which month the published results of the labour force survey apply in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: Published estimates from labour force surveys are based on interviews conducted in the spring of each labour force survey year. In 1979, 1981 and 1983, the interviews took place between April and June. From 1984 onwards the labour force survey has been carried out annually and the interview period has been between March and May.

Time Off

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to issue any guidance on the interpretation of reasonable amounts of time off for (a) trade union representatives and (b) safety representatives representing the same number of members.

Mr. Nicholls: In relation to (a), guidance is already provided by ACAS in accordance with section 27(2) of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978; in relation to (b), no.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the projected number of (a) factory and (b) agricultural inspectors that will be employed by the Health and Safety Executive on 31 March.

Mr. Nicholls: At 1 March 1989, 608·5 factory and 165 agricultural inspectors were in post. The Health and Safety Executive's objective is to increase the numbers employed to 638 and 175 respectively as soon as possible.

Following the latest in a series of recruitment competitions, 12 successful candidates have been offered employment, (nine to the factory and three to the agricultural inspectorate). Offers are expected to be made shortly to some 20 further candidates subject to completion of medical and other checks.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men were in employment in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom in June 1979 and September 1988; and how many of these were self-employed.

Mr. Lee: The available information is as follows:

Figures for Her Majesty's forces are not available below national level. Comparisons of data for June 1979 and September 1988 are affected by seasonal variations. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Child Care Facilities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will ensure that the local education authorities' development programmes for further education provision outlined in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", provide child care facilities which allow (a) parents, and (b) mothers, to attend colleges, further education institutes, polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Cope: The content of local education authorities' development programmes for further education provision is for authorities themselves to determine. The Training Agency encourages the further education service to provide easy access to vocational education throughout working life for all members of the work force, including those needing child care facilities.

Quality of Life

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the relationship between the quality of life in the north-west of England, Greater London and the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee: Any assessment of the quality of life is inevitably subjective and depends on the importance placed by individuals on a large range of factors such as income, local amenities and nearness to the countryside. I do not have the information required to make a comparison of the overall quality of life in different regions. However the Central Statistical Office annual publication "Regional Trends" has statistics on matters that might be thought to contribute towards the quality of life.

As far as the information available to me is concerned, I can report that all regions are benefiting from the success of the Government's economic policy; over the year to September 1988, the civilian work force in employment is estimated to have grown by 38,000 in the north-west, 61,000 in London and 736,000 across Great Britain as a whole. Furthermore, unemployment rates have decreased sharply, with falls over the past year of 2 per cent. in the north-west, 1·8 per cent. in London and 1·9 per cent. in Great Britain.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her discussions with the Federal German Chancellor in Frankfurt in February, she discussed the planned modernisation of the short-range nuclear forces in the context of articles I and VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with Chancellor Kohl in Frankfurt, she discussed issues to be discussed at the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to be held in 1990.

The Prime Minister: No.

Commercial Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government have set an ultimate target for the area covered by commercial forestry in the United Kingdom, over and above the annual targets currently set for commercial forestry and the farm woodland scheme.

The Prime Minister: No. The amount of land that is devoted to forestry will depend on a number of factors, including the amount of land that comes out of agricultural use.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will report to the House on the circumstances in which senior Government officials and others gave private briefings to journalists in which they stated that they knew both the identity and the whereabouts of those responsible for planting a bomb on Pan Am Flight 103 which exploded over Lockerbie.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate issued a statement to the press on Friday about progress in the investigation. He said:

"The type of item of baggage in which the tape recorder was contained is now known and that will allow the police to take a further step forward in the enquiries they are making, both on a national and international basis.

I can confirm that it appears that all the explosives were packed in the tape recorder and were not located elsewhere in the item of baggage.

If we can move forward from knowing not just the type of the item of baggage, as I have to put it, but to an identification of the owner of that bag, clearly, I think it can be appreciated that we would then have taken a further significant step forward.

Although the progress of the enquiry has been remarkable, the evidence which has been secured so far has not yet led to the identification of the person or persons responsible for placing the bomb in baggage on Pan Am Flight 103. Enquiries are continuing with that end in view.

Of course there are suspicions and of course a number of lines of enquiry are being pursued, but what I would not like people to believe at the moment is that I am holding something back, or that the British Authorities are holding something back, for some obscure or ulterior purpose.

My primary concern, because I am responsible not only for the investigation but also for the prosecution, is to ensure that there is no prejudice either to that investigation or ultimately to a prosecution. I appreciate that the public both nationally and internationally are very anxious to know what is going on but I think they should also appreciate, indeed I hope they do, that the ultimate success that we wish to achieve in this is the bringing to justice of those people who were responsible for this mass murder.

In association with the FBI, the West German BKA and the Metropolitan Police investigators are continuing to pursue and investigate all matters which have a possible bearing on this case. These include the finding of a bomb and a radio cassette player in Frankfurt in October 1988. As I indicated in my answer in the House of Lords yesterday the possible connection between that bomb and the Lockerbie disaster is being scrutinised with the greatest care. I should emphasise that the two persons held in custody in Germany have not been arrested in connection with Lockerbie.

I have to say, as I have said several times before, that the success of these enquiries is not likely to be assisted by the kind of wild, irresponsible speculation in some newspaper reports this morning. Although some of those reports purport to be based on 'Whitehall sources' they are not accurate. The only authoritative information about the progress of this investigation is that issued by me, or on my authority, by the senior investigating officer in charge of the enquiries.

I will authorise disclosure of relevant information about the progress of the investigation wherever possible and as soon as possible, as we all recognise the general interest of the public and the particular interest of the relatives of the victims to be informed about the matter".

That remains the position.

Special Advisers

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister if she will show in the Official Report the previous employment of the special advisers listed in her answer to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), 29 July 1988, Official Report, column 628.

The Prime Minister: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The previous employment of serving special advisers is as follows:

Previous employment	Number employed

This list covers special advisers who are on secondment from or are still employed, full or part-time, by other employers.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister if she will state the total cost to public funds of (a) the special advisers on secondment and (b) the most senior special advisers not paid on the common pay spine.

The Prime Minister: The total annual reimbursement cost to public funds of special advisers on secondment is currently £147,333. The current annual cost to public funds of salary and employer's national insurance contributions for the most senior special advisers is £133,500.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister what restrictions there are on the activities of ministerial political and special advisers in relation to their giving directions to career civil servants.

The Prime Minister: Apart from secretarial assistance, permanent civil servants do not work directly for special advisers except with my express permission.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister what restrictions on political activities apply to Ministerial political advisers previously employed as career civil servants.

The Prime Minister: There are two areas of political activity where special advisers may be allowed more freedom than other civil servants. With the approval of the Minister they may attend party functions and maintain contact with party members; and they may take part in policy reviews organised by the party.

In addition, and subject to the approval of the Minister, special advisers are permitted to undertake all forms of local political activity provided they observe the rule of discretion applicable to civil servants. This does not include local activities in support of national politics.

There are no additional restrictions on special advisers who may previously have been career civil servants.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will establish an inquiry into co-ordination on immigration matters between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Home Office, in the light of a letter from the hon. Member for Bradford, West, dated 1 March from the Secretary of State for the Home Department that the application by Mr. Bahad Singh for entry clearance to the United Kingdom, ref. S656383/4, was being considered after being passed to him by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and a letter to the hon. Member for Bradford, West from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, dated 17 February, ref. GV100/5098, saying that the British deputy high commissioner in Bombay was unable to trace any such applications and if she will indicate when she expects that a decision will be reached on Mr. Singh's application.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Singh lodged his application with the British High Commission in New Delhi, not Bombay as the hon. Member believes. It was this initial error which contributed to the seemingly contradictory letters received from the two Departments. The letter sent to the hon. Member on 1 March, from the Home Office should have clarified the position and the Home Office will review its procedures, in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, with a view to preventing such misunderstandings in the future.

Mr. Singh's application was refused in July 1988. He has appealed against the decision and his case will be heard by the appellate authorities in due course. The relevant Minister at the Home Office will shortly be writing to the hon. Member about this case.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disability

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement about the surveys on disability being carried out by his Department; what detailed arrangements are being made to make use of experience gained in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey in Great Britain; and what consultations have taken place with organisations concerned with disability in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The study of disability, which the Government announced on 15 December 1988 would be carried out in Northern Ireland, will cover all types of disabilities, mental as well as physical, all age groups and include people living in various forms of communal establishments as well as in private households. The research in Northern Ireland will replicate and develop work conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in Great Britain and will be conducted by the policy planning and research unit of the Department of Finance and Personnel on behalf of a number of Northern Ireland Departments. Regular contact has been maintained with OPCS during the planning stages and continued use is being made of their experience. An initial meeting has been held with the director of the Northern Ireland Council on Disability to inform him of the study and further consultations will take place with various organisations concerned with disability in Northern Ireland.

Public Expenditure Commentary

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the Northern Ireland public expenditure commentary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Northern Ireland commentary on public expenditure plans 1989-90 to 1991-92 was published today and copies are available in the Vote Office. This is the second Northern Ireland commentary and it aims to improve the information available to Parliament and the public by amplifying the material in the Northern Ireland chapter of the 1989 Public Expenditure White Paper.

Students

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the nature of the consultations which the Department of Education, Northern Ireland, will have regarding the White Paper "Top-Up Loans for Students" and listing the organisations from which the Department are seeking views.

Dr. Mawhinney: The White Paper made provision for all comments to be submitted to the Department of Education and Science to arrive by 1 February 1989.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the numbers of disabled students by sex in Northern Ireland in further education and in higher education.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information in the form requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate how many students in Northern Ireland are studying four-year degree courses and three-year degree courses, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisional information for the 1988-89 academic year is as follows:

Full-time undergraduate students

	Number
Enrolled on:
Three-year Degree Courses	7,948
Four-year Degree Courses	5,220
Degree Courses longer than 4 years	994

ENVIRONMENT

Globe Theatre Site

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of the discovery of the site of the Rose theatre in Southwark, he will ask English Heritage to reconsider its decision not to recommend the Globe theatre site for scheduling.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The importance of the Globe theatre site is unquestioned. It has not been scheduled so far because there is no evidence to show exactly where the theatre stood. This means that an unjustifiably large area would have to be scheduled.

English Heritage has, however, written to the London borough of Southwark suggesting that, before any application for the site's redevelopment is determined, an archaeological evaluation should be undertaken to determine the exact location of any remains. In the light of the results of such an evaluation English Heritage will reconsider where there is a case for scheduling the Globe theatre site. We shall, of course, consider any such recommendation very carefully.

Sea Pollution

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by water authority area the number of sewage outfalls to the sea; and, of those, how many include primary treatment works.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 14 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally.

Applications for new or varied consent conditions for all sewage outfalls to sea are considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Quantitative conditions are set in all cases and these have regard to the impact of the discharge in the receiving waters. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution also requires all new outfalls to include provision for the removal and disposal of screenings and non-biodegradable materials such as plastics. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning has placed copies of the inspectorate's guidelines for the construction of new sea outfalls in the Library.

We do not set specific treatment standards for discharges to the sea; but authorities, in preparing proposals to improve sewage disposal arrangements in coastal areas will want to consider alternative options including inland treatment and sometimes disinfection. However, as the Royal Commission on environmental pollution made clear in its 10th report, the use of long sea outfalls, which rely upon the action of sea and sunlight to break down bacteria, is often the most environmentally satisfactory system of disposal.

Beaches

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the cost of bringing beaches in north-west England up to EEC standards; and from what date he expects the standards to be met.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has asked the North West water authority to draw up a capital expenditure programme with the aim of bringing those bathing waters identified under the EEC bathing water directive up to the directive's standards by 1995.

Yorkshire (Water Reserves)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the present levels of water reserves in the Yorkshire water authority area; if the authority has applied for any drought orders; what risks there are of drought conditions arising during the coming months of the current year; if he will list by location the areas within the Yorkshire water authority area that are most susceptible to suffering from drought conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Storage reservoirs in the Yorkshire water authority area are almost full and, although groundwater levels in the aquifer serving North Humberside are low, adequate supplies are being transferred from elsewhere. The authority has not applied for any drought orders and foresees no difficulty in meeting demand this year unless an exceptionally dry summer occurs.

Vehicle Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact on the environment of those vehicle exhaust emissions which are capable of being reduced or eliminated by catalytic converters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Assessing the contribution made by petrol driven vehicles to national levels of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, ozone and nitrogen oxides and their consequent environmental impact has been and continues to be a major part of the Department's air quality research programme.

Water Pollution

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide and mandatory levels for (a) faecal coliforms, (b) total coliforms, (c) cadmium, (d) arsenic, (e) pesticides, (f) nitrogen and (g) ammonia in bathing waters which were the responsibility of the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning announced on 21 February at column 572, the results of the 1988 survey of bathing waters for England, Northern Ireland and Wales. A summary of the results has already been placed in the Library. The report contains detailed results for individual waters in each water authority area, including numbers of samples taken for particular parameters and the number of these which failed to meet the directive's mandatory standards.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) chlorides, (b) sulphates, (c) magnesium, (d) sodium, (e) potassium, (f) nitrates, (g) aluminium, (h) nitrates and (i) phenols in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Anglian water authority;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) iron, (b) manganese, (c) copper, (d) zinc, (e) phosphorus, (f) barium, (g) cadmium, (h) chromium, (i) mercury, (j) nickel and (k) lead in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Anglian water authority;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) herbicides, (b) fungicides, (c) PCBs, (d) insecticides, (e) total bacteria counts, (f) faecal coliforms and (g) faecal streptococci in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: In view of the current widespread interest in drinking water quality, Anglian water authority will be publishing a report on the subject setting out the extent of compliance in 1988 with all the standards set in the EC drinking water directive. Work is in hand to prepare this report and I am asking the authority to send the hon. Member a copy when it is published.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals exist to further relax effluent limits on the amount and type of effluent discharged by the plants of the North West water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: My hon. and learned Friend, the Minister for Water and Planning announced on 7 December 1988 at column 199, that applications for temporary variations in discharge consent conditions will be considered for those sewage works where capital improvements are programmed to be completed by March 1992.

Applications made by the North West water authority under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, including those for time-limited variations, will be considered on an individual basis by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Details of all applications made are held on the register maintained by the water authority which may be inspected, free of charge, by anyone at all reasonable hours.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many beaches have now reached the higher EEC standards.

Mr. Moynihan: My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning announced on 21 February at column 572, the results of the 1988 survey of bathing water quality. These showed that 254 out of the 380 bathing waters in England, Northern Ireland and Wales (67 per cent.) met the mandatory coliform standards in the 1988 bathing season, compared with only 51 per cent., measured on a comparable basis, in 1986.

Although since 1987 we have tightened the way we monitor and assess compliance with the directive, the EEC standards themselves remain unchanged.

Water Authority Chairmen

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the chairmen of water authorities are currently paid.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 27 January 1989 at column 792-3.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the chairmen of water authorities will be paid once the industry is privatised.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Once the water authorities are in private ownership, the remuneration of chairmen will be a matter for the successor companies.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the limit on the number of shares a chairman of a privatised water company will be able to hold (a) in his own authority and (b) in other private water companies.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The same as for any other shareholders.

Football Membership Scheme

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for the workability of the Football Spectators Bill [Lords] of the extent to which the case for its provision has been made in the absence of separate figures for the number of arrests made inside football grounds.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Separate figures are not available distinguishing total arrests at football league matches in England and Wales made inside grounds and those directly connected with such matches made in the vicinity of and/en route to and from grounds. However, both are undoubtedly much reduced by the high level of police resources deployed at matches and by the strict segregation of supporters, the use of closed circuit television and video, and other measures. The Football Spectators Bill, in disqualifying trouble-makers from attending designated matches, will be effective in reducing misbehaviour inside grounds and, since those disqualified will be deterred from travelling to matches, outside and on journeys to and from matches as well.

Renovation Grants

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available figures comparable to those in respect of a married couple with two children contained in his Department's paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources", illustrating both the lower and upper thresholds for entitlement to grant towards eligible repairs in respect of (a) a single-parent family with one child under 11, (b) a single pensioner, (c) a pensioner couple, (d) a single person aged between 18 and 25 years, (e) a single person aged between 25 and 60 years and (f) a couple aged between 18 and 60 years on the assumption that all except the pensioner households are entitled to an earnings disregard.

Mr. Trippier: Comparative figures based on work costing £10,000 are :

	Lower Threshold £	Upper Threshold £
(a) Single parent family with one child under 11	4,883	13,918
(b) Single pensioner (under 80)	3,331	12,366
(c) Pensioner couple (under 80)	4,560	13,595
(d) Single person aged between 18 and 25 years	2,265	11,690
(e) Single person aged between 25 and 60	3,037	12,270
(f) Couple aged between 18 and 60 years	4,235	13,270

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households living as owner occupiers in dwellings eligible for renovation grants on grounds of their condition with incomes (a) below £20,000 a year, (b) below £15,000 a year, (c) below £12,000 a year and (d) below £9,000 a year will not qualify for any grant aid towards improvement and repair costs on the basis of the proposals embodied in part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Bill and amplified in his Department's paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources".

Mr. Trippier: On the basis of the assumptions contained in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources" the estimated numbers of those with net incomes below the levels specified who do not qualify for grant are:

(a) 1·9 million
(b) 1·7 million
(c) 1·2 million
(d) 0·4 million

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ban chlorofluorocarbons in all but medically essential aerosols.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Members of the British Aerosol Manufacturers Association have already agreed to end all non-essential use of chlorofluorocarbons in their products by the end of this year. They are well on course to achieve this.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to how many countries Britain exports chlorofluorocarbons which are not signatories to the Montreal protocol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Export data for past trade are not sufficiently detailed to provide this information. A recent revision of data headings means that such data should become available in due course for 1989 and subsequent years. The Montreal protocol does not prohibit the export of CFCs to countries outside the protocol as this might persuade them to start their own new production of CFCs. However, from 1 January 1993, any export of the controlled CFCs or halons to such countries must be compensated for by an equivalent additional reduction in domestic consumption.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects a ban on the use of chlorofluorocarbons in refrigeration units to be implemented.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is hoped that new ozone-benign refrigerants will be available early in the 1990s, although their introduction will be subject to the satisfactory conclusion of toxicological testing. At present, the voluntary approach to reductions in chlorofluorocarbon use is working well. Should new rules become necessary to require the use of the more beneficial refrigerants as they become commercially available, then we would introduce them.

Ozone Layer Conference

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the London saving the ozone layer conference.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The outcome of the highly successful saving the ozone layer London conference was summarised in the chairman's message prepared by my right hon. Friend. Copies of the message, together with a more detailed account by the conference rapporteur, have been placed in the Library.

Local Government (Access to Information) Act

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the provisions of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act to cover urban development corporations and new town corporations.

Mr. Trippier: This Act is currently under review but there are no plans to extend its provisions to urban development corporations or new town corporations.

River Quality

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which are the specific objective criteria used when assessing the quality of rivers as (i) good and (ii) fair.

Mr. Howard: The national freshwater quality classification scheme ranks water in four main categories, the highest two being good (class 1) and fair (class 2) quality.

The specific criteria used in determining river quality class in England and Wales are given in appendix 1 to the report of the 1985 river quality survey of England and Wales.

In Scotland, slightly different criteria are used. Details are given in appendix A to the report of the 1985 water quality survey of Scotland.

Copies of both reports are available in the Library of the House.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sewage treatment works in each English water authority which discharged effluent below the required standard during 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: Information for 1988 is not yet available but the indications are that water authority returns will show a further improvement in the number of sewage treatment works complying with discharge consents.

River Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of recorded incidents of river pollution, the number of related prosecutions and the number of convictions in England in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of reported water pollution incidents recorded by English water authorities in each year between 1980 and 1987, has been published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics (No. 11, 1988), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

The number of prosecutions brought by the English water authorities under section 31 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, are as follows:

Year	Total prosecutions
1980-81	91
1981-82	129
1982-83	124
1983-84	173
1984-85	206
1985-86	201
1986-87	254

Figures for years prior to 1980-81 are not held by the Department and figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Information about convictions following prosecutions is collected by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, but it is not in a directly comparable form. I understand, however, that on average, around 90 per cent. of these cases result in convictions.

Enterprise Centre (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has approved any grants or other financial assistance towards capital or revenue costs of the enterprise centre in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A grant of £96,267, towards the capital works needed for the refurbishment of Britannia house, in which the enterprise centre is housed, was given under the urban programme for 1988-89.

Voluntary Organisations (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the financial assistance he announced on 15 March enabling five voluntary organisations in Bradford threatened with closure to continue has come from within existing allocations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The resources, which will enable eight voluntary organisations to continue, will come out of the £4·5 million urban programme allocation for 1989-90, also announced on 15 March.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make further financial assistance available to enable the 21 voluntary organisations in Bradford, which are faced with closure or severe cuts in their funding, to receive funding, in line with inflation for 1989-90.

Mr.Trippier: No. The urban programme is intended to provide initial finance for a project, which if continued can then be financed longer term from other sources such as the council's main programme, or the private sector. Against this background it is for Bradford to decide which projects it wishes to put forward for funding through the urban programme. The Government have already agreed, as an exceptional measure, to the continued funding next financial year of eight projects that have time expired. This utilises in full the resources available next year within the urban programme allocation for Bradford.

Rating Reform

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a ward sister would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80-20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one bedroom flat in Paddington.

Mr. Gummer: A ward sister earning £15,000 living in a flat in Paddington worth £70,000 would pay a community charge of £373 (disregarding the transitional safety net) and £1,165 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

Set-aside Scheme

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to introduce top-up payments for farmers who have entered land into the set-aside scheme and undertaken to bring about environmental improvements on that land.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have been considering, with the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council, the possibility of making additional payments to farmers who undertake to manage their set-aside land in a way that produces specified benefits for the environment.

The set-aside scheme already carries with it conditions to ensure that fallow land is kept in good condition and that hedges are maintained. In addition, guidance has been issued suggesting to farmers how they can best manage fallow land in the interests of the landscape and wildlife. However, in order to assist farmers in cases where particular forms of management impose significant extra costs going beyond the basic conditions of the scheme, we have decided to introduce a system of additional incentives.

Under the scheme farmers will be invited to adopt one or more specified management practices which will, for example, increase the nature conservation or landscape value of the land or provide access or other recreational opportunities. Adoption of these practices will attract payment in addition to the rates offered under the set-aside scheme. The incentives will vary according to the nature of the management involved.

The top-up scheme will, at any rate initially, be targeted to certain parts of England where scope for environmental improvement seems greatest. It will be run by the Countryside Commission, with the assistance of the Nature Conservancy Council and in consultation with the Ministry of Agriculture. Payments will be made at the discretion of the commission.

Further details of the scheme, including its geographical coverage are now being worked out and will be announced in due course.

Eastbourne Waterworks Company

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement following his meeting with the chairman of the Eastbourne Waterworks company to discuss changes for the year ending 31 March 1990.

Mr. Howard: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Migratory Species

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is possible to keep, breed and sell any species listed in appendix 2 of the Berne convention on migratory species.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. I will write to the hon. Member with details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report, the total number of people in each of the three parliamentary constituencies in the Doncaster area listed on (a) the electoral registers for 1988-89, (b) the electoral registers for 1989-90 and (c) the electoral registers for five years and 10 years ago, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply. The information requested for 1983-84 and 1988-89 is as follows:

Notes:

The current reorganisation of parliamentary constituencies took place in 1983. Electorate statistics for 1983-84 have been reassembled on the basis of current constituency boundaries. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Numbers on the 1989-90 Register are still being assembled centrally. They will be published in Electoral Statistics 1989 (Series EL No. 16) at the end of May, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

(3) if he has any plans to review the legislation which defines the services provided by British Telecom governed by the RPI-X pricing formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters for the Director General of Telecommunications to consider in the light of his independent statutory functions. Price Indication (Code of Practice)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) when he intends to review the effectiveness of the code of practice for traders on price indications;

(2) what progress he has made in setting up a committee to monitor the effectiveness of the code of practice for traders on price indications.

Mr. Forth: The code of practice on price indications provides practical guidance for traders who need to comply with the obligation imposed by section 20 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 not to give a misleading price indication.

The Government will be monitoring the operation of the legislation and the working of the code of practice and has suggested that a committee should be set up for this purpose. It is hoped that representatives of all interested parties will be prepared to take part in the work of the committee. A review of the working of the legislation and the associated code of practice will be undertaken when sufficient experience of its operation is available to enable an informed assessment to be made.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the effectiveness of the code of practice for traders on price indications (a) since they came into practice on 1 March and (b) before that date.

Mr. Forth: Extensive consultations were held both prior to and during the preparation of the code of practice with representatives of the main interested parties and with the public. Since its coming into operation on 1 March there have been a number of representations and inquiries on specific aspects of the code.

Public Limited Companies

Mr. Janman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new public limited companies have been registered in the United Kingdom in the last 12 months.

Mr. Maude: The chief executive of Companies House tells me that 2,843 public limited companies were incorporated in Great Britain in the 12 months to February 1989. In addition, a further 841 private companies were re-registered as plcs in the same period.

Regional Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures on regional development grants for each of his Department's regions for (a) the number of applications outstanding on 31 March 1988, (b) the number of applications processed, (c) the number of those applications that are still outstanding and (d) the total amount of money paid out since 31 March 1988 to those applicants.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested in respect of the revised regional development grant scheme by region is as follows:

	North East	North West	Yorkshire and Humberside	East Midlands	South West
Number of applications outstanding at 31 March 1988	3,260	2,740	830	240	540
Number of these processed at end-February 1989	3,064	2,711	819	234	538
Number still outstanding end-February 1989	196	29	11	6	2
Grant paid (£ million) to date on applications outstanding at 31 March 1988	14·2	12·9	3·1	1·5	1·8

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total expenditure on regional selective assistance in each of his Department's regions for each year from 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive and the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Atkins: Total expenditure on regional selective assistance (RSA) by region in the years in question was:

£ million

	North East	North West	Yorkshire and Humberside	East Midlands	South West	West Midlands	England Total[1]
1983-84	13·8	15·2	8·8	8·7	2·0	—	62·2

1985-86	15·6	13·3	8·3	3·9	2·5	5·5	74·8
1986-87	17·6	18·9	10·1	2·2	5·2	9·8	100·6
1987-88	23·4	20·9	14·1	2·3	4·3	18·3	122·9

[1] At the regional level the figures include only industrial and training grants: the England total also includes some unallocated project grants, and expenditure under the business improvement services and exchange risk guarantee scheme which it is not possible to provide on a regional basis.

Note:

All figures are gross of domestic receipts and receipts from the European regional development fund.

The latest gross forecast outturn for 1988-89 is £135 million. This is a best estimate and is dependent on the level of claims received and processed before the end of March.

The planned provision for 1989-90 as contained in the Supply Estimates, is £145 million. The planned provision for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £150 million and £160 million, respectively. All planned provision figures are net of domestic receipts.

All the above figures include expenditure on industrial and training grants, and the business improvement services and exchange risk guarantee schemes.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total expenditure on regional development grant in each of his Department's regions for each year from 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive, and the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Atkins: Total expenditure on the original and revised regional development grant schemes by region in the years in question was:

Year	North East	North West	Yorkshire and Humberside	East Midlands	South West
1983-84	68·8	115·5	23·5	8·2	7·8
1984-85	61·6	107·4	26·8	3·8	9·5
1985-86	46·4	83·0	24·2	4·4	8·6
1986-87	89·8	113·7	27·1	8·4	15·3
1987-88	57·6	49·8	17·8	7·1	7·0

Note:

All figures in the table are gross domestic receipts and receipts from the European regional development fund.

The latest gross forecast outturn for DTI as a whole in 1988-89 is £155 million. This is a best estimate and is dependent on the level of claims received and processed before the end of March. The planned provision for 1989-90, as contained in the Supply Estimates, is £125 million. Planned provision in respect of 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £110 million and £55 million respectively. All planned provision figures are net of domestic receipts.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will give for each of his Department's regions (a) the total number of applications received for investment grants from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) if he will give for each of his Department's regions (a) the total number of applications received for innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Atkins: Regional enterprise grants (REGs) became available on 1 April 1988 in the development areas, and on 1 September 1988 in south Yorkshire. The information requested, for the English regions for which DTI is responsible, for the eleven months to 28 February 1989, is as follows:

	Number of applications	Number of offers	Value of offers (£ 000)
Investment
North East	363	219	1,203
North West	390	219	1,373
Yorkshire and Humberside	161	95	771
East Midlands	36	30	269
South West	126	86	385
Total England	1,076	649	4,001

Payments of £557,900 have been under investment up to end February.

Innovation
North East	117	48	896
North West	129	36	759
Yorkshire and Humberside	61	22	490
East Midlands	8	3	75
South West	28	11	199
Total England	343	150	2,419

Payments of £164,000 have been made under innovation up to end February.

The amount of expenditure paid out in any particular region depends on demand for the scheme and the appraisal of individual applications. The value of grants actually paid so far reflects the nature and timescale of the projects on which applicants have sought grants since scheme commencement in April.

The provision for 1989-90 as published in the supply estimates are £22·2 million for investment grants and £5·9 million for innovation grants.

Planned provision for regional enterprise grants in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £45·2 million and £46·3 million respectively. The actual expenditure in future years will of course depend on demand.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures on regional selective assistance for each of his Department's regions giving (a) the total number of applications received since April 1988, (b) the number of applications that have been processed and (c) the total amount of money paid out since 1 April 1988.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested in respect of regional selective assistance (RSA) industrial and training grants by region is as follows:

	North East	North West	Yorkshire and Humberside	East Midlands	South West	West Midlands
(a) Number of applications received between 1 April 1988 and 28 February 1989	255	399	216	21	94	520

(c) Total grant paid (£ million) between 1 April 1988 and 28 February 1989	22·9	17·4	6·9	0·9	3·6	21·2

Business Development Consultancy Initiative

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of applications (a) received, (b) approved for business development consultancy initiative from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available and (c) the total amount of expenditure involved for each of the regions of his Department, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: In the period from 1 April 1988 to 24 February 1989 a total of 16,761 applications were received for the business development consultancy initiatives. In the same period 12,533 applications were approved for assisted consultancy. The Department's contribution to the cost of completed consultancies totalled £9·3 million. It is estimated that those consultancies not completed by 24 February 1989 will cost the Department £22·5 million. A breakdown of numbers and cost of consultancy projects for each DTI region and for Scotland and Wales is as follows:

Department of Trade and Industry region/county	(a) Number of applications received	(b) Number of applications approved for consultancy	(c) Department of Trade and Industry expenditure on completed consultancies (£'000)	(d) Estimated expenditure on outstanding consultancies (£'000)

London	1,783	1,349	892	2,159
Reading	969	769	390	944
Reigate	910	707	446	1,079
Scotland	1,366	1,093	1,078	2,609
Wales	1,038	756	493	1,192
TOTAL	16,761	12,533	9,294	22,488

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the total amount of expenditure on the business development consultancy initiative to be paid out in Scotland, Wales and his Department's regions for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Atkins: We estimate the total amount of expenditure on the business development consultancy initiatives in 1988-89 will be £43·3 million. This cannot be broken down on a regional basis. The public expenditure survey provision for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 is £91 million and £109 million respectively. Provision for 1991-92 has not yet been set.

WALES

Nurses (Regrading)

13. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the nurses' clinical regrading review.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Health authorities in Wales completed their work on the nurses clinical grading review by the end of October 1988. They received additional funds to meet the estimated final cost of the regrading.

Sheepmeat Regime

14. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest developments regarding the sheepmeat regime proposals as they affect Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Little progress has been made on the Commission's proposal for the review of the sheepmeat regime. Meanwhile, producers in Wales continue to benefit from the existing support arrangements.

Wales Tourist Board

15. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the Wales tourist board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend frequently meets with the chairman of the Wales tourist board to discuss many matters of mutual interest, including the WTB's central reservations system which is showing bookings up by 50 per cent. on this time last year—with self-catering holidays up 100 per cent.

Experimental Farms

16. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to expand research and development at Trawsgoed an Pwllpeiran experimental farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The funding of research and development at experimental husbandry farms is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Future research programmes will depend on the results of consultations which are still under way.

Collieries (Merthyr)

17. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends next to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of the collieries in the Merthyr area.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am in regular contact with the chairman and deputy chairman to discuss issues of mutual interest, including the future of pits in the south Wales coalfield.

Gwynedd Health Authority

19. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to meet the chairman of Gwynedd health authority to discuss health services.

Mr. Peter Walker: I plan to meet members of the Welsh health authorities chairmen's Committee, including Mrs. Edwards, in the near future to discuss the White Paper "Working for Patients". My officials will be meeting officers of Gwynedd health authority to discuss its revised financial plans in the light of my recent decisions on its hospital rationalisation proposals.

West Wales (Inward Investment)

20. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to encourage inward investment to west Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Efforts to attract inward investment to Wales have been very successful with 1988 being a record year. The advantages of all parts of Wales are emphasised when projects are discussed with potential inward investors and Winvest has recently appointed a regional executive to work closely with local authorities in west Wales to secure inward investment projects for the area. I am tomorrow launching a marketing campaign developed by Winvest and a consortium of local authorities in west Glamorgan and east Dyfed. Winvest is currently discussing with local authorities in Dyfed the possibility of a similar initiative for west Wales.

East Glamorgan General Hospital

21. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement explaining the delay in the announcement of a replacement for the east Glamorgan general hospital.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Mid Glamorgan health authority's proposals for the replacement of east Glamorgan general hospital are contained in its consultation document on the reorganisation of hospital services in Taff Ely and Rhondda. My right hon. Friend wishes to see health services in that area improved and he will give a decision on the proposal when further information that he has been asked for is obtained.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no such estimates.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the outcome of the meeting between Welsh office Ministers and representatives of disablement organisations in Wales, held on 7 February; and whether he proposed to take any new action as a result of that meeting.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if following the meeting between his officials and the Spastics Society with the Wales Council for the disabled on 7 February in Cardiff, he now considers there to be the need for an all Wales physical handicap strategy and for additional resources to be made available for services for people with physical disabilities in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Representatives of the Wales Council for the Disabled and the Spastics Society in Wales were told that Welsh Office social work services would be undertaking surveys of services for disabled people provided by local authorities and voluntary organisations in Wales. The needs of people with physical and sensory disability would also be examined in the next round of health authority strategic planning. The results of those exercises will not be available until next year, but in the meantime further consultations will be held with a number of bodies representing people with disabilities and preliminary guidance for planning purposes will be issued.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing, in current money equivalent terms, the spending by Social Services departments in Wales on services for registered physically handicapped people during 1987-88 and for each of the previous 10 years, together with the number of such people who were beneficiaries of these services in each year and the corresponding average spending per assisted case.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information available on spending is given in the table:

Local authority expenditure on physically handicapped[1] at 1986-87 prices

	£ million
1976-77	4·5
1977-78	3·3
1978-79	4·3
1979-80	4·0
1980-81	3·8
1981-82	3·6
1982-83	3·5
1983-84	4·2
1984-85	[2]
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	3·6

[1] Estimated from outturn information shown in the local authority social services planning statements for Wales. May include some expenditure on the elderly. Excludes day care.
[2] Not available.

Information relating to the receipt of services provided by Social Services Departments is as follows:

	Number of residents under the age of 65 supported by local authorities[1 2]	Cases of assistance provided by social services departments[3 4]
1977	761	22,110
1978	718	24,997
1979	720	28,707
1980	689	28,418
1981	634	25,293
1982	630	26,720
1983	583	31,290
1984	599	41,659
1985	548	39,312
1986	417	42,423
1987	416	44,310
1988	404	45,285

[1] In local authority, private and voluntary homes. Some of these residents may not be physically handicapped.
[2] As at 31 March.
[3] Telephone rentals, personal equipment, adaptations to property, holidays etc. Information given relates to cases as opposed to beneficiaries (an individual beneficiary may receive more than one case of assistance). Figures quoted include all age groups and relate to assistance provided to both physically handicapped people and other client groups.
[4] Year ending 31 March.

It is not statistically meaningful to calculate an average spending per assisted case because of the differing natures of the various services provided. These services vary from smaller forms of assistance (such as the provision of personal aids) through to long-term support in residential care.

Dialysis Patients

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new patients per million population in Wales received (i) haemodialysis and (ii) continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis in 1988 or the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of new patients receiving renal dialysis in Wales in 1988 was 71·2 per million population. The proportional contribution of each dialysis mode was as follows:

Home haemodialysis	18·3 per cent.
Hospital haemodialysis	31·0 per cent.
Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis	50·7 per cent.

New Patients

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of new patients were attended to in the private sector and in public sector units.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available centrally.

Regional Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures on regional selective assistance for (a) the total number of applications received since 1 April 1988, (b) the number of the above applications that have been processed and (c) the total amount of money paid out since 1 April 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 231 applications for regional selective assistance grants were received by my Department and 181 of these processed in the period from 1 April 1988 to 28 February 1989. The total amount of grant paid out over the same period was £27·4 million (RSA project and training grants).

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures on regional development grants for (a) the number of applications outstanding on 31 March 1988, (b) the number of those outstanding applications that have subsequently been processed, (c) the number of those applications that are still outstanding and (d) the total amount of money paid out since 31 March 1988 in regional development grants to those applicants.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 1,935 applications for revised regional development grant (RDG II) were outstanding on 31 March 1988. All these have since been actioned, and decisions had been made on 1,821 as at 28 February 1989, leaving a balance of 114. Actual payments on applications outstanding at 31 March 1988 totalled £13·3 million as at 28 February. Total expenditure on RDG II between 31 March 1988 and 28 February 1989 was £34·85 million.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total expenditure on regional development grant for each of the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive, and the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance[1] in Wales for the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive is as follows:

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the total number of applications received for innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Walker: Under the regional enterprise grant scheme 106 applications for innovation projects were received by my Department and 28 offers of grant to the value of £538,000 were made in the period 1 April 1988 to 28 February 1989. Most of these offers will not fall due for payment until 1989-90 and subsequent years. The revised total provision for payments in the 1988-89 financial year is £0·1 million. Vote provision for 1989-90 is shown in the Supply Estimates published on 14 March and planned provision in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £1·8 million in each year.

Remand

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that minor offenders are not given remand; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The decision to grant bail or, to remand an offender in custody is entirely one for the courts, which have before them the facts of each case and can consider all the circumstances.

Incinerators (Pollution)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for new guidance on practices at incinerators to reduce dioxin discharges; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 16 March by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham). In Scotland, large incinerators will be under the control of HM industrial pollution inspectorate.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for new limitations on pollution from incinerators of municipal rubbish; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 16 March by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham).

Salmon Farming

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been conducted into the metabolism and depuration rate of dichlorvos in farmed salmon; and what regulations are in place to ensure that farmed salmon is not marketed within an appropriate period following treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No research has been carried out by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland into the metabolism and depuration rate of dichlorvos in farmed salmon. The veterinary products committee would require any company applying for a licence for a dichlorvos-based product to provide data of this kind for evalution. However, information in support of an application for a medicinal product licence is a matter of commercial confidentiality and its publication would be a matter for the company concerned. It is the responsibility of the user and his veterinary adviser to comply with the conditions of use stipulated for any veterinary medicinal product.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when and where the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory will publish its research result on (a) the toxicity of dichlorvos to marine organisms, including phytoplankton species, copepod species and larval stages of various marine organisms and (b) the persistence of dichlorvos in the marine environment and the form in which it is dispersed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Toxicity experiments on phytoplankton and copepod species were carried out by scientists of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory as preliminary "range-finder" tests on a number of species to determine the most sensitive and therefore appropriate species for more detailed work. Subsequent detailed studies of the toxicity of dichlorvos to lobster and herring larvae have been carried out and it is hoped that reports will be published in the scientific press later this year.

No measurements of the persistence of dichlorvos in the marine environment have been carried out by scientists of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. Published work on the degradation rate of dichlorvos indicates a half-life in sea water of 6-7 days at 10-15c.

The marine laboratory is currently developing numerical models of the dispersion of dichlorvos away from release points in a fish farm, and field studies are planned for later this year to measure the horizontal and vertical diffusion coefficients and other hydrographic parameters required for these models. It is too early to say when this work will be sufficiently progressed to consider publication.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue a template for future environmental assessment statements in connection with proposed salmon farming developments to include a full marine impact statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Schedule 1 of the Environmental Assessment (Salmon Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1988 already provides a framework for preparing environmental statements including the assessment of the effect of the proposed development on the marine environment.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that the environmental assessment statement submitted to the Crown Estate Commissioners by Marine Harvest Ltd. for a proposed salmon farm development in Lamlash bay, Isle of Arran (ref. XX100/660a) meets the requirements of (a) the Environmental Assessment (Salmon Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1988 and (b) the European Community directive 85/337 as implemented by Statutory Instrument 1218.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Whether the requirements of European Community Directive 85/337, as implemented by the Environmental Assessment (Salmon Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1988, are met is the responsibility of the Crown Estate Commissioners who are the competent authority under the regulations.

Schools (Self-Government)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations he has met with to discuss the consultative document on self-governing schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Over recent months I have met a number of education organisations and discussed a range of topics, including our explanatory paper on self-governing schools.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the schools which have expressed an interest in changing to self-governing status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Pending the establishment of school boards there is no formal means by which a school corporately can register interest in changing to self-governing status.

Deprivation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has gathered, and what research it has sponsored or carried out regarding the effect of deprivation on the physical and mental health of the Scottish people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department is funding a research project into "Community Health Promotion in a Deprived Area" and has funded studies into aspects of health care in the community. The Department is aware of work undertaken by the Medical Research Council sociology unit in Glasgow, which may be relevant.

Grant Maintained Trust

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or his Ministers have met representatives of the Grant Maintained Trust.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any requests from the Grant Maintained Trust for forward support.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

City Technology College Trust

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any request from the City Technology College Trust for financial support.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or his Ministers have met representatives of the City Technology College Trust.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes.

Regional Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures on regional development grants for (a) the number of applications outstanding on 31 March 1988, (b) the number of those outstanding applications that have subsequently been processed, (c) the number of applications that are still outstanding and (d) the total amount of money paid out since 31 March 1988.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested for applications in Scotland under the revised regional development grant scheme are as follows:

Number of applications outstanding at 31 March 1988: 5,117
Number of these fully processed by 15 March 1989: 4,414
Number under consideration but awaiting response from applicants: 703
Number of applications awaiting attention: nil
Total payments made between 31 March 1988 and 10 March 1989: £47·7 million

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures on regional selective assistance for (a) the total number of applications received since 1 April 1988, (b) the number of applications that have been processed and (c) the total amount of money paid out since 1 April 1988.

Mr. Lang: In the period 1 April 1988 to 15 March 1989, 242 applications for regional selective assistance (RSA) were received in Scotland. Of these, 199 have been fully processed. The remaining 43 are being processed. Total payments of RSA in Scotland in the same period have amounted to £33·0 million.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the allocation of a mobile cancer screening unit to the Highland health board for use wholly in that board's area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have agreed that Highland health board will receive a mobile breast cancer screening unit for use wholly within their area as part of the programme to implement a comprehensive breast cancer screening service in Scotland by March 1991.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those sewage treatment works in Scotland that discharged effluent below the required standard during 1988;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of recorded incidents of river pollution, the number of related prosecutions and the number of convictions in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. In Scotland river purification authorities are responsible for water pollution control. The information sought on compliance, pollution incidents and prosecutions is generally available in the annual reports of river purification boards which are lodged in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rights of the Child (United Nations Convention)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of negotiations on the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; whether it is intended that Her Majesty's Government should be a signatory to that convention; and what reservations Her Majesty's Government have expressed on the convention.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom has played a leading role in the drafting of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child and intends to sign and ratify soon after its adoption. We indicated at the working group in December last that we may need to enter reservations on various articles of the convention but the scope of these reservations has yet to be determined.

South Africa

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take steps to express Her Majesty's Government's concern at the recent visit to Chile by General Magnus Malan, the South African defence minister, and the resultant agreements between Chile and South Africa for military collaboration, in contravention of the United Nations arms embargo on South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We faithfully implement the United Nations arms embargo. It is for the United Nations Security Council arms embargo committee to investigate alleged breaches by other countries. We would deplore any breach shown to have occurred.

Vietnam

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is his policy to support the policy of the European Community Commission to establish a special office of trade and co-operation in Hanoi to further commercial relations between the European Community and Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: We understand the Commission has no plans to open an office in Hanoi.

El Salvador

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will be sending observers to the forthcoming presidential elections in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We have accepted an invitation from the Salvadorean Government to observe the presidential election in El Salvador on 19 March. Dr. David Browning, fellow of St. Cross college, Oxford has been appointed as official Government observer. He will report his findings to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Special Constables

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance the Lord Chancellor gives to justices of the peace regarding their powers under section 79 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847 to swear in as special constables persons nominated for the purpose by harbours, docks or piers undertakers and as to the nature of the inquiries to be made before such swearing in; and when such guidance was last amended.

The Solicitor-General: The Lord Chancellor does not give guidance to justices of the peace on the exercise of their powers. They receive advice as to the law and procedure on such matters from their justices' clerk.

Duty Solicitors

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what representations have been received by the Lord Chancellor's Department on the draft Legal Advice and Assistance (Scope) Regulations 1989 concerning duty solicitor schemes in the county court; and if he will publish the responses to any such representations.

The Solicitor-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has received five representations on the draft Legal Advice and Assistance (Scope) Regulations 1989 which concern the provision of assistance by way of representation in county courts. Representations were also received on this subject during the preparation of the regulations from a further nine bodies or individuals to whom individual replies have been sent. These replies are on similar lines and I will place a copy of the letter of 15 November 1988 from the Lord Chancellor's Department to the Law Society in the Libraries of both Houses.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what steps have been taken in the last year to obtain accurate estimates of the percentage of the adult population eligible for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: Studies have been carried out on the basis of family expenditure survey data in relation to households of different compositions.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what estimate he has made of the number of persons who will (a) cease to be eligible and (b) pay increased contributions in respect of legal advice and assistance, civil legal and criminal legal aid consequent upon proposals for assessment of cohabitees' resources when assessing legal aid eligibility.

The Solicitor-General: The proposals in respect of the assessment of cohabitants' resources for legal advice and assistance, civil legal aid and criminal legal aid reflect the rules applicable to social security benefit applicants and implement a recommendation made by the legal aid advisory committee in its 34th annual report (1983-84). The Government announced their acceptance of this recommendation in 1986. It has not been possible to estimate the numbers who might benefit and the numbers who might lose as a result of this change.

Single Parents (Custody)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the requirements for judges to inquire into the circumstances of single parents and the provision for any children before any custodial sentence is passed.

The Solicitor-General: When passing sentence judges are required to take into account all the relevant circumstances.

Crown Court Judges

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General how many Crown court judges are in post; what is their current training; what social services, psychological, or community service training is undertaken before or during appointment; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: There are 405 circuit judges of whom the majority regularly sit in the Crown court. Circuit judges are appointed from recorders and assistant recorders who will have sat regularly on a part-time basis.

Before assistant recorders are permitted to sit they must have completed a study programme which comprises:

(a) visits to the prison and probation services;
(b) attendance at a residential 3½ day induction course;
(c) sitting in with an experienced judge for a minimum of five days.

Every year each circuit holds one or more conferences which all circuit judges and part-time members of the judiciary are expected to attend. Speakers from the prison and probation service regularly attend these conferences. After 3½ years' sitting assistant recorders attend a three-day residential refresher seminar. Thereafter, together with all circuit judges and other part-time members of the judiciary they attend further refresher seminars every five years. In addition, the judicial studies board has initiated a series of induction and refresher courses in the civil and family field which have, inter alia, dealt with housing benefit.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the occasions when people have been imprisoned for contempt by Crown court judges or their equivalent for each year from 1970; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: It is not possible to distinguish between contemnors committed to prison by reference to the type of tribunal ordering the committal. However, the table provided shows the numbers of men and women committed to prison for contempt for the period 1970 to 1987 and the average length of imprisonment for all contemnors for each year during the period 1975 to 1987.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide details of how the north-east London area advisory committee on the appointment of justices of the peace is undergoing the process of reconstitution; for what purpose; and what progress has been made.

The Solicitor-General: The reconstitution of the north-east London area advisory committee is a routine matter. All the Lord Chancellor's advisory committees on the appointment of justices are subject to a similar process every three years. Appointments are made by the Lord Chancellor on the recommendation of the chairman. The purpose is to obtain a balance of new and experienced members who broadly reflect the composition of the area served.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General why he does not regard it as appropriate to disclose information about members on (a) the north-east London area advisory committee and (b) the north-east London advisory committee Waltham Forest division sub-committee; what steps he is taking to ensure that the local community are confident that these individuals are fit for their positions; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The purpose of these committees is to advise the Lord Chancellor on the appointment of justices. The final decision is his. The Lord Chancellor believes that it is appropriate for the names of the members to be disclosed but sees no purpose in the publication of personal information about them.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the £40 million tax relief estimated for 1989-90 for private medical insurance he estimates will go to those who already have private medical insurance.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: The introduction of tax relief for private medical insurance paid by or on behalf of the elderly has no cost in 1989-90. As I explained in the Budget debate it is estimated that about 90 per cent. of the cost in 1990-91 will be attributable to those who already have private medical insurance. Over later years this proportion is expected to decline, though the figure will depend upon take-up and marketing by insurers.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the £40 million tax relief he has set aside for private medical insurance he estimates will go to (a) BUPA and (b) Private Patients Plan.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: The benefit of tax relief on qualifying private medical insurance premiums will go to the person paying the premium and not to the providers of private medical insurance.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the cost of private medical insurance tax relief for 1991-92 and 1992-93;

(2) what is his best estimate of the proportion of pensioners who will take up private medical insurance tax relief in each of the five years from 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: Tax relief on private medical insurance premiums paid by the elderly will not be available until 1990-91. It is estimated that about 5 per cent. of the 12 million people aged 60 and above will be covered by private medical insurance in 1990-91. The number of people covered and the cost of the relief in future years will depend, among other things, on the extent to which medical insurance for the over-60s is promoted and taken up.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if a firm will be eligible for tax relief if they pay the private medical insurance tax relief of ex-employees who are aged over 60 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: A firm will normally be entitled to a deduction for these costs under existing law in computing the taxable profits of its trade. But relief would not also be due under the new relief-at-source scheme to be introduced in April 1990.

Seafarers (Taxation)

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish details of any special arrangements for the taxation of earnings of seafarers which apply or are in active contemplation in each of the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Last year for United Kingdom resident seafarers we eased the conditions for entitlement to the 100 per cent. foreign earnings deduction available to those United Kingdom residents who work wholly or partly abroad for a qualifying period of 365 days. Seafarers may now visit the United Kingdom for up to 90 consecutive days and up to one quarter of the total number of days abroad and in the United Kingdom without losing the deduction.

I understand that in Greece, for many years, the earnings of ratings have been exempt from tax and a special low rate of tax (5·5 per cent.) is applied to officers' earnings. A number of other EC countries (Belgium, Denmark, Germany and Netherlands) have either introduced or are reported to be considering arrangements, the effect of which is to use the seafarers' tax liability as the basis for calculating a subsidy in favour of the employing shipping company.

Shipping

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a summary of the arrangements for special depreciation on shipping investment in European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information available about the tax treatment of depreciation on shipping investment is as follows:

Country	Rate/Method of depreciation	Notes
Belgium	Based on life of eight years; 20 per cent. a year straightline reducing to 10 per cent.	Investment allowance of 13 per cent. for new ships.
Denmark	Stage payments in advance of delivery (up to a maximum of 30 per cent. of total cost) attract allowances of 15 per cent. a year for up to two years. Post-delivery rate on unrelieved expenditure is 30 per cent. (reducing balance).
France	According to life of ship: Life (years) / Rate (reducing balance) (per cent.) 8 — 31·25 10 — 25 15 — 16·66 20 — 12·5
Federal Republic of Germany	Normal rates based on expected useful life: large passenger ship: 18·75 per cent.; others: 25 per cent. (reducing balance). Corresponding straightline rates are 6·25 per cent. and 8·33 per cent. Additional 40 per cent. of net cost of new ship can be taken over first five years (straightline basis only).	80 per cent. of book profit from sale of ship can be taken to a tax-free reserve, provided ship owned for at least six years. Replacement must take place within two years.
Greece	Special tax rules according to age and tonnage of ship. (No details available.)
Ireland	Initial allowance of up to 75 per cent. for capital expenditure on new or secondhand ships (reducing to 50 per cent. for 1989-90) which may be taken as and when required.
Italy	Accelerated allowance of 15 per cent. for each of first three years. Normal rates thereafter. Passenger, tanker or refrigerated ships: 10 per cent. (straightline). Others (including dry cargo ships): 9 per cent.
Netherlands	Usual rates 12-16 per cent. (reducing balance) over 12-20 years according to expected life of ship.	Special investment premium of 4 per cent. per year over five years reduces depreciation base. Book profit from sale of ship can be taken to tax-free reserve. Replacement must take place within four years.
Spain	Tankers, refrigerated ships: 15 per cent. Passenger/cargo: 12·5 per cent. (reducing balance). Corresponding straightline rates are 6 per cent. and 5 per cent.	10 per cent. tax credit for investment in new fixed assets. Book profit from sale of ship tax free if reinvested in replacement ship within two years.
United Kingdom	25 per cent. of reducing balance.	Allowances can be rolled forward and taken as required. Cost of newly-acquired ship can be used to offset a balancing charge on the disposal of another vessel, where disposal and acquisition occur in the same chargeable period.

Tax Threshold

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the full cost to the Exchequer of raising the threshold when tax-payers have to pay 40 per cent. income tax (a) from £20,000 to £21,000, (b) from £21,000 to £22,000, (c) from £22,000 to £23,000, (d) from £23,000 to £24,000 and (e) from £24,000 to £25,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 March 1989]: The direct revenue cost in a full year at 1989-90 income levels of raising the basic rate limit by £1,000 from the 1988-89 level of £19,300 is estimated to be about £200 million. Each further increase of £1,000 would cost about £10 million less, so that the cost of raising the limit from £24,000 to £25,000 would be about £150 million.

Estimates are based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

National Debt

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis of the total national debt of £197 billion as at 31 March 1988, showing how much was incurred in the following periods: (a) 1979-80 to 1987-88, (b) 1974-75 to 1977-78, (c) 1970-71 to 1973-74, (d) 1964-65 to 1969-70 and (e) 1959-60 to 1963-64.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Taken literally, the question appears to ask what fraction of the particular stocks currently outstanding (31 March 1988) was issued, net of redemptions, during each period. Figures for Treasury Bills and the various National Savings products are unavailable. Of those gilt-edged stocks currently outstanding (nominal value = £140·9 billion) the (net) amounts incurred were as follows:

	£ billion
(a) 1979-80 to 1987-88	109·5
(b) 1974-75 to 1979-80	21·5
(c) 1970-71 to 1973-74	3·9
(d) 1964-65 to 1969-70	2·4
(e) 1959-60 to 1963-64	1·9

However, such a series is not very informative. The average life of gilt-edged stocks is somewhere near eight years, and debt has to be issued continually to replace any that is redeemed; we would almost always expect to see a declining series, as above, whatever the relative strengths of public sector finances in each period.

However, the national debt is not the most useful or comprehensive measure of public sector indebtedness. It includes debt held by official bodies within central Government, it does not cover the whole of central Government and it excludes entirely the debt of other parts of the public sector. In addition, it takes no account of the public sector's short-term assets, including foreign exchange reserves.

A better measure is the public sector net debt, which is analagous to the PSBR-PSDR.

In 1987-88 prices, the total PSBR over each period was as follows:[1]

(a) 1979-80 to 1987-88—£88·4 billion equivalent to £9·8 billion a year.
(b) 1974-75 to 1978-79—£111·9 billion equivalent to £22·4 billion a year.
(c) 1970-71 to 1973-74—£39·8 billion equivalent to £9·9 billion a year.
(d) 1964-65 to 1969-70—£33·4 billion equivalent to £5·6 billion a year.
(e) 1959 to 1963—£27·4 billion equivalent to £5·5 billion a year.

Income Tax (Scotland)

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the income tax yield from taxpayers resident in Scotland for the latest available tax year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Income tax liabilities of taxpayers resident in Scotland amounted to about £3·3 billion in 1986-87, the latest available year.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give revised cash limits for 1988-89 which take account of the decision by some Departments not to seek supplementary provision to cover the carry forward allowed under the end year flexibility scheme.

Mr. Major: Under the end year flexibility scheme, announced in 1983, some 34 1988-89 cash limits were increased to allow for the carryforward of capital underspend in 1987-88—Official Report, 21 July 1988, columns 725-28. Under the terms of the additional flexibility arrangements for the Ministry of Defence announced in 1986, there was a further increase to allow for carryforward and to compensate the defence budget for a writing off part of a debt in respect of loan service and training charges incurred by the Nigerian Government —Official Report, 21 July 1988, columns 725-36. In the case of four voted cash limits, the relevant departments have not sought parliamentary approval for the extra provision in a Supplementary estimate. To keep the control figures in line with provision, the cash limits are accordingly being reduced; a list is shown in the following table.

Revisions to 1988-89 voted cash limits

Class	Vote	Accounting department	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit £000	Decrease £000	Revised cash limit £000
I	[1]2	Ministry of Defence	Defence Procurement	8,822,266	531,169	8,291,097
XVI	2	Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland	Agricultural services and fisheries	76,542	445	76,097
XIX	13	Her Majesty's Treasury	Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency	18,490	406	18,084
XX	13	Office of Fair Trading	Office of Fair Trading	10,227	75	10,152
Total					532,095

[1] The five cash limited Defence votes are each separate cash limits but, by agreement with the Treasury, are managed as a cash block. Underspend on expenditure eligible for the scheme in these cash limits was carried forward to Class 1, Vote 2.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Crown servants posted overseas continue to receive mortgage interest relief on their homes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Crown servants, including members of the armed forces and diplomats, serving abroad who are required to live in job-related accommodation qualify for mortgage interest relief on their homes in the United Kingdom. Most other Crown servants are covered by the existing extra statutory concession under which relief continues during absences, due to employment, for periods up to four years. In a few cases Crown servants, whose salaries remain subject to United Kingdom tax, are posted overseas for periods exceeding four years. We are extending the extra statutory concession to ensure that relief will continue in these cases for the full period of the overseas posting.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Research Assistants (Passes)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how are holders of research assistants' passes with access to the Library reviewed in order to ensure that those who would make fullest use of them are able to do so.

Mr. Wakeham: The passes issued to right hon. and hon. Members for use by their research assistants which give limited access to the Members' Library, are issued for a period of one year in the first instance, and are then renewable on application for three further years. Research assistants holding such passes are required to sign a register each time they use the Library in order to ensure that not more than 15 of them are in the Library at the same time. There is no systematic monitoring of frequency of usage: nor would it appear desirable or practicable to do so.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members are on the waiting list for research assistants' passes with access to the Library.

Mr. Wakeham: Twenty-nine.

Standing Orders

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list every change in the Standing Orders of the House since 1979; and if he will indicate the name and ministerial status of the person moving the appropriate motion to change the Standing Orders.

Mr. Wakeham: A table showing the dates at which the Standing Orders of 1988, relating to Public Business, were passed and amended is given in "Standing Orders of the House of Commons: Public Business 1988" (pages ix to xvi; HC 1; Session 1988-89). The House also frequently approves motions which either modify Standing Orders for the duration of a Session or a Parliament or suspend Standing Orders for a specific purpose or a specific period. A list showing every change and the name and ministerial status of the person moving the appropriate motion could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Miss Pamella Bordes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council on what date approval for the fitting of a division bell to premises occupied by Miss Pamella Bordes was given by the Serjeant at Arms; and who made the application.

Mr. Wakeham: No application has been made for a Division bell to be fitted to premises known to be occupied by Ms. Bordes.

Photo-passes

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give the number of photo-passes to the House held by staff of each Government Department.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer Thursday 9 March 1989]: Photo-passes giving restricted access to the Palace of Westminster are issued to departmental staff permanently employed within the precincts, to departmental messengers, to ministeral drivers and to officials who are required to attend often at short notice. SOCIAL SECURITY

Appeals

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for the delays in dealing with the appeal before the social security appeals tribunal in the case of Mr. George McLeod, 689 Mosspark drive, Glasgow.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. McLeod appealed on 3 May and 20 June 1988 against two separate decisions issued by the adjudication officer. The delay in submitting the papers to the social security appeal tribunal was caused partly by the local office having to process a larger than normal volume of appeals resulting from benefit take-up campaigns in the area and partly by the need to resolve issues raised by Mr. McLeod in subsequent correspondence. The appeals were heard on 16 February 1989 and notification of the tribunal's decision was sent to him on 6 March 1989.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the number of cases relating to the 26-week period of unemployment benefit qualifications which have gone to an appeal tribunal and the number for which appeals were successful, broken down for Great Britain, England, Wales, Scotland and by Department of Social Security Region.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of appeals against disqualification for unemployment benefit, for reasons generally known as voluntary unemployment, heard and decided during the three months ended 30 June 1988 (the latest period for which information is available) and the outcome of those appeals are in the following table:

Area	Number of appeals
	Heard and decided	Decided in claimant's favour
Great Britain	2,329	1,040
England	1,829	774
Wales	154	84
Scotland	346	182
English regions:
North Eastern	416	155
North Western	410	179
London North	271	116
London South	234	113
Midlands	274	111
South Western	224	100

Information is not available as to the number of these appeals which were against disqualifications for the maximum period of 26 weeks.

Pension Age

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Government's consideration of proposals for the equalisation of pension age to be resolved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are committed to the principle of equalising state pension age. These are complex issues and it would be wrong to reach a decision without taking all the factors into account. We cannot yet say when we will be able to announce changes.

Family Credit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers claiming family credit into (a) one-parent and two-parent families, (b) self-employed and employed and (c) regions, showing in each case the average payment per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 20 January at column 360. No further information is available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed family credit and housing benefit in 1988-89; and how many will do so in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will explain how the April 1989 income support rule is derived;

(2) what element is included in the income support rules for April 1989 for the average rate payment by an income support claimant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 27 October 1988 at columns 445-58.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what element is included in the income support rules for April 1989 for replacement clothing and food.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The income support rates are intended to provide for normal day-to-day living expenses. There is no specific amount included for replacement clothing and food.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what element is included in the income support rules for April 1989 for the average water rate payment by an income support claimant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Water charges are not a separately identifiable element in the income support rates. Compensation for water charges was included as a once-and-for-all adjustment from April 1988.

Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it is estimated would have been paid out in 1989-90 in widows' benefits had the age limit for widows' pension not been raised from 40 to 45 years and the threshold for abatement not been raised from 50 to 55 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 February 1989]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The latest estimate of the amount of benefit that would have been paid out in widows' benefits in 1989-90 had the age bands for widow's pension not been changed is £965 million. This includes the extra expenditure arising from the changes announced on 28 February at columns 161-62 that women widowed before 11 April 1988 will have their entitlement to widows' benefits determined on the pre-reforms legislation.

Seafarers

Mr. Woodcock: To ask Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a summary of any special arrangements for social security contributions by or on behalf of seafarers which apply or are in active contemplation in each of the member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The following special arrangements exist in the United Kingdom for social security contributions paid by and on behalf of seafarers:

1. National insurance contributions paid by the employers of foreign-going mariners are subject to a special rebate, of 0·5 per cent. This reflects the fact that employers of foreign going mariners provide health care facilities for mariners whilst they are on board ship, and because the mariners cannot claim sickness benefit while abroad.

2. Share fishermen are self-employed but pay a special higher rate of national insurance contribution to reflect their entitlement to Unemployment and Industrial Injuries Benefits. The information available in respect of other EEC countries is as follows:

Belgium

Employers can receive special subsidies against their social security contributions if a crew is abroad for over seven months.

Denmark

Employers pay an extra amount per employee to cover sickness insurance.

West Germany

Foreign crew members not resident in Germany do not pay contributions for retirement pension purposes where there is no reciprocal agreement between West Germany and the country of origin.

France

Seafarers can retire on full pension at 55, or at 50 or 52½ on reduced pension (normal pension age 65).

Greece

Special contribution rates and pension arrangements for employers and employees.

Ireland

No special arrangements.

Italy

No special arrangements.

Netherlands

No special arrangements.

Portugal

No special arrangements.

Spain

Special contribution rates for employers and employees and State subsidy.

CIVIL SERVICE

Next Steps Initiative

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress he can report on the next steps initiative.

Mr. Luce: Since I last reported to the House on 1 February my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced that he has concluded that the Central Office of Information should become an agency. In addition, last week my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement announced the decision to set up the four main non-nuclear research establishments, covering 12,500 staff as a single organisation with the intention that they should become a next steps agency by April 1991. I strongly welcome both these announcements, which illustrate the importance which the Government attach to the next steps initiative.

THE ARTS

Yorkshire Arts Association

29. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Yorkshire Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

Northern Arts Association

30. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Northern Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

British Theatre Association Library

32. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress has been made to secure the future of the British Theatre Association Library.

Mr. Luce: I was recently able to discuss the future of the BTA with Mr. Robert Holmes a'Court. I am now very pleased to say that the executive committee of the BTA has accepted Mr. Holmes a'Court's offer to provide premises for the association in central London. These premises will enable the BTA to continue its operations with a firm financial base underwritten by Mr. Holmes a'Court and I would like to pay tribute to his remarkable generosity, which has enabled satisfactory future arrangements for the association to be agreed. I am contributing £25,000 to the BTA towards its transitional costs.

British Library

33. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether, in the light of concern about the ability of the new building at St. Pancras to house all the London collections of the British library, consideration has been given to the retention of the accommodation in the British Museum building with a view to continuing to make use of the round reading room and King's library, and to maintaining the link between the historic collections of the library and museums.

Mr. Luce: The British Library board is satisfied that the library's key requirements—including appropriate accommodation for the King's library—will be met by the completed building at St. Pancras. There are no plans for the British library to retain any reader or storage accommodation in the British Museum building when the new library is complete in 1996.

Library Attendances

34. Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the pattern of attendance at libraries over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: This information is not kept centrally.

North-West Arts Association

35. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the North West Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

Greater London Arts Association

36. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Greater London Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

43. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Greater London Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

44. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Greater London Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

37. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has for the future of the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Mr. Luce: I am delighted with the progress of the scheme which, since its inception in 1984, has already brought £23 million of new money into the arts and has attracted over 900 new sponsors. As I announced to the House on 6 February at column 643, to encourage even more businesses to support the arts, I propose to allow individual arts organisations to be eligible for up to two awards next year instead of one as at present, up to the maximum of £25,000.

East Midlands Arts Association

38. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the East Midlands Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

West Midlands Arts Association

39. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the West Midlands Arts Association to discuss the funding and structure of the arts in his region.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

The Puppet Centre, Battersea

40. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit the Puppet Centre, Battersea, to discuss support for puppetry.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to visit the Puppet Centre.

Northern Ballet Theatre

41. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what recent representations he has received seeking his intervention to protect the future of the Northern Ballet Theatre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations. I refer my hon. Friend to the Adjournment debate on Wednesday 8 March 1989 at columns 1007-1014.

Museums

42. Mr. Maples: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museums are currently established in Great Britain; and how many there were in (i) 1984, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1974 and (iv) 1969.

Mr. Luce: The number of museums and galleries in the United Kingdom is estimated to have risen from approximately 900 in 1963 to just under 2,200 in 1984 and over 2,400 in 1988.

The fastest area of growth has been in the independent museum sector where the Association of Independent Museums has indicated that its current membership of 750 represents a doubling of the membership in 1980.

British Craft

45. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assistance is given by the Government towards the development and export of British craft.

Mr. Luce: The Crafts Council, which is funded by my Department, seeks actively to promote the sales of works by artists/craftsmen at home and abroad. During the past year, its activities have generated sales of crafts exceeding £2¼ million, of which more than £450,000 (20 per cent.) has been for export.

Performing Arts (Young People)

46. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to encourage young people to be trained in the performing arts.

Mr. Luce: I welcome the establishment of the city technological college at Selhurst, in 1990, which will train young people in the full range of abilities, from performance to technical skills, that the performing arts will require in the future. I hope that there will be similar, schools.

Mappa Mundi

47. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress has been made in ensuring that the Mappa Mundi remains in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: The dean and chapter of Hereford cathedral, having withdrawn the map from public auction at the end of February, announced at the weekend their decision on the proposals before them. They hope to raise the substantial sum required for the cost of cathedral repairs, running costs and pastoral work by offering shares at £1,000 each in a company, the shareholders to receive a replica of the map and the dean and chapter to hold 50 per cent. of the stock.

The national heritage memorial fund today issued a press notice detailing its proposals, put to the cathedral on 17 February, but not in the event taken up. These were that a charitable trust should be set up, to which would pass ownership not only of the Mappa Mundi, but also the chained library, both of which would be housed in a new building. The trustees had secured from Mr. J. Paul Getty an offer of £1 million, and NHMF had also offered £2 million on the understanding that a public appeal should be launched to raise a similar sum. These proposals were open to negotiation.

I am grateful to the trustees of the fund for their efforts which, along with those of other interested parties, including Hereford city council, have led to the withdrawal from sale of Mappa Mundi. I wish the cathedral authorities every success in their task.

New Buildings

48. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will consider regular giving of Government funds for sponsorship of new buildings to house the performing and other arts.

Mr. Luce: Sponsorship of new or refurbished buildings by businesses is eligible for matching under the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme in the same way as other arts activities. In 1988-89 such projects attracted over £100,000 in awards.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each of the three counties of Yorkshire, the number and grade of veterinary officers employed by his Department at the end of 1988 and give comparable figures for 1983 and 1978; what recruitment of staff he is undertaking within these three counties at the present time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Because my Department's regional organisation has undergone changes in the period covered by the question and because the geographical areas of responsibility of veterinary staff are not contiguous with the boundaries of the three shire counties of Yorkshire, the precise figures requested by the hon. Member are not available. However, the number and grade of my Department's permanent veterinary staff with responsibilities covering all or part of Yorkshire for the end of years 1988, 1983 and 1978 were:

	1988	1983	1978
Regional Veterinary Officer	1	1	1
Deputy Regional Veterinary Officer	1	1	1
Superintending Veterinary Investigation Officer	1	1	1
Divisional Veterinary Officer	4	4	4
Senior Veterinary Investigation Officer	[1]1	2	2
Veterinary Investigation Officer (VIO)	[1]3	6	6
Veterinary Officer (VO)	11	14	16
Total	22	29	31

[1] Leeds Veterinary Investigation Centre closed in 1986.

A national recruitment exercise for VOs and VIOs is planned for early May, which will take account of one veterinary officer vacancy at Leeds and additional posts granted for salmonella controls.

Vote Office (Publications)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what basis he decides which of his publications should be available to hon. Members in the Vote Office on the day of publication;

(2) how many reports he has published in the last 12 months; and how many of these were made available in the Vote Office on the day of publication.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Reports and other material, compiled by my Department and published by HMSO should be available to hon. Members under arrangements agreed between HMSO and the House authorities. I make other important material available if, for example, the document is of direct interest to a parliamentary debate, or referred to in a parliamentary answer. In the last 12 months HMSO published 14 reports on behalf of my Department. Other than HMSO publications the Department made 98 documents available to hon. Members by placing copies in the House Libraries and copies of 490 documents were lodged in the Vote Office. The total number of documents which my Department made available to the public is not held centrally.

Slaughterhouses (Diseased Animals)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what inspections he carries out in slaughterhouses to ensure that cattle with bovine spongiform encephalopathy and sheep with scrapie do not enter the food chain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On the advice of the Southwood working party, the carcases of cattle suspected of having bovine spongiform encephalopathy are destroyed as a precautionary measure. The Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977, as amended, prohibit the entry of animals which are diseased, or suspected of having a disease into a slaughterhouse unless they are accompanied by a certificate issued by a veterinary surgeon which states that the animals are not suffering from any disease or condition which would render the carcase unfit for human consumption.

Scrapie has been present in this country for at least 200 years without any evidence of a risk to humans. Neither has research identified such a risk. Therefore action to prevent sheep with scrapie being slaughtered for human consumption would not be appropriate.

Abattoirs (Hygiene Standards)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the regulations which control hygiene and animal welfare standards in abattoirs for meat prepared for domestic consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson: For the requirements applying to red meat slaughterhouses I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Wednesday 1 February at columns 240-41 to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne Central (Mr. Cousins).

In respect of poultry slaughterhouses the following apply:

The Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1976, as amended.

The Slaughter of Poultry Act 1967 (as amended).

The Slaughter of Poultry (Humane Conditions) Regulations 1984.

Sheep Dipping

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations control the use of chemicals for dipping sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sheep dips are veterinary medicines and are subject to controls set down in the Medicines Act 1968. Proper use and storage on farms is a matter for the HSE.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives to farmers about the safe use of chemicals used for dipping sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is a condition of licences for all veterinary medicinal products that suitable advice on use is included on the label including, where appropriate, operator safety warnings and contingency medical advice.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the safe disposal of chemicals used for dipping sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sheep dip labels carry advice on safe disposal. Fuller guidance is available free in ADAS booklet 2198, "Guidelines for the disposal of unwanted pesticides and containers on farms and holdings".

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure that chemicals used in sheep dips do not enter rivers and streams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sheep dip labels point out that it is unlawful to permit any poisonous, noxious or polluting substance to enter any river, stream or watercourse etc. The law is enforced by local water authorities from whom further guidance is available.

Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring is carried out by his Department into transmissible spongiform encephalopathies in mammals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is a notifiable disease in Great Britain and all suspected cases must be reported to the Ministry. Members of the Ministry's sheep and goat health scheme may participate in an optional scrapie monitoring programme. The veterinary investigation service of the state veterinary service continues to monitor for novel diseases which have not been recorded in this country.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has of delays in obtaining permission to proceed with plantings with the farm woodland scheme during the present tree-planting season.

Mr. Ryder: As I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 16 February at column 357, most applications for the farm woodland scheme submitted by then should receive approval in time for planting to go ahead this season. That remains our intention. In England, 311 applications had been approved by the end of February. This represents some 66 per cent. of the applications received in England by the end of January. Applications received later than mid-February may not be approved in time for planting this season, although I have given clear instructions that everything must be done to quicken up the process.

Veterinary Products Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to widen the criteria by which the veterinary products committee assesses products submitted for approval for a product licence.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The terms of references of the veterinary products committee are established under the Medicines Act 1968.

BSE-infected Cattle

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many carcasses of BSE-infected cattle have been buried in the United Kingdom; and what are the burial sites;

(2) what proportion of carcasses of cattle confirmed to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy are (a) buried, (b) incinerated and (c) disposed of by other means.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Some 1,300, or about one third of the carcasses of cattle compulsorily slaughtered, have been buried on licensed waste tips or on farm, with the approval of water and local authorities. The others have been incinerated.

Transmissible Mink Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any information on outbreaks of transmissible mink encephalopathy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Transmissible mink encephalopathy has not been reported in this country.

Veterinary Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to make it a statutory requirement to consider evidence of need before the granting of a product licence to a veterinary product.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The principles of the Medicines Act have stood the test of time.

Cetaceans

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on 1 December 1988, Official Report, column 860, if he will publish details of the monitoring of the incidental capture of cetaceans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is working on the detailed arrangements for a proposed monitoring scheme and, once this has been established, it is intended that the information obtained will be made available. It is envisaged that fishermen will be asked to provide details of the species taken, its size, the type of fishing practice involved, the location of the capture and whether the animal was released unharmed. It is hoped that this range of information will help us to develop a much clearer understanding of the incidental capture of marine mammals.

Meat Statistics

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much meat was produced in total from abattoirs in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In total, 2·3 million tonnes of carcase meat (beef, veal, sheep and pigmeat) was produced from abattoirs in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Sheep (Scrapie)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives to farmers on the regulations he makes about disposing of scrapie-infected sheep carcases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are no regulations specifically relating to the disposal of scrapie-infected sheep carcases. There is no evidence to suggest that scrapie is a risk to human health.

Goats' Milk

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether any testing is carried out to ensure hygiene standards of goats' milk; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has plans to improve the standard of hygiene of goats' milk; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the regulations that cover the hygiene standards of goats' milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The wording of the Food Act means that the detailed regulations which apply to cows' milk cannot be extended to cover goats' milk. Consultations on a new Food Bill have suggested that this should be remedied. Meanwhile, goats' milk is subject to the general provisions of the Food Act whereby all food (including drink) must be of the nature, substance and quality demanded by the purchaser, must be fit for human consumption, and must not be labelled in a false or misleading way. Local authorities are responsible for the enforcement of these provisions and for any testing required. In addition, the Ministry has issued a code of practice on the hygienic production of goats' milk.

Fruit (Cyanide)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what discussions he is having with Agriculture Ministers in other countries about the possibility of cyanide contaminated fruit being imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that cyanide contaminated fruit from Chile is not being sold in the United Kingdom.

(3) whether he is considering banning the import of Chilean fruit.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have obtained full information from the Governments of the United States and of Chile about the anonymous threats made to the United States embassy in Santiago relating to action against fruit for export, and the subsequent discovery by the United States authorities of non-lethal doses of cyanide in two grapes in a consignment exported from Chile.

There is no indication that fruit other than grapes is involved, and the threat appears to be restricted to supplies consigned to the United States. My Department and the Department of Health have alerted the port authorities and the trade in the United Kingdom so that produce arriving from Chile can be thoroughly examined. In view of the transport time supplies shipped from the period of the threat cannot yet have arrived in this country.

The Departments will be maintaining a close watch on the situation. In the light of the existing position, no further action is justified at present.

Fruit Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the type of fruit and quantities of each that have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last six years.

Mr. Ryder: The following is the information:

BSE-infected Cattle

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what criteria are applied when consideration is given to the method of disposal of carcases of cattle confirmed to be infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(2) why burial was chosen as an appropriate means of disposal of the carcases of cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The criteria applied are as for other notifiable diseases; the carcase must be disposed of in a way that does not pose a risk to animal or human health. Both incineration and burial are safe methods of disposing of carcases of cattle slaughtered because of suspected BSE. The method used depends on the facilities available in various parts of the country.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the inactivation of the agent causing bovine spongiform encephalopathy by burial of the carcase of the host.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The only part of a cattle carcase known to carry the BSE agent is the brain, which is removed for laboratory examination prior to the disposal of the carcase and subsequently incinerated. Research is under way to establish whether any other parts of the carcase carry the agent. The carcases are buried in such a way that no other species would be exposed to the agent should it be present.

Belgian Trawlers (Rule Infringements)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department has taken on reports by United Kingdom fishing vessel operators of breaches of Community fisheries policy and European Community rules by Belgian trawlers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The United Kingdom fishermen concerned have not produced any solid evidence to support their allegations against Belgian trawlers, nor are they substantiated by information available to the fisheries protection service. The United Kingdom co-operates closely with the Belgian authorities on fisheries control matters and information is regularly supplied to them. Such information has in the past been used by the Belgian authorities to institute proceedings against certain of their fishermen.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy in future that any reports by United Kingdom fishing vessel operators of breaches of Community fisheries policy and European Community rules by Belgian trawlers are taken up promptly with the Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It has always been my Department's practice to pass all properly substantiated information on offences of this kind to the vessel's member state and, if appropriate, to the Commission.

Belgian Fishing Fleet

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has had from fishermen and fishing organisations on the relationship between the viability and the quota of the Belgian fishing fleet; and what action he intends to take with the Commission.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations, the South West Fish Producers' Organisation and the Cornish Fish Producers' Organisation have made allegations that the level of activity by the Belgian fleet is higher than would be justified by its quotas. The organisations concerned have not, however, provided any concrete or substantiated evidence in support of their allegations. Nor are they supported by evidence available to the Department from the fisheries protection service.

Dutch and Belgian Fishing Vessels

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take at the Council of Ministers to prevent the Dutch Government from permitting vessels over 4,000 brake horsepower to derate their engines to below the 1800 brake horsepower cut-off which allows these vessels south of 55° north.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The derating of the engines of Dutch fishing vessels to enable them to fish in the North sea south of 55° north between 1 April and 30 June is a matter for the Dutch authorities and the Commission. We shall be following closely any developments.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring his Department has done in the past six months as to how successfully the Dutch and Belgian Governments are enforcing agreed European Community rules on fishing vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompsan: It is primarily the reponsibility of the Commission to monitor member states' compliance with Community rules and the Community inspectorate makes frequent visits to member states to examine their control and inspection arrangements. The United Kingdom continues to inspect Belgian and Dutch vessels, along with other nationalities, operating in British fishery limits. We also continue to press for improved enforcement and control of the common fisheries policy throughout the Community.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make it his policy not to grant a product licence for BST in the light of the trials at Winchester and Edinburgh showing that cows treated with bovine somatotropin fail to gain weight compared to control cows and that treated heifers lose weight;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to grant a product licence for BST in the light of the trials at Shinfield, Hurley and Newcastle showing that cows treated with bovine somatotropin lose body condition score;

(3) if he will make it his policy not to grant a product licence for BST in the light of the trials at Edinburgh, Shinfield and Hurley showing reproduction problems in treated cows;

(4) if he will make it his policy not to grant a product licence for BST in the light of evidence that treating cows with bovine somatotropin through regular non-therapeutic injections can leave tender swellings;

(5) if he will make it his policy not to grant a product licence for BST in the light of the fact that it is against the advice of the British Veterinary Association to inject cows daily for non-therapeutic purposes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The policy for deciding applications for product licences is established by the Medicines Act 1968. In the case of BST products both data being generated in field trials and all other pertinent data will be rigorously assessed against the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being done to determine whether BST can survive in the flesh of slaughtered cows which have been treated with BST.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Applicants for product licences for BST are, in accordance with the Medicines Act, obtaining or generating all data necessary for a thorough assessment, including data on possible residues.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the imposition in the Netherlands of a 28-day withdrawal period on BST treated cows before they are slaughtered; and to what extent a similar practice is followed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None. In the United Kingdom the withdrawal periods which may be applicable for a product such as BST are determined following a thorough assessment of the licence application and its supporting data.

Medicines (Monitoring)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions there are to monitor the environmental effects and regulate the use of products used under the Medicines Act 1968, which are not licensed, including products prescribed by veterinary practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Products not licensed under the Medicines Act may be prescribed by veterinary practitioners for particular animals under their care, and in accordance with their professional judgment. The wide range of products involved is not a specific category for environmental monitoring purposes.

North-East Drift Net Fishery

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of the review of the north-east drift net fishery as laid down in section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986 requires my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Scotland to prepare and submit to Parliament a report reviewing salmon netting off the coasts of north-east England and eastern Scotland. That report is to be submitted as soon as practicable after 7 November 1989, three years after the enactment of the 1986 Act. Work on the review is currently in hand and it would not be appropriate to pre-empt it.

Slaughterhouses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions a year his veterinary officers visit each slaughterhouse in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My veterinary officers visit non-export approved slaughterhouses once a year to monitor standards and give advice to enforcement authorities. They aim to make monthly visits to export approved plants and quarterly visits to licensed poultry slaughterhouses.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce legislation to ensure that landlords have no legal claim on payments made under the ESA scheme applied for by a tenant.

Mr. Ryder: No. ESA payments are made to the applicant who will usually be an owner-occupier or tenant of the land. Any questions relating to tenants' participation must be a matter for the parties concerned since they will depend on individual circumstances. I would advise tenants to seek professional advice if they are in any doubt about their position under a tenancy agreement.

"Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer"

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to distribute the leaflet entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer"; and to whom.

Mr. Ryder: The leaflets entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer" are being distributed by post to farmers in the vicinity of major nuclear installations. Copies are also being sent to local liaison committees at these sites and to representatives of national organisations such as the Milk Marketing Board, the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. Further copies are available on request from my Department's regional offices.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many leaflets entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer" he has had printed.

Mr. Ryder: Five thousand copies of the advisory leaflets entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer" have been printed.

Egg Producers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each egg producer who received assistance under his scheme to aid the egg industry; and how much was paid out in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Payments under the egg industry scheme were made to egg packers. The slaughter of hens scheme did involve payments to egg producers but it would not be appropriate to list their names and the amounts which they received.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep and in which months since April 1986, have been monitored for radioactivity in slaughterhouses in England.

Mr. Ryder: As promised in the Government's response to the Agriculture Committee's report, "Chernobyl: the Government's Reaction", we have been examining the feasibility of monitoring for radioactivity in English slaughterhouses. An initial pilot study was carried out in December 1988 involving the monitoring of 40 sheep carcases at one slaughterhouse. A more extensive trial is now under-way at six slaughterhouses, as part of which 314 sheep carcases were monitored in February and a further 442 had been monitored by 15 March.

Training

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of the present arrangements for agricultural and related training in the light of the period of considerable change in the industry.

Mr. MacGregor: Over the past 22 years the agricultural training board has made a most valuable contribution in developing training provision in the agricultural industry. I believe, however, that it is timely to consider on what lines the future role of the board might most appropriately develop, taking into account the changing patterns of employment and associated training needs in agriculture and related industries; the diversification of the range of training offered by the agricultural colleges; and the Government's plans for the reform of training set out in the White Papers Cms. 534 and 540. In the circumstances I have, with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, and with the agreement of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Employment and for Education and Science, decided to institute a review with the following terms of reference:

"To consider the future role of the Agricultural Training board (ATB) in meeting the agricultural and related training needs for the 1990s bearing in mind the Secretary of State for Employment's proposals on training in 'Employment for the 1990s', and the proposals of the Secretary of State for Scotland contained in 'Scottish Enterprise', and the resources and facilities available at agricultural colleges; and, from the basis of the existing Agricultural Training Board legislation, to make specific recommendations to Agriculture Ministers on the national and local organisation and structure most appropriate to meet those needs; and to report by Autumn 1989."

This review will be conducted by Mr. John Smith, a partner in Arthur Young who today becomes chairman elect of the agricultural training board. He will be assisted in his task by the following assessors:

Mr. J. S. Barber, Cavick House Farm, Wymondham, Norfolk
Mr. D. H. Wilkinson, Southdown Farm, Ringstead, Dorset
Mr. D. Rose, Principal, Barony College, Dumfries
Mr. T. Jones, Plas Gwyn, Llangyniew, Welshpool, Powys
Mr. A. G. Harris, Principal, Harper Adams College, Newport, Shropshire
Mr. P. Brown HMI, Staff Inspector for Agricultural Education (England).

DEFENCE

South Korea

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops there are in South Korea, and in what capacity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Forty-three members of Her Majesty's armed forces are currently located in the republic of Korea. A platoon of 34 men from the Hong Kong garrison contribute towards the United Nations honour guard and we have nine personnel in the headquarters of the Commonwealth liaison mission to the United Nations command.

Oman

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) under what agreement British troops are based in Oman; when it was initiated; and what is its duration;

(2) whether any memorandum of understanding exists between Her Majesty's Government and the Sultanate of Oman.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No British troops are based in Oman. A number of members of the United Kingdom armed forces are posted to Oman, as to other countries, as loan service personnel. The details of the arrangements under which this takes place are confidential between the two countries.

Low Flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flight by a jet aircraft over East Linton, East Lothian at 11.45 am on Monday 27 February; and if he will identify the type of aircraft involved and the base from which it was operating;

(2) if he will make a statement on the purpose, height, speed, home base, and type of aircraft which were involved in flights over Pencaifland at 11.30 am; 3.01 pm; and 3.26 pm on Wednesday 8 March.

Mr. Neubert: United Kingdom and other military aircraft are authorised as a matter of routine to carry out low level flying training in the area mentioned at heights no lower than 250 feet and at speeds normally not exceeding 450 knots. Aircraft may originate from a number of flying stations both in the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Exercise Red Lanyard

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 253, how many complaints in respect of low flying aircraft during Exercise Red Lanyard have been received to date; and at what locations.

Mr. Neubert: Nine complaints have been identified which are likely to have arisen from military aircraft activity connected with exercise Red Lanyard. They were received from members of the public in Watton, Wilby, Middleton, Monks Soham, West Winch, Stanground, Normans Cross, Lundy Green and Brockhampton.

Royal Military Police (Accountants)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the numbers and qualifications of Royal Military Police officers currently serving as specialist accountants;

(2) in how many cases each year since 1979 investigations by the Royal Military Police have required the services of a specialist accountant who is a serving officer with the Royal Military Police;

(3) how many Royal Military Police officers who are trained as specialist accountants are currently in post; and how many have been in post in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: Cases of suspected fraud are investigated by Royal Military Police (RMP) teams. The teams are composed of members of the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police and, for technical assistance in their investigations, of advisers seconded from the Royal Army Pay Corps. Two RAPC warrant officers are currently employed full time as specialist financial advisers to provide technical assistance. The first full-time specialist financial adviser was seconded to the RMP in 1983. A second specialist was seconded in 1986.

Before 1983 all RAPC warrant officers could be called upon to assist with a SIB RMP investigation. In order to make best use of the experience and technical expertise gained in this type of investigation it was decided to second a warrant officer to the RMP as a full-time member of their SIB teams.

Since 1983, the financial advisers have handled 121 cases of false accounting, with five cases under investigation.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in how many cases each year since 1979 investigations by the Royal Military Police have required the assistance of specialist accountants who are (a) civilians, (b) civil servants, (c) officers serving with the ministry of defence police, (d) officers of the metropolitan police and (e) officers of other forces.

Mr. Neubert: None. We do, however, make use of the expertise of the Royal Army Pay Corps.

Warrant Officer Newbery

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make public the Royal Military Police report on Warrant Officer Newbery which led to him being charged with false accounting in 1986 and being subsequently acquitted.

Mr. Neubert: No. It is not the practice to make public confidential reports of this nature.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the dates since 1 January 1988 on which nuclear weapons tests have been carried out on behalf of the United Kingdom; and, in each case, whether these tests were carried out independently, or with the assistance of another country.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policy considerations underline his decision not to make available to Parliament details of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation deliberations on the plans for modernisation for short-range nuclear weapons; and to what extent he takes into account their publication in other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation member states.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A communiqué is issued, following all NATO meetings, which is made available to the public. Copies are placed in the Library of the House. However, the details of the ministerial discussions and documentation for these meetings is, and should remain, confidential.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if nuclear submarines personnel have access to a record of their dose rates on leaving service with the nuclear submarine fleet or the armed services;

(2) what levels of radiation are (a) received by nuclear submarine personnel and (b) reported by the Central Electricity Generating Board amongst classified persons working in nuclear power stations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The ionising radiation doses accrued by Royal Navy nuclear submarine personnel during the operation of the submarines are in general very small, being for the most part lower than those received by members of the public, who are exposed to natural cosmic and terrestrial radiation from which submariners are shielded. The majority of nuclear submarine personnel are thus not categorised as radiation workers.

Personnel who require regular access to designated radiation areas are categorised as radiation workers and subject to dosimetric assessment. Since 1986 such personnel have been isssued, on leaving the Royal Navy, with a termination record of the total dose which they have received. Before 1986, dose records were available to the individual on request. The average whole body dose received by Royal Navy submarine personnel categorised as radiation workers during 1988 was 1·5 milliseiverts.

I understand that the average radiation dose received by classified persons working in the Central Electricity Generating Board's nuclear power stations in 1987 was 0·7 milliseiverts (the 1988 figure is not yet available).

The radiation exposure limit for classified persons, set by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, is 50 milliseiverts per annum.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the upper quartile range of maximum radiation dose rates sustained by nuclear submarine personnel in the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Figures for the radiation doses sustained by nuclear submarine personnel are not easily broken down into quartiles. The following table gives the cumulative total dose, the average individual dose and a breakdown of numbers of personnel by dose received for each of the last five years.

Year	Cumulative dose (man Seiverts)	Number of personnel in dose ranges						Average individual dose (mSv)
		0-15 mSv	15-20 mSv	20-30 mSv	30-40 mSv	40-50 mSv	Over 50 mSv
1988	2·1	1,398	4	0	0	0	0	1·50
1987	2·6	1,307	19	12	4	0	0	1·90
1986	3·1	945	19	18	16	1	0	3·07
1985	2·9	905	18	16	10	3	0	3·05
1984	2·8	777	24	13	6	0	0	3·46

Note: mSv = milliseivert.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of radioactivity his Department judges as significant in regard to the discharge of radioactive materials from nuclear submarines into the sea; and what type of materials are involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Navy submarines do not discharge radioactivity at sea under normal circumstances. The significance of such discharges depends upon their potential effect. In determining what levels are acceptable, therefore, the Royal Navy takes into account the recommendations of the International Commission on radiological protection regarding dose. The radioactive isotope of most significance in discharges from Royal Navy submarines would be cobalt 60.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department knows either in which foreign ports Britain's nuclear submarines may berth, or into whose territorial waters those submarines may enter.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Whenever a Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarine wishes to visit a foreign port, a request is made to the authorities of the country concerned.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the consequences of an accident involving the nuclear armed warheads of the Polaris class of submarine boats in berth, and when at sea nearby the coastline, with regard to the guidelines recently published by the Health and Safety Executive entitled "Tolerability of Risk".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The consequences of a Polaris nuclear weapon accident have been thoroughly examined. The hazard from such an accident would be from contamination by nuclear material which might be dispersed by a fire or ignition of conventional explosives. The risks of such an accident occurring are extremely small, and are assessed as consistent with the HSE guidelines on the tolerability of risk, although these were drawn up with nuclear power stations rather than weapons in mind. Plans do, however, exist to deal with such an accident.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department regards nuclear submarine personnel as equivalent to classified persons, as specified by the Ionising Radiations Regulations; and what measures are implemented to monitor and safeguard the health of such submariners, and to maintain the radiation dose exposure records of such personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Most nuclear-powered submarine personnel are not categorised as radiation workers. Of those who are, a proportion are designated as classified persons using criteria laid down in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985. Radiation protection advisers are appointed, and dedicated staff qualified in radiation protection are provided in each nuclear-powered submarine and in their operating bases. Where required, dosimetric assessments are made by the defence radiological protection service.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if dose rate records for submariners working aboard nuclear submarines are maintained on a national register; and if those records are transferred to, or available to, future employers of such personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A national register of radiation workers is currently being produced within the United Kingdom. The doses accrued by nuclear submarine personnel will be included within the register unless the individual concerned chooses not to have his name entered. The requirements for termination records laid down in the Ionising Radiations Regulations are complied with, and for any radiation worker a summary of the dose received can be provided.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has knowledge of any medical disorders associated with radiation dose uptake amongst past and present submarine service personnel or their offspring.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has no knowledge of any medical disorders arising from the exposure of RN nuclear submarine personnel to radiation.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average whole body radiation dose equivalent receipt or uptake of submariners aboard a nuclear submarine during an average tour of duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average radiation dose per annum for those submarine personnel designated as radiation workers is included within the breakdown of dose statistics which I gave earlier today. The average tour of duty with an individual submarine is about two years. The majority of submarine personnel, on the basis of their type of employment and access to radiation areas, are not designated as radiation workers and are not, therefore, subject to dosimetric assessment.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department has identified and evaluated the worst credible nuclear accident in the operation of its nuclear powered submarine fleet, its predicted frequency, and the severity of its consequences both in terms of an individual positioned at each operational dockyard station perimeter and, separately, for nearby populations beyond that perimeter;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the consequences of an accident involving the nuclear powered reactor of a nuclear submarine in berth, at either a refit dockyard, at Z-berth, or any other port of call, with regard to the guidelines recently published by the Health and Safety Executive entitled "Tolerability of Risk."

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Accident probabilities and consequences for nuclear-powered submarine reactor accidents have long been identified and evaluated. These predictions have subsequently been compared with the Health and Safety Executive guidelines on the tolerability of risk, and are consistent with these. The predictions are used in the formulation of accident response plans for the berths in question, in consultation with local civil authorities.

Dolls' Houses (Synthetic Foods)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been injured or killed by consuming synthetic foodstuffs for use in dolls' houses in each of the past five years; and if he was consulted over the EEC directive on the issue.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 16 March 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

None. This fact, coupled with the fact that they are usually so small as to be unlikely to mislead a young child into thinking that they are food, has enabled me to exempt them from the proposed regulations, which I announced in a written answer on 14 March to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) at column 128.

Governments of all member states were, of course, consulted during the preparation of the EC Dangerous Imitations Directive which the Council of Ministers adopted on 25 June 1987. It rightly outlaws products which imitate food or drink and thereby pose a hazard to the public. Products which do not pose a hazard are not banned by the directive.

Kidney Patients

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new patients per million population in England have received (a) haemodialysis, (b) continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis each year since 1980, and how many that is in absolute numbers;

(2) if he will show for 1988 dialysis in new patients per million population for the English regional health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: Information about new patients accepted for the treatment of end stage renal failure in England is not available in the precise form requested.

I understand that the number of new patients in England accepted for treatment since 1980 is as follows:

Year	Number of new patients	Per million population
1980	1,072	23
1981	1,177	25

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a table showing the amount of capital and special revenue funds allocated to each regional health authority for (i) 1988-89 and (ii) proposed for 1989-90 for the development and operation of regional secure psychiatric and interim secure facilities and the total amounts allocated for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Revenue and capital allocations in 1988-89 and initial revenue allocations for 1989-90, for regional secure units (RSU) are shown in table 1. We plan to allocate an additional £0·355 million revenue and £1·037 million capital for further RSU developments during the course of the year.

Total capital allocations for RSUs from 1978-79 to 1987-88 are shown in table 2. The total initial revenue allocation in 1978-79 was £6·5 million. It has increased in real terms as regions have opened more RSU beds and in 1987-88 at the initial allocation stage stood at £15·5 millions.

Surgery Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average National Health Service costs of (a) an appendectomy, (b) a hernia operation, (c) a hysterectomy, (d) duodenal ulcer treatment, (e) a cataract removal, (f) a tonsillectomy, (g) a slipped disc repair, (h) gall bladder removal, (i) a varicose veins operation, (j) a bunion removal, (k) a knee cartilage operation, (l) breast lump removal, (m) a hip replacement, (n) a prostate removal, (o) a nasal polyp removal, (p) a prolapse repair and (q) a bowel resection.

Mr. Freeman: Cost estimates are not available for all of these procedures. Broad estimates of the costs of the following procedures have been made (1988-89 prices):

Hernia operation	730
Hysterectomy	1,350
Cataract removal	790
Tonsillectomy (tonsils and adenoids)	370
Hip replacement	2,500

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year 1979 to 1989 the local authorities which maintain secure units for the purpose of restricting the liberty of children in care and within each authority give (a) the type of unit provided, (b) the number of places available, (c) the number of places filled by children from outside the authority and (d) the number of places filled by children from within the authority.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 March 1989]: We do not have information in the form requested for the full period. The table gives details of approved secure units as at 31 December 1988. Details of the use made of each unit by local authorities are given in "Children Accommodated In Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March" for the years 1984 to 1987. Copies are available in the Library. Information on children in secure accommodation was not collected centrally prior to 1984.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide the total number of children in care in each local authority for each year 1979 to 1989 and list the proportion of those in care who were placed in approved secure accommodation maintained (a) by the authority and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 March 1989]: The number of children in care in each authority at 31 March is published annually in "Children in Care of Local Authorities During the Year Ending 31 March, England" for 1979-87.

The information requested for secure accommodation is not readily available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, the latest available information on the total number of children in approved secure accommodation at 31 March (including some who are not in care) is published annually in "Children Accommodated in Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March, England" for 1984-87.

Copies of these publications are availible in the Library.

No information on children in secure accommodation was collected prior to 1984; the current format of collection and publication was introduced in 1985.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of approved secure places were filled by (a) juvenile offenders, (b) young persons who have been detained under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and (c) children in care who have not committed any offence for each year from 1979 to 1989; and if he will make a statement on the availability of such places.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 March 1989]: We do not collect information centrally in the form requested. However, the details available of the legal status of children in approved secure units are given in "Children Accommodated in Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March 1987, England" for 1984-87. Copies are available in the Library. Information on children in secure accommodation was not collected centrally prior to 1984.

The provision of secure accommodation is the statutory responsibility of local authorities. There were 294 places available in 38 secure units on 31 December 1988; in addition, five secure units, providing 46 places, were temporarily closed on that date because of building work.

Because secure accommodation is a specialised resource there is, at times, considerable pressure on available places. The Department is always ready to consider applications from local authorities for grant aid towards the costs of providing new secure units and renovating and extending existing units.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to local authorities and directly to the Department of Health for the provision of secure accommodation in each year from 1979 to 1988; and what is the estimated cost for the years 1989 to 1991.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 March 1989]: We do not hold centrally information about the revenue cost to local authorities of providing secure accommodation.

Grant-aid may be made available by the Department to local authorities to meet the capital costs of providing secure accommodation and to improve security aspects of existing units. The table provides the available information:

Cot Deaths

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies have died in each of the last five years through cot death syndrome; and whether the totals reveal any statistically significant features relating to regions, proximity to strong electro-magnetic fields or any other specifically identifiable feature common to such tragedies.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The following figures for the years 1983-87 (the latest available) show for each regional health authority and for Wales the number of deaths and the death rate for (a) deaths where sudden infant death or a similar term was given as the underlying cause; (b) deaths where sudden infant death or a similar term was mentioned on the death certificate although not as the underlying cause; and (c) for comparison, all infant deaths.

The figures illustrate what has long been known—that regional variations exist. We are aware of no statistically significant evidence that links deaths from sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), or accounts for its geographical variations, with any specific factor. A 1988 report on infant mortality in England prepared for the chief medical officer—a copy of which was placed in the Library—noted that there has been a shift in diagnostic classification towards certifying as SIDS deaths which would previously have been assigned to diseases of the respiratory system. The recent Social Services Select Committee report on perinatal, neonatal and infant mortality recommends further research into the causes of infant deaths, particularly those attributed to SIDS. The Government will be responding shortly.

General Practitioners (Contracts)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the latest date on which general practitioner principals received his letter on the proposed new contract; by what date they are required to respond; what previous notice had been given of the proposals under consideration; what agreement there was on the confidentiality of negotiations between himself and the General Medical Services Committee; and whether this agreement was breached.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Despatch to all GPs of my proposals for changing the GP's term of service and remuneration system, set out in the booklet "A New Contract", commenced on 23 February 1989. I have no reason to believe that the postal authorities were unable to deliver within a few days of that date. The purpose of the document was to inform GPs of the Goverment's plans. No specific response was called for because the contents were and continue to be the subject of consultation with the GP's representatives, the General Medical Services Committee (GMSC), although I am pleased to say that many GPs are using the "helpline" service we set up.

Notice of the proposals was given in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm 249) published in November 1987, which announced the Government's plans for improving the primary health care services. "A New Contract" is the culmination of a year's detailed consultation with the GMSC.

It was agreed with the GMSC that consultation should proceed on a confidential basis on the understanding that either party could terminate the arrangement by giving the other due notice. The GMSC chose to bring the confidentiality arrangement to an end on 16 February and I was informed of this intention on 9 February by the chairman of the GMSC.

Organ Transplants

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidneys, hearts, livers and other organs have been transplanted each year since 1980; and what proportion of each group of transplant patients survive for longer than one year.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the number of organs transplanted in the years 1980 to 1987 was provided in my reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 22 December 1988 at columns 397-98. I announced provisional figures for 1988 during the Adjournment debate on transplant surgery on 21 February at column 976.

My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Health provided information on survival rates following transplant in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 19 December at columns 130-31.

Ethnic Minority Health

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made towards developing a central information resource unit for ethnic minority health following the management seminar organised by his Department on 4 November 1987.

Mr. Mellor: The report "Action not Words" by a National Association of Health Authorities working party, published in November 1988, proposed the creation of a central resource unit on ethnic minority health issues.

As I said in my reply on 9 February to the hon. Members for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) and for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) at column 800, we needed to consider whether establishing a separate unit was the best way forward. Officials in the Department are exploring, with a number of organisations, ways of setting up an effective system for exchange of information on ethnic minority health issues.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what variations his Department is aware of in the level of costs of prescriptions between doctors' surgeries.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of substantial variations in the prescribing costs of practices. For example, about 10 per cent. of practices prescribe at a level of 25 per cent. or more above the average for a practice in their FPC area. We have published information on the variation between FPCs in cost per head of prescriptions and I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 16 March.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the London borough of Hillingdon concerning the importation of hazardous waste through London Heathrow airport and the environmental health implications of the carriage of dangerous substances by air; if he will review the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A letter from the chief executive of the London borough of Hillingdon has been received. Copies were sent also to my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Secretary of State for Transport and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to a number of hon. Friends and hon. Members and to a number of local authorities and other organisations. A reply will be sent to the chief executive as soon as is practicable and I shall write to my hon. Friend at the same time.

Child Protection Services

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report by the social services inspectorate on child protection services in the London borough of Southwark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In response to concern about the handling of child protection cases in Southwark, the Department's social services inspectorate has examined the child protection services and reported its findings to me. Copies of the report are now available in the Library.

The inspection revealed a number of features which require attention. The number of children registered is distorted by the present cumbersome registration system, but even if efficient registration systems were operated there would still be a large number of children on the register.

It is always unacceptable for child protection cases to be without social work intervention when they have been assessed as needing it, and the number of such cases in Southwark is disturbingly high.

However, on the brighter side, action taken in one area of the borough has been effective in reducing the number of unallocated cases, and this action must be repeated elsewhere if this authority is to deserve public confidence in a crucial area of its operations.

Overall, there was considerable activity on child protection cases but the quality of the social work done needs to be improved to enable sound judgments to be made on cases.

It is clear that determined management action is needed on a number of fronts to ensure that the position improves. In view of this I am asking SSI to agree a plan of action with Southwark Council and to monitor progress closely.

Southwark council has asked Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham area review committee to establish an independent inquiry into the handling of the case of Doreen Mason. That inquiry is being chaired by an independent lawyer. I understand that the inquiry should be completed by the early summer and that the outcome will be made public. I will then determine whether further action is needed on my part.

Expenditure

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the definitions for the purposes of statistics collection of the national United Kingdom expenditure on health care provision (a) for total public expenditure on health services, (b) for private sector health care provision and (c) for voluntary sector health care provision.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom national accounts, prepared by the Central Statistical Office, define the components of net public expenditure on health care as follows:

(a) Total final consumption on the NHS.
(b) Public sector gross domestic fixed capital formation on health.
(c) Current grants to the personal sector.
(d) Current grants abroad.
(e) Capital grants to the private sector.

Private expenditure on health is defined as the sum of:

(f) Payments to the NHS, ie "charges".
(g) Consumers' expenditure on medicines.
(h) Consumers' expenditure on private medical insurance.
(i) Consumers' expenditure on spectacles.
(j) Consumers' expenditure on medication.
(k) Private sector gross domestic fixed capital formation.

The voluntary sector is not separately identified in the United Kingdom national accounts.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the national United Kingdom expenditure on voluntary sector health care provision in money terms, for the latest 10 financial years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure by the voluntary sector on health care provision is not separately identified in the United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total national United Kingdom expenditure on private sector health care provision from National Health Service funds in money terms, for the latest 10 financial years for which figures are available; and whether this includes the voluntary sector.

Mr. Freeman: None. NHS funded health care is, by definition, NHS health care.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures for, or an estimate of, the amount of double counting of expenditure on health care provision when amounts are aggregated for national United Kingdom statistics on total national expenditure on health.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware of any double counting either in the health expenditure figures for England which this Department prepares or in the summary figures for the United Kingdom which are prepared by the Central Statistical Office for the United Kingdom national accounts.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the national United Kingdom expenditure on voluntary sector health care provision from National Health Service funds in money terms, for the latest 10 financial years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office do not separately identify voluntary health care provision from National Health Service funds.

Registered Homes Tribunal

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the chairs of the registered homes tribunal and (b) the wing members and their occupations.

Mr. Mellor: A list giving the Lord Chancellor's panel of chairmen has been placed in the Library.

A separate list giving the Lord President's panel of members has also been placed in the Library.

European Regional Development Fund (Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will give an assurance of the availability of funding from central Government for projects eligible for funding under objective 2 of the European regional development fund, in Stockport;

(2) what projects he has identified as eligible for funding from the European regional development fund, in Stockport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Stockport's eligibility for European regional development fund assistance, as part of Greater Manchester county, is subject to the Commission's confirmation of its provisional objective 2 list. My Department and the Department of the Environment will consider with the local authorities and other interests concerned what projects should be proposed to the Commission for support from the ERDF, and the manner in which it will be sought. Decisions on use of the fund rest with the Commission. Central Government funding will depend upon the nature of the projects eventually agreed.

Tanzania

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what the total level of imports into the European Community from Tanzania has been for each of the last 10 years at constant 1987 prices; and what the level of exports from the European Community to Tanzania has been for each of the last 10 years at constant 1987 prices;

Mr. Alan Clark: Data are not available at constant prices. The information at current prices is in the following table:

Brewing Industry (Report)

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he now expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the brewing industry to be published.

Mr. Maude: The Government have today published and laid in both Houses copies of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer. The MMC's examination, conducted over two and a half years, has been thorough and comprehensive. We welcome it.

The MMC has found that there is a complex monopoly situation in the supply of beer. This relates to the brewers' relationship with the on-licensed, "tied" premises they own —both managed and tenanted—and the offering of low-interest loans to the "free" trade. The MMC concludes that this complex monopoly restricts competition at all levels, against the public interest.

Currently the brewers restrict competition in two main ways. First, they restrict the supply of drinks by competing brewers and wholesalers to the on-licensed premises they own. The six big brewers produce three quarters of all beer brewed in the United Kingdom and own 74 per cent. of all tied houses. Second, the brewers have effectively captured about half of the "free houses" by offering preferential and low-interest loans, which then tie those outlets to selling the brewers' products. The present system severely limits the opportunities for an independent wholesaling sector to prosper. The result is that both wholesale and retail prices are higher than they need to be.

The MMC believes that lack of competition has resulted in a number of detriments. The main ones are:

—the price of a pint of beer in a public house has risen too fast in the last few years;
—the high price of lager is not justified by the cost of producing it;
—the variation in wholesale prices between regions of the country is excessive;
—consumer choice is restricted because one brewer does not usually allow another brewer's beer to be sold in the outlets which he owns: this restriction often happens in loan-tied outlets as well;
—consumer choice is further restricted because of brewers' efforts to ensure that their own brands of cider and soft drinks are sold in their outlets;
—tenants are unable to play a full part in meeting consumer preferences, both because of the tie and because the tenant's bargaining position is so much weaker than his landlord's; and —independent manufacturers and wholesalers of beer and other drinks are allowed only limited access to the on-licensed market.

The MMC believes that structural changes are needed to secure a more competitive regime. Its recommendations include:

—a ceiling of 2,000 on the number of on-licensed premises which any brewer may own;
—no new tied loans;
—no restrictions on future use, or product ties, when on-licensed premises are sold;
—tied tenants to be brought within the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954;
—tied tenants to be free to sell at least one "guest" draught beer;
—tied tenants to be free to buy non-alcohol or low alcohol beers, wines, spirits, ciders, soft drinks and mineral waters from the most competitive suppliers; —brewers to publish and adhere to wholesale price lists.

These recommendations point very much in the right direction. They will preserve the good features of the present system. They should create more opportunities for small brewers. They should allow much stronger development of an independent wholesaling sector. They should provide more choice for publicans in the way they finance and run their businesses. And, not least, they should provide a much wider choice for consumers in the range of licensed premises available, and in the range of drinks on sale. This extra competition should benefit prices.

My right hon. and noble Friend has considered the report in full and is minded to implement these recommendations. His first step will be to hold discussions with the EC and he has written to Sir Leon Brittan today.

We welcome the European Commission review, announced last week, into the competitive situation in the EC wide market for beer. The MMC's findings and conclusions will clearly serve as a major input into the review.

Ivory

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each of the last three years imports, by value and volume and by country of origin, of ivory and ivory products.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is given in the following tables. Data on unworked ivory are not available before 1988.

Tropical Forestry Management

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to be able to make a statement on the scheme proposed by the Timber Trade Federation for an import surcharge to finance tropical forestry management through the International Tropical Timber Organisation.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposal for an import levy which has been put forward by the timber trades in the Netherlands and the United Kingdom has a number of implications, including European Community and GATT. We are considering these within the context of our overall approach to the problem of the depletion of the rain forests.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number and category of employees in post at the national engineering laboratory, East Kilbride at May 1988 and February 1989.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The number and category of employees in post at the national engineering laboratory, East Kilbride at 31 May 1988 and 28 February 1989 are:

	31 May 1988	28 February 1989
Science and technical	355½	332
Industrial	154	145
Other (administrative)	109	102
Total	618½	579

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 15 March 1989]: Work connected with the EC involves a great many staff in the Department since the development of the single European market influences a large and increasing proportion of the DTI's work. It is not possible except at disproportionate cost to provide disaggregated figures in the form requested.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Sex Education

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the scope of the very restricted circumstances referred to in the guidelines in his Department's document circular No. 11/87 entitled "Sex Education at School", page 197, paragraph 20(i).

Mr. Butcher: Section 6 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 provides that it is not a criminal offence for a man or boy to have sexual intercourse with a girl under the age of 16 in the following circumstances:

where he believes that she is over 16 and that he is legally married to her, although the marriage is in fact null under section 2 of the Marriage Act 1949 by reason of her age; in the case of a man or boy under the age of 24 who has not previously been charged with such an offence, if he believes on reasonable grounds that the girl is 16 or older.

Teachers

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department, for each year since 1986, regarding the number and proportion of all recruits to teaching in maintained schools who were re-entrant qualified teachers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what number and proportion of all recruits to teaching in maintained schools in each year 1985 to 1988 were re-entrant qualified teachers; whether there is any significant difference in these proportions between the primary and secondary sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Estimates of entrants and re-entrants to teaching are derived from the database of teacher records, maintained by the Department to administer the teachers' superannuation scheme. The latest information available relates to the year ending March 1986. The figures for England for that and the previous year are:

	Year ending March
	1985	1986
Re-entrants to maintained nursery and primary schools
number	6,890	7,670
as a percentage of all entrants to these schools	65 per cent.	63 per cent.
Re-entrants to maintained secondary schools
number	6,210	6,480
as a percentage of all entrants to these schools	45 per cent.	47 per cent.
Re-entrants to all maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools
number	13,100	14,150
as a percentage of all entrants to these schools	53 per cent.	55 per cent.

The higher proportion of re-entrants to nursery and primary schools reflects in part the greater number of women teachers in these compared to secondary schools.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department regarding the subject qualifications of qualified teachers returning to employment in maintained schools in recent years; whether any trends are discernible in the numbers of returners in shortage subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Estimates of re-entrants to teaching are derived from the database of teacher records, maintained by the Department to administer the teachers' superannuation scheme. This database contains information on the degree subjects of graduate teachers, but not on the subjects of other qualifications including initial or in-service teacher training. The latest information relates to the year ending March 1986. The figures for re-entrants to maintained secondary schools in England in that year are:

	Number
All re-entrants to maintained secondary schools	6,480
Graduate re-entrants	3,420
Of which, number whose degree subject is:
Mathematics	240
Physics	110
Other sciences	530
Geography	210
Economics and other social sciences	270
English	510
History	280
Modern languages	420
Other subjects	850
Non-graduate re-entrants	3,070

With regard to the shortage subjects, the number of re-entrant mathematics and physics graduates in the previous year (ending March 1985) were 200 and 110 respectively. No inferences about the number of re-entrants with CDT qualifications are possible from these data, because very few of these qualifications will be in the form of degrees.

Inner London (Administration)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total estimated administrative costs of education for each of the inner London boroughs for the year 1991 as estimated by the borough's development plans; and how many administrative posts within education in each inner London borough will attract a salary of over £30,000.

Mrs. Rumbold: The development plans of most of the inner London councils do not separately identify the administrative costs of running their education services from April 1990; this is a matter that will be raised by the Department in the context of discussions with each council. Nor do the development plans contain information on salary levels.

City Technology College, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to establish a city technology college in Lambeth.

Mr. Butcher: We have received no proposals as yet from sponsors wishing to establish a city technology college in Lambeth. However, I understand that the Philip and Pauline Harris trust has approached the London borough of Croydon about the establishment of a city technology college in the premises of the Sylvan high school; that Croydon is considering publishing proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 to close the school to enable it to do so; and that, subject to my right hon. Friend approving those proposals, the city technology college's catchment area would include parts of Lambeth.

Inner London (Teacher Shortage)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what communications he has received from the governors of Loughborough junior school, London SW9; and what reply he has sent on the subject of teacher shortages in inner London.

Mr. Butcher: The Department has received a letter from the chair of governors of Loughborough JMI school about the shortage of teachers at the school. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the Department's reply.

Teachers (Pensions)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to make the pensions payable to the widowers of women teachers the equal of those payable to the widows of men teachers with the same service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Widowers' benefits were introduced into the teachers' superannuation scheme with effect from 6 April 1988 and service from that date counts automatically for that purpose. Subsequent actuarial valuations of the scheme will take the cost of such benefits into account in determining the normal contribution rate. Women teachers can elect to cover service before 6 April 1988 on terms better than those offered to men teachers in similar circumstances in 1972.

Eastern Amazonia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research he is funding in British universities on the consequences for the physics of the world climate of forest-burning, dam building and cattle-ranch clearing in eastern Amazonia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Research funded by the NERC on global climate change is already extensive and the additional resources announced will enable increased activity to be undertaken. Universities may also undertake relevant research within the substantial general funds put at their disposal by the Universities Funding Council.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide calculations on the cost and savings of the top-up loans scheme, as illustrated in annex E of the White Paper in respect of (a) net change in grant, (b) net change in benefits, (c) gross loan outlay, (d) loan repayments and (e) public sector borrowing requirement effect for each of the years from 1990 to 2027, as in annex E of Cm 520, on the basis of (a) 90 per cent. take-up and (b) 100 per cent. take-up of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The costs and savings arising from top-up loans, calculated on the assumptions used in Cm 520, are shown below for the different take-up levels specified. Also shown, for comparison, is the effect of the 80 per cent. take-up level assumed in Cm 520.

Travellers' Children

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of travellers' children per local education authority as returned by them on form 510F (1989—190) appendix 2.

Mr. Butcher: The information received from the local education authorities is incomplete. I am writing to the hon. Member.

"Standards in Education 1987-88"

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether copies of Her Majesty's inspector's report, "Standards in Education 1987-88," will be made freely available at the stand taken by him at the Ideal Home exhibition.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes.

Under-fives

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his announcement on 18 January, Official Report, column 401, when he intends to give details of the membership and terms of reference of the committee inquiring into the content of the educational experience of under-fives.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following have agreed to become members of the committee which is to be established under my chairmanship.

Ms. Lesley Abbott, Principal Lecturer in Primary Education, Manchester Polytechnic.

Professor Neville Bennett, Professor of Primary Education, University of Exeter.

Mr. Peter Gedling, Chief Education Officer, Dorset.

Mrs. Rose Johnson, Headteacher, Brentfield Primary School, Brent.

Dr. Christine Pascal, Principal Lecturer in Primary Education, Worcester College of Higher Education.

Mrs. Gillian Pugh, Head of Under Fives Unit, National Children's Bureau.

Mrs. Ann Sharp, Adviser (Early Years), Sheffield Local Education Authority.

Mrs. Jennie Shaw, Chairman, Pre-school Playgroups Association.

The Committee's terms of reference are:

To consider the quality of the educational experience which should be offered to 3- and 4-year-olds, with particular reference to content, continuity and progression in learning, having regard to the requirements of the national curriculum and taking account of the Government's expenditure plans.

To take into account in this consideration:

(a) the diversity of needs and of types of provision;

(b) demographic and social factors;

(c) the nature of training for teachers and other professional staff involved in the education of children under five.

Student Grants

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish details of student grants for the 1989-90 academic year.

Mr. Jackson: I announced on 16 December, Official Report, column 755, that the main rates of student grant would be increased by 5 per cent. for students studying outside London and by 9·3 per cent. for London students. I am publishing the supplementary allowances today; details have been placed in the Library. Most will rise by 5 per cent. in line with the main rates of grant, but allowances for students with dependent children will be increased on average by 10 per cent. There will be some minor modifications to the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations. These include the reclassification of some countries for the purpose of determining the level of grant for study abroad, and some relaxation of the rules relating to parental contributions for married students and students who have been in care.

WALES

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names, locations and areas of woodland grant scheme applications in excess of 100 hectares submitted since the start of the scheme in Wales, showing for which of these an environmental assessment has been requested by the Forestry Commission; and if he will give reasons why environmental assessment has not been requested for any remaining applications.

Mr. Peter Walker: There have been two applications under the woodland grant scheme for more than 100 hectares of new planting in Wales. They are listed as follows. An environmental assessment was not requested for these applications as they did not meet the criteria specified in the Forestry Commission booklet "Environmental Assessment of Afforestation Projects", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Name	County	Total Area (ha)	Planting Area (ha)
Maesllymystyn	Powys	119	116
Gesail Ddu	Powys	148	134

Community Health Councils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of representation he has received from the Arfon-Dwyfor community health council, he will revise his statement of 3 March on the closure of ysbyty Madog, that there was no opposition to closure from the community health council; and if he will now withdraw and reconsider his ratification for that closure proposal.

Mr. Peter Walker: Welsh Office officials have written to the Secretary of Arfon-Dwyfor community health council to explain that the reference in the letter of 3 March was to direct objections to myself following the announcement of the one-month appeal period after Gwynedd health authority's meeting on 25 April 1988. I was aware of the representations which the Arfon-Dwyfor community health council made to the health authority and copied to me on 7 March 1988. I took account of them before reaching my decision. I therefore do not consider that I should withdraw my approval of the proposal to close Madog memorial hospital in the light of the representations of the Arfon-Dwyfor community health council.

General Practitioners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each health authority area in Wales how many general practitioners are men and how many are women.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information, which is only available by family practitioner committee areas, is given in the following table:

Unrestricted principals as at 1 October 1987

	Male	Female
Clwyd	194	20
Dyfed	175	30
Gwent	195	45
Gwynedd	123	20
Mid Glamorgan	252	39
Powys	66	9
South Glamorgan	165	60
West Glamorgan	165	29

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what would be the totals of unemployed in the area covered by the valleys programme for the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92, if calculated on the assumption of the continuation of the reduction in the totals from 1984 to the date of the publication of the programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total numbers of unemployed claimants in the valleys programme area fell by 21 per cent. from 45,199 in May 1984 to 35,675 in May 1988.

It is not the Government's policy to forecast unemployment levels. However, the hon. Gentleman will be pleased to note that between May 1988 and February 1989 numbers of unemployed claimants in the valleys fell by 5,863 to 29,812—a fall in the first nine months of the valleys programme—considerably more than double the average annual fall in the preceding four years.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what would have been the reduction in the average bill of the Welsh domestic water consumer in each of the past five years had the sum of £460 million, and its equivalent in real terms, been written off the debt of the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: The question is hypothetical.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all Forestry Commission woodlands in the geographical county of Glamorgan, stating for each woodland its acreage and grid reference.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 9 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally and could not be provided in the form requested except at disproportionate cost.

Sea Pollution

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of sewage outfalls to the sea in the Welsh water authority; and, of these, how many include primary treatment works.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 14 March 1989]: The current information on sewage outfalls to the sea in the Welsh water authority area is as follows:

Level of treatment	Number of outfalls
None	90
Tidal storage	23
Preliminary—Screened and/or macerated	53
Primary	29
Secondary	61
Total	256

The Welsh water authority continues to pursue a policy of improving the treatment and disposal of sewage so as to meet the quality objectives of the receiving water. Since 1979 some 10 untreated discharges have been abandoned and a further five replaced by outfalls with preliminary treatment. One new outfall with secondary treatment has been constructed. These figures do not include work which has upgraded existing treated outfalls to a satisfactory standard. Since 1981-82 the authority advises that capital expenditure of over £21·5 million (at 1988 prices) has been undertaken in respect of work to sea outfalls and sewage treatment works discharging to tidal waters.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 9 February, Official Report, column 769, if he will make a further statement on the outcome of follow-up discussions with the Medical Research Council over radioactive waste from radon source materials at Barton-Le-Clay, Bedfordshire.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Medical Research Council has provided Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution with extensive information about its wartime operations at Barton-Le-Clay.

In 1939, the council transferred its production of medical radon sources from London to Barton in the Clay, Bedfordshire. It ceased production in 1948, transferred the source material to the Ministry of Supply at Amersham and checked for any remaining radioactive waste. The premises were then handed back to the original owner.

HMIP has carried out a thorough inspection of the area and is satisfied that it is safe.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 9 February, Official Report, column 769, on United Kingdom generated toxic waste exports, if he will initiate an investigation into plans by Hamilton Resources Ltd. and the Sesco Company of London to dispose of 5 million tons of hazardous wastes in Benin, West Africa.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste regulations of 1988 require, inter alia, that before any consignment of hazardous waste is transported from this country to Benin, the holder of the waste sends a copy of the completed consignment note to the Secretary of State. The Department has received no such consignment note to date.

Afforestation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest damaged or destroyed since 1983 by afforestation (a) grant-aided by the Forestry Commission and (b) without grant aid.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the information requested is only readily available since 1985:

(a) Craigs of Succoth (1985-86). One hectare damaged in error by an adjoining landowner ploughing in preparation for afforestation. No trees were planted on the SSSI. The afforestation proposal was granted aid by the Foresty Commission.
(b) Abernethy forest (1986-87) 270 hectares planted with the benefit of grant aid from the Forestry Commission.
(c) Glen Feshie (Cairngorms SSSI) (1986-87). Two hectares affected by planting without the benefit of grant aid.

No sites have been lost.

Development Corporations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the end-of-contract date of each urban development corporation and the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement of his policy on the future management of these areas after the termination dates.

Mr. Trippier: It was envisaged that the duration of the first two urban development corporations (London Docklands and Merseyside) would be about 15 years; the duration of the second generation of UDCs (black country, Teeside, Trafford park, and Tyne and Wear) is expected to be about a decade and the third generation (Bristol, Central Manchester, Leeds and Sheffield) about five to seven years. No dates have been fixed for the dissolution of any corporation.

Clay Pigeon Shooting

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, referring to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter to the hon. Member for Taunton of 15 December 1988, what consultations have taken place on the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988; and whether he now proposes to amend this order to allow a maximum of 28 days permitted use rights for clay pigeon shooting.

Mr. Chope: The General Development Order 1988 allows land to be used for clay pigeon shooting without planning permission for up to 14 days a year. The Department's consultation paper of 16 December invited views on whether the order should be amended to alter the limit to 28 days. We are now considering the responses to the consultation, and expect to reach a decision within the next few weeks.

National Pet Week

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to offer support to national pet week.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The question of pet welfare is one primarily for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. This Department's responsibilities extend only to the conservation of endangered species, dog licensing and registration matters.

Supermarket Trolleys

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with senior managers of supermarket chains about introducing a pay scheme to encourage shoppers to return their trolleys to their local store after unloading.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. Abandonment of trolleys may cause a financial loss to the companies and expense in collection and disposal to local authorities. It is for the parties involved to consider the best approach to the problem.

Churston Golf Club

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the result of the planning appeal with regard to Churston golf club, Torbay; what was the date of the hearing of the appeal; when the Churston golf club was visited by the planning inspector; and when the report was completed.

Mr. Chope: The appeal is being dealt with by an exchange of written representations and no public local inquiry was held. An inspector visited the site on 22 August 1988 and his report was submitted to my right hon. Friend on 12 September 1988. A decision will be made as soon as possible.

National Parks

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce new laws giving extra protection to the landscape of the national parks.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We see no need for any further legislation on this subject at present.

Nitrate Pollution (Nottingham)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has concerning the level of nitrate pollution in the sandstone aquifers north of Nottingham.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that six out of 41 public supply groundwater abstractions in the Trent catchment north of Nottingham currently exceed 50 mg/litre nitrate.

Capper Pass Factory

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's report on investigations into the disposal of wastes from the Capper Pass factory on north Humberside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This report is being published today and copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

The report concludes that there is no evidence from environmental monitoring data, predicted atmospheric dispersion patterns, radiological assessments and epideniological studies to link the reported childhood leukaemia excesses in villages to the west of Hull with discharges to atmosphere of polonium 210 or arsenic from Capper Pass. It also concludes that concentrations of antimony, lead, copper, tin and zinc in the locality are low and unlikely to cause any adverse health effects. Further attention should be given to limiting cadmium discharges, although the concentration of cadmium in the atmosphere close to Capper Pass has steadily reduced since 1978.

Nirex

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received proposals from United Kingdom Nirex concerning the choice of sites for the disposal of radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Nirex's report and recommendations on the disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive waste in a deep repository were submitted to Government on 28 February. Nirex recommends that a repository should be constructed in the form of a mine under the land, and that the next steps should be to carry out detailed geological studies, including the sinking of boreholes, in the vicinity of Sellafield and Dounreay. In arriving at these recommendations Nirex has concluded that it would be best to explore first those sites where there is some measure of local support for civil nuclear activities. The further evaluation of the geology of these two areas will enable Nirex to decide on their suitability for construction of a repository, or whether it will be necessary to evaluate other sites.

The Government, having consulted the radioactive waste management advisory committee accept the report and note that Nirex, having examined the arguments for storage rather than disposal of radioactive waste, has endorsed the Government's policy of disposal. The Government agree that further exploratory work is necessary before any particular site can be decided upon, and that it is for Nirex to obtain the necessary planning permissions through the normal procedures. Only when these investigations have been undertaken will Nirex be in a position to submit proposals for a substantive development and to seek the necessary approvals.

I have today decided to accept the recommendations made to me by the inspector, that the appeal by British Nuclear Fuels plc against Cumbria county council's refusal of planning permission to drill an exploratory geological borehole at Sellafield should be allowed.

Copies of the decision letter on the borehole drilling at Sellafield have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies of the Nirex report will be placed in the Libraries shortly. Further copies of the report will be available from Nirex.

Ecclesiastical Exemption

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals for an order under section 58AA of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, which provides for the restriction of the ecclesiastical exemption.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has today issued a consultation paper to interested parties setting out our proposals. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Water Pollution

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide and mandatory levels for (a) phenols, (b) mineral oils, (c) enteroviruses, (d) salmonella, (e) faecal streptococci, (f) phosphates and (g) nitrates in bathing waters which were the responsibility of the Anglian water authority;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the number and location of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide and mandatory levels for (a) cyanides, (b) lead and (c) chrome in bathing waters which were the responsibility of the Anglian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Monday 20 March 1989.

Miss Pamella Bordes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To as the Secretary of State for the Environment if an official ministerial car has been used to transport (a) Miss Pamella Bordes or (b) any other person to or from 6 Stockton court, Greycoat street, London SW1 or 69A Winchester street in (i) 1988 or (ii) 1989.

Mr. Chope: To the best of my knowledge no official ministerial car has ever been used to transport Miss Pamella Bordes or any other person to or from either address.

DEFENCE

Falkland Islands

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the outturn level of expenditure, or latest estimate where necessary, of the Falkland Islands in each year for 1983-84 to 1989-90; and if he will break the total down into (a) the cost of the airfield, (b) garrison running costs, (c) other garrison costs and (d) campaign costs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated total extra cost of the Falklands commitment from 1983-84 to 1989-90, and the campaign costs, garrison running costs, garrison capital costs, and the element of the garrison capital costs which is for the airfield construction, are set out in the table:

	Total extra cost[1]	Campaign costs	Garrison running costs	Garrison capital costs	Airfield construction costs[2]
1983-84	637	246	199	192	54
1984-85	644	241	184	219	108
1985-86	571	175	175	221	102
1986-87	405	169	126	110	18
1987-88	229	111	76	42	18
1988-89	102	43	56	3	—
1989-90	73	17	54	2	—

All figures £ million in-year cash.

[1] Includes all extra costs relating to the Falklands garrison; it excludes those personnel, equipment and other costs which would be incurred in the absence of the Falklands commitment.

[2] The airfield construction costs form part of the garrison capital costs.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in his discussions with his counterpart, and other Ministers of the Federal German Government, in Frankfurt on 21-22 February, he specifically addressed the implications for article VI compliance of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of any modernisation programme of short-range nuclear missiles for NATO member states party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Armed Services (Movements)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what criteria he selects (a) airlines and (b) airports for the movement of members of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The air transport force (ATF) of the RAF meets a large proportion of the armed forces' air movements needs and is used in preference to commercial airlines for economic reasons. ATF capacity is insufficient to provide for all these requirements, however, and commercial airlines are contracted to provide regular services over a number of routes. Normal competitive tender arrangements are used to select them.

For the movement of personnel using the ATF, the RAF employs its own airfields. Where personnel move by commercial airline, the airports used are those which are most cost-effective given the start and destination points of those travelling, and the operating practices of the contractor.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

USSR

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian Government about their continued failure to grant an exit visa to Malka Prilutzkaya.

Mr. Waldegrave: The case of Malka Prilutzkaya has not previously come to our attention. If the hon. Member can supply full details about this case, we can add it to those cases about which we consistently press the Soviet authorities.

Indebted Countries

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the net financial transfer of resources to the 17 most indebted countries for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to World Bank statistics, in 1987 (the latest date for which figures are available), there was a net financial transfer from the 17 highly indebted countries of $21·8 billion.

This is a misleading figure. The bank has measured the difference between repayments of loans (principal and interest) and new lending. They take no account of other flows such as grant aid. Before interest payments, there was a positive net resource transfer of $6·2 billion to the highly indebted countries in 1987.

Afghanistan

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which currently have (a) full diplomatic representation, (b) lower diplomatic representation at consular level, etc., and (c) no representation at all in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: Since Her Majesty's embassy in Kabul is temporarily closed and since we have no substantive dealings with the Kabul regime, we cannot provide the detailed information requested. We do know that Turkey is the only NATO member still currently represented in Kabul.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he anticipates that Britain will have diplomatic representation again in Afghanistan; and at what level.

Mr. Eggar: British diplomats will return to Kabul as soon as circumstances permit them to do a useful job. It is too early to predict when this will be.

THE ARTS

New Audiences

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to encourage the arts to attract new audiences.

Mr. Luce: I have been greatly encouraged by the response of arts organisations to my marketing initiatives over the last two years and I believe that there is now an increased appreciation of the importance of good marketing. In 1989-90 I intend to build on previous experience by offering (i) extended consultancies to arts organisations trying a new marketing approach and (ii) to support the work of arts marketing consortia in offering new services to their members. Both schemes aim to bring in new audiences to introduce more people to the arts, and to encourage particular audience groups, such as young people, multi-cultural groups and the retired. I shall contribute 75 per cent. of the cost in both cases.

I am grateful for the continued support of the Arts Council whose own marketing activities these schemes are intended to complement. It has agreed to run both schemes on my behalf.

I hope that arts organisations will find these new initiatives a valuable means of extending access to the arts, particularly to new and wider audiences.

Victoria and Albert Musuem

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the monthly attendance figures of the Victoria and Albert museum for the last three years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 March 1989]: I understand that the monthly attendance figures of the Victoria and Albert museum, including outstations, for the last three years are as follows:

	1986	1987	1988
January	126,345	99,814	115,020

PRIME MINISTER

Wolston

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Wolston, near Coventry.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Rain Forests

Q96. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will seek an invitation from the President of Brazil to visit central Amazonia and Brasilia in order to discuss United Kingdom technical support and debt-for-nature agreements with the Brazilian authorities, leading to an alleviation in the destruction of the rain forests.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. Through meetings at ministerial and official level, the Government of Brazil are well are of our concern about the rain forests. We are supporting joint reseach into forestry regeneration and allied subjects at the Maraca rain forest project and have been asked by Brazil to develop further proposals to help in this sector. Our co-operation is highly valued.

President Bush

Q131. Mr. Wood: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Bush.

Q135. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Bush.

The Prime Minister: I expect to see President Bush when he comes to Europe for the NATO summit at the end of May.

Q133. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Gorbachev.

Q141. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Gorbachev.

Q146. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: On 5 April, when he arrives in Britain for a two-day visit.

Nuclear Weapons

Q170. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what current action Her Majesty's Government are taking to eliminate all nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom fulfils her obligations as a party to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. Article VI of the treaty requires the parties to it to pursue negotiations on effective measures connected with nuclear disarmament. Since the United States and the Soviet Union possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons it is universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations falls to them. The United States and Soviet Union are currently engaged in such negotiations which aim at 50 per cent. reductions in their strategic nuclear weapons.

NHS Hospitals

Q214. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Prime Minister when she most recently visited a National Health Service hospital.

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Prime Minister when the commissioner appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will present his annual report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A copy of the 1988 annual report by Lord Justice Lloyd has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential appendix to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. I am grateful to the commissioner for his work on the report and the reassurance it contains, that care is taken by all concerned to observe not only the letter but also the spirit of the Act. The commissioner's report suggests a small number of improvements to the procedures observed in dealing with these cases. Careful consideration is being given to ways of implementing these suggestions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Liscombe Experimental Husbandry Farm

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the possible closure of Liscombe experimental husbandry farm, near Dulverton, Somerset, and its current contribution to research into pollution control measures, conservation techniques and other environmental issues; when he expects to reach a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have received a number of letters and a large number of copies of a circular letter together with a petition.

Today my noble Friend, the Baroness Trumpington, wrote to industry organisations and to the chairmen of the advisory committees for Ministry experimental husbandry farms to provide more information for the industry to assist it in determining what near market research it will fund. That letter also announced the Ministry's proposal to close the Liscombe experimental husbandry farm, but final decisions will not be taken until Ministers have considered the industry's response. Local interests have already approached the Department with a proposal and discussions are continuing.

Poultry Industry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to whether any measures similar to those he has recently introduced to secure the wholesomeness of the British poultry industry apply in any other EEC countries.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Several member states of the European Community have introduced a range of controls to combat salmonella, though none is as comprehensive as the measures which I set out on 18 January. The United Kingdom is pressing for further action to tackle the problem throughout the Community.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about recent changes in employment totals in the poultry industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no figures relating to total employment in the poultry industry.

Dog Hunting (New Forest)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received, by letter, postcard and petition, concerning the prohibition of hunting with dogs in the New Forest.

Mr. Ryder: Since the start of the most recent postcard campaign in January 1988, I have received 16 letters, 3,281 pre-printed postcards and three petitions carrying a total of 383 signatures on this subject.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the risks posed to certain groups of workers by possible contact with bovine spongiform encephalopathy-affected products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry has received inquiries from a number of employees' organisations about the possible risks to workers who may come into contact with cattle suspected of being infected with BSE and material from them. Although the evidence is that the risks to human health are remote, the Health and Safety Executive is considering whether additional safety guidelines are necessary for such occupational groups.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has concerning the level of infectiousness of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle prior to the onset of chronic manifestations of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no evidence that bovine spongiform encephalopathy can be transmitted from cattle to cattle.

Strychnine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those organisations which are allowed to purchase strychnine compounds in sufficient quantity to meet their foreseeable needs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Rabbit clearance societies and large estates are allowed to purchase strychnine compounds in quantities sufficient to meet their foreseeable needs, with a maximum limit of 50 grammes, on the same basis as professional pest control contractors. Returns are required of the land on which strychnine has been used.

Extensification Pilot Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what extensification pilot schemes are presently being conducted or envisaged in the United Kingdom; what is the nature of each of the schemes involved; and how many are being sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Ryder: Now that the Community has adopted the relevant legislation, I will be considering in consultation with the interests concerned what pilot schemes might be appropriate.

Salmonella

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he accepts the recommendations for additional research on salmonella in his Department's joint report with the Department of Health and the British Egg Information Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government devote substantial resources to research on food safety. We have now re-examined carefully the coverage of the existing programmes and the research needs newly identified in the joint report.

Accordingly new research amounting to £1 million annually is being commissioned to cover the recommendations in the report relating to the possible contamination of eggs and the pathogenicity of the salmonella organisms as well as the growth and survival of the pathogen in processed eggs and egg products. The programmes will draw on the expertise available at my Department's central veterinary laboratory, at the institute of animal health of the agriculture and food research council and at the food research associations.

Near Market Research

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to hold further discussions with the industry on the funding of near market agricultural and food research and development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My noble Friend the Baroness Trumington is writing today to the agricultural and food industry, consumer organisations and other interested bodies about the next stage of the consultations on the transfer to the industry of funding for near market research. I have deposited a copy of that letter and its annexes in the Library of the House. The annexes to the letter give details of the agriculture, horticulture and food research which is being supported by the Agriculture Departments in Great Britain, together with an indication of the likely content of future public good programmes. I wish to emphasise that we shall continue to give priority to work in support of statute and policy, such as research on food safety, which is essential to protect public interest. The letter also refers to a proposal to close the experimental horticulture stations at Brogdale, Luddington and Rosewarne and the experimental husbandry farm at Liscombe in 1989-90.

My Department's regional laboratories will also be rationalised in order further to improve cost-effectiveness. This will involve closing during the 1989-90 financial year the subordinate laboratories at Newcastle, Evesham and Accrington as well as some very small laboratories in Wales. In 1990-91 the laboratories at Bristol and Wye will be closed and the laboratories at Leeds and Trawsgoed reduced in size. The Welsh Office is seeking alternative uses for the present Trawsgoed analytical chemistry laboratory. We shall be making new investment in storage, transport, analytical and information processing facilities so that the remaining laboratories can continue to meet needs across the whole of England and Wales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Tanzania

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will commission an independent evaluation of the impact on aid policy of the international monetary fund agreement with the Tanzanian Government on the provision of health and education services in Tanzania.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is for the Government of Tanzania to consider whether to evaluate the impact of their economic recovery programme on the social sectors. We are, however, participating with the World Bank in a social dimensions of adjustment project in Tanzania. This should help facilitate a systematic evaluation of the social impact of the economic recovery programme.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what development projects in Tanzania are currently being supported by the Overseas Development Administration; and what is their cost and likely completion dates.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain is currently financing over 30 development projects in Tanzania. The following table lists current projects in excess of £200,000, with details of their estimated costs and planned completion dates.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used to measure the effectiveness of programme aid and project aid towards development in Tanzania; and how this evaluation will affect the future aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: For programme aid we monitor in general the extent to which the objectives of the Tanzanian economic recovery programme are being met and, as part of that, the foreign exchange allocation and procurement systems. Capital projects proposed for financing from British aid funds are subject to comprehensive appraisal to determine their financial and economic rates of return. Their implementation is systematically monitored. These assessments are taken fully into account in determining the future volume of programme and project aid that we allocate for Tanzania.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total level of programme aid to Tanzania for each year since it was introduced; what was the total level of aid to Tanzania for each of those years; and what percentage of that total constitutes programme aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: Programme aid to Tanzania resumed in the financial year 1986-87. Programme aid and total British aid to Tanzania in 1986-87 and 1987-88 were as follows:

	£ million 1986-87	£ million 1987-88
Programme aid	14·974	17·322
Total aid	25·207	28·948
Programme aid as a percentage of total aid	59	60

Overseas Aid

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what GDF deflator figure was used in the calculation of a 5 per cent. real terms increase in the overseas aid programme in 1989-90 referred to by the Minister for Overseas Development in the debate on 17 March.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 17 March at column 697.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dana Concert (Children's Travel)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there was any cost to public funds for the provision of transport for schoolchildren associated with the recording by Dana at the Giant's Causeway on Friday 10 March.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Education will meet the cost of transport from within its community relations budget. It should be noted that the rights to the recording of the song "Harmony" and to the associated video belong to Co-operation North and all proceeds from the production will go to that organisation.

Voluntary Grammar Schools

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the category A expenditure admitted for each of the voluntary grammar schools in Northern Ireland for the current school year and the last school year.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the basis for the figures given in the Official Report, columns 39-40 to indicate pupil numbers and category B grants for each of the voluntary grammar schools in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Category B grants are based on the levels of approved expenditure in previous years adjusted to take account of both pay and price increases and the skewing of resources in favour of the relatively low spending schools. Category B grants are calculated in relation to the number of non-fee-paying pupils only, details of which are provided by individual schools.

Teaching Costs

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the amounts allocated to each secondary school in Northern Ireland to fund teaching costs in the current and last two school years, the numbers of pupils in each school in each year and the numbers of approved teaching posts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on teaching costs is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The numbers of pupils and approved full-time teaching posts in each secondary school in the current and last two school years are set out in the following table.

Student Income and Expenditure

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the survey of student income and expenditure as proposed in the recent White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" will extend to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The further survey is confined to Great Britain and follows an earlier similar exercise. However, future monitoring of the general effects of the new top up loans scheme will be on a United Kingdom basis.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a table showing the young mature entry index and the older mature participation index for each year since 1979 for (a) universities only and (b) for all higher education institutions in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No young mature entry index is available for Northern Ireland.

Available information for the older mature participation index is as follows:

Year	Universities	All higher education
1987-88	0·196	0·211
1986-87	0·160	0·174
1985-86	0·171	0·181

Information for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Graduates

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what figures are available to indicate or estimate the number of graduates domiciled in Northern Ireland who earn less than 85 per cent. of national average income at intervals of (a) five years and (b) 10 years after graduation;

(2) what figures are available to indicate the number of graduates domiciled in Northern Ireland who earn more than 115 per cent. of national average income at intervals of (a) five years and (b) 10 years after graduation.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the numbers of graduates employed in the public sector in Northern Ireland, their distribution among grading levels and the salaries applying to these grades.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested with regard to graduates employed in the public sector in Northen Ireland is not readily available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the number of graduates employed in the NICS, their distribution among grading levels and the salaries applying to these grades are as follows.

Grade	Number of Graduates	Salary scale
Senior principal and above	427	£19,539-£62,750
Principal	450	£15,631-£21,104
Deputy principal	798	£12,754-£18,167
Staff officer	501	£10,434-£13,458
Executive officer I	262	£8,843-£11,596
Executive officer II	354	£6,134-£9,935
Administrative officer	254	£3,873-£7,555
Administrative assistant	78	£3,519-£6,074

Students

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate for each year since 1979-80 the total numbers of 16 to 19-year-olds in further and higher education in Northern Ireland by area board and indicating these numbers as a percentage of the 16 to 19-year-old age cohort.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The information requested is not available for each area board. However, available information for Northern Ireland as a whole is as follows:

Year	16-19 year olds in full-time further and higher education	As per cent of 16-19 year old population
1986-87	18,159	16
1985-86	17,627	15
1984-85	16,839	14
1983-84	15,993	14
1982-83	17,270	15
1981-82	15,601	13
1980-81	14,035	12
1979-80	12,452	11

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to increase the level of grant aid for Northern Ireland students attending universities in (a) Scotland from April 1989, (b) England and Wales from April 1990 to take account of the community charge payable.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 March 1989]: No.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Working Conditions)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what were the average working journey miles per British Rail train driver for each of the years 1980 to 1988; and what assessment he has made of the implications for safety;

(2) what information he has about the hours of work of British Rail employees for the years 1980 to 1988; and what assessment he has made of the implications for safety of these figures;

(3) what were the average weekly working hours of British Rail train drivers in each of the British Rail regions for the years 1980 to 1988; and what assessment he has made of the implications for safety of these figures.

Mr. Portillo: The detailed management information sought by the hon. Member is not reported to the Department. There are no recommendations or conclusions in any accident reports prepared by the Department's railway inspectorate during the years 1980-88 which suggest that drivers' hours or average working journey miles have been a factor in accidents.

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached on the recommendations of his Department's scrutiny of the railway inspectorate.

Mr. Portillo: Since this scrutiny was completed in 1987, we have consulted interested organisations on its many recommendations and I have had the advice of chief inspecting officer, who was appointed in 1988. I am now placing in the Library of the House a note setting out the action that is being taken. Most of the recommendations of the review are being followed up; only four are rejected. I am proposing to review whether any further changes are needed in the interests of efficiency and effectiveness, across all the functions performed by the inspectorate.

Drunk-drivers

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce a super test for drunk-drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. We are drawing up plans for a more demanding driving test to be taken by drivers convicted of and disqualified for serious bad driving offences. As explained in the Government's recent White Paper "The Road User and the Law", Cm. 576 this test will not, in the first instance, be taken by most drink drive offenders who are more likely to benefit from the rehabilitation courses also envisaged in the White Paper.

Driving Test

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how the new test proposed in the recent White Paper "The Road User and the Law" will differ from the L test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new test is likely to be longer than the L test, which will make it more demanding. The standard of assessment will be the same for the new test as for the L test—any actually or potentially dangerous mistakes will result in failure. The fee will be set, as is the L test fee, at the level necessary to recover the costs associated with the test. It is therefore likely to cost more.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to change the United Kingdom driving tests to comply with European proposals on licensing harmonisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposed Second European Community Driving Licence Directive would, amongst other matters, set common minimum standards for driver testing in Europe. Our current tests are likely to meet those standards without need for major changes. If, after detailed consideration, any amendments are thought to be necessary, interested parties will be consulted as appropriate.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to introduce a written theory test for driving test candidates to comply with European proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no requirement under the European proposals for a written theory test. A detailed comparison of the United Kingdom's existing oral theory test with the minimum requirements of the proposed Second Driving Licence Directive suggests that the content of the United Kingdom theory test may need to be revised. If a change to the format appears also in due course to be necessary, we shall first consult with interested organisations as appropriate.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans for common standards for driving instructors in Europe by 1992.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans at present for harmonisation of driving instructor standards within EC.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving instructors have failed to reach the proper standard in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1988, 749 check tests on established instructors were substandard. Some of the instructors involved were subsequently able to raise their standard to an acceptable level. Some await further tests.

Eighty-six instructors have been or are being removed from the register of approved driving instructors for failing to reach the required standard. Others have resigned before this step has been reached.

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving instructors fall within each of the different grades allocated by his Department on the check test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information will not be available until next year, when all instructors will have been tested to the current standard. All instructors who fail to reach grade 4, 5 or 6 after, at most, three attempts, are removed from the register.

Goods Vehicles (Hazardous Loads)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether steps have been taken to ensure that drivers of goods vehicles carrying dangerous substances are aware of the need for extra care in bad weather conditions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The various road transport industry training boards and associations are fully aware of the need for special care when transporting dangerous goods. The Department wrote earlier this year to the chairman of the joint board which co-ordinates training for drivers responsible for dangerous substances, asking for renewed emphasis to be placed on the importance of taking account of weather conditions when planning journeys, or in deciding whether to continue them. I am arranging for the letter and the reply to be place in the Library.

Goods and Passenger Vehicle Operator Licensing

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will deregulate goods and passenger vehicle operator licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has just completed a review of operator licensing to consider ways in which the burden it imposes on industry might be reduced. Proposals will be published for public consultation, probably in the summer.

MV The Takapu

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions in the last five years the vessel The Takapu operated by Star Offshore, was inspected; and what was the result of such inspections.

Mr. Portillo: I assume that the question refers to the Takapu which is managed by Star Offshore Services Marine Ltd of Aberdeen. This vessel was first registered in the United Kingdom in February 1988 and was then surveyed for the issue of a safety equipment certificate, international oil pollution prevention certificate and a safety radio certificate. Annual surveys were undertaken in February this year. These surveys indicated that the vessel complied with the safety and oil pollution regulations applicable to her.

Continental Shelf (Standby Vessels)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been his Department's expenditure in each of the last five years, on the inspection and supervision of standby vessels on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available since the expenditure incurred on standby vessels is not separately recorded from the inspection and supervision of other types of vessels. However, every vessel used as a standby vessel must be inspected each year for compliance with the Department's assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list, in respect of each standby vessel on the United Kingdom continental shelf, the occasions when each vessel has been inspected or visited by his inspectors in the last five years;

(2) in respect of each offshore oil and gas installations in the North sea, if he will give (a) the name of the standby vessel, (b) the age of the standby vessel, (c) the previous service history of each standby vessel and (d) the name of the owner of each standby vessel.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department assesses the suitability of standby vessels and when a vessel meets the necessary standards a certificate is issued. It is the responsibility of the operator to ensure that there is a standby vessel within five miles of a manned offshore installation and he is free to charter any vessel from the pool available. I am placing in the Library the names of all standby vessels currently certificated, the name of the owner, the year of build and the date of the last survey.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines have been issued by his Department, in respect of standards required by operators of standby vessels on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Portillo: The Department last issued guidelines in 1982 in the form of instructions to surveyors on the assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of standby vessels located off offshore oil and gas installations in (a) the northern section and (b) the southern section of the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Portillo: There are 154 standby vessels currently certified by the Department. It is not possible, without incurring disproportionate costs, to split this total into the two divisions required.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require supply boats, tugs or standby vessels operating in the United Kingdom continental shelf, to carry medically qualified personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In the current revision of the "Instructions to Surveyors on the Assessment of the Suitability of Standby Vessels Attending Offshore Installations" it is being proposed that in addition to all crew members having a basic first aid training some should now attend an advanced first aid course. However, if the Piper Alpha inquiry recommends further improvements these will be carefully considered.

Severn bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of all fatal and other serious accidents that have occurred in the approaches to the Severn bridge in tailbacks in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information on accidents occurring in tailbacks is not specifically recorded as such.

In the past five years for which information is readily available, there have been 34 vehicular accidents involving personal injury on the M4 within four miles of the Severn bridge in England, excluding the bridge itself.

These are:

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1984	0	2	2	4
1985	0	2	7	9
1986	0	3	4	7
1987	0	1	5	6
1988	0	2	6	8

Information in respect of accidents on the Welsh approach of the crossing may be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorism (Broadcasts)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend the ban on broadcasting of statements of those supporting terrorism to cover any other, non-Christian organisation urging the breaking of United Kingdom laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. The broadcasting restrictions apply only to Northern Ireland terrorist organisations and their supporters, and they were introduced only because of the exceptional circumstances surrounding terrorism connected with Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to amend the notices imposing restrictions on access to the media which were issued to the broadcasters last October to take account of the coming into force of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Hurd: I have today made a technical amendment to the notices substituting a reference to the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 for the existing reference to the Act of 1984. Copies of the amending notices have been placed in the Library.

Prison Service (Privatisation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what views the prison governors' representatives expressed, at their meeting with him on 6 March, in respect of his plan to privatise parts of the prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When my right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the Prison Governors Association on 6 March we had a useful exchange of views about, among other things, issues arising from the Green Paper "Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System" (Cm. 434, July 1988) and from my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 1 March at columns 277-78. A copy of the responses to the Green Paper, including that from the Prison Governors Association, is in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which organisations he will be seeking advice about his plans for the privatisation of parts of the prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In his statement to the House on 1 March at columns 277-278 my right hon. Friend described the further work which will be needed to take forward consideration of the possibility of involving the private sector in the provision and operation of new remand centres, and in the provision of court escort and custody services. This will involve extensive consultation with interested parties in or concerned with the operation of the criminal justice system, as well as with potential contractors.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of north Wales on the reasons for the delays and multiple visits of officers involved in applications for firearm and shotgun certificates and as to on what dates forces' standing orders or any instructions to officers on the administration of the Firearms Act and amendments have been issued;

(2) if he will call for a report from Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary of the efficiency of the administration in the north Wales constabulary of the Firearms Act 1968 and amendments and as to whom the responsibility for the control of the administration procedures has been delegated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The administration of the Firearms Acts in North Wales is the responsibility of the chief constable. I am not aware of matters that would justify calling for a report from him or from Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary.

Drugs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the street price level of drugs over the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The price of illicit drugs is difficult to assess and varies widely according to factors such as the locality, the purity of the drugs and the circumstances in which the transaction takes place. A broad indication of prices paid for some of the main drugs of misuse over the last five years, based on information collected by the national drugs intelligence unit, is given in the table. It shows typical street level prices in London and Glasgow.

	Cocaine (£ per gram)		Heroin (£ per gram)		Amphetamine (£ per gram)		Cannabis Resin (£ per ounce)
	London	Glasgow	London	Glasgow	London	Glasgow	London	Glasgow

1985	55	75	65	90	15	15	65	95
1986	90	70	90	90	15	15	50	85

Broadcasting White Paper

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now list in the Official Report the names of all (a) organisations and (b) individuals who made representations on the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s".

Mr. Renton: It would not be practicable to do so: we have now received over 2,900 responses, and a few late submissions are still coming in. We have it in mind in due course to place in the Library a list of the main organisations which have submitted comments.

Mr. Mohammed Bhika

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the application made by Mr. Mohammed Bhika, Ref. GV100/5063 and B468083, to enter the United Kingdom; when the application was referred to him; and when Mr. Bhika applied to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Mr. Bhika applied on 4 January 1989, at the British deputy high commission in Bombay, to come here for employment as a minister of religion at the Surti Muslim Khalifa society, Bradford. On 6 January 1989 the entry clearance officer referred the application to the immigration and nationality department for a decision. Preliminary consideration has already been given to the case and further inquiries are under way. I expect a decision to be taken on the application shortly. Mr. Bhika and the Surti Muslim Khalifa society will be informed direct of the outcome.

Mrs. Safina Bi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he is going to take a decision on the application of Mrs. Safina Bi, Ref. B437592/IMM/91905, to enter the United Kingdom; when the application was referred to him; and when Mrs. Safina Bi applied to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Mrs. Safina Bi applied at the British embassy in Islamabad on 20 September 1987 for entry clearance to join her husband here for settlement. She was interviewed in Islamabad on 7 February 1988 and the entry clearance officer referred the application to the immigration and nationality department on 21 March 1988 for a decision. Further inquiries were made and the decision to refuse Mrs. Bi's application was sent to the entry clearance officer on 20 March 1989, who will formally notify her of the Department's decision once the papers are received in Islamabad. A letter to Mr. Rashid's solicitors informing them of this decision was sent the same day. Mrs. Bi will be informed of her right of appeal against the Department's decision to the independent appellate authorities.

Extradition

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to initiate the powers on extradition provided in the Criminal Justice Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Later this year, when the provisions of part I of the 1988 Act have been consolidated with other extradition legislation in a Bill which we hope will be brought forward shortly.

Magistrates Courts (Computers)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached a decision on the recommendations in the Home Office research and planning unit report, "Evaluation of the Use of Computers in Magistrates Courts—The Way Forward."

Mr. Hurd: The report was issued for consultation to the magistrates courts service, other agencies within the criminal justice system and the suppliers of computer equipment in September 1987. Very careful consideration has been given to the responses received.

There was substantial support for recommendations in the report which proposed that the Home Office should develop a clear strategy and objectives for computerisation in courts and that it should be more positive in providing advice and guidance on computerisation. A recommendation that the Home Office should itself develop, on behalf of the magistrates courts, a prescribed computer software package gave rise to much criticism, which we think is well-founded. We have concluded that the more realistic and practicable approach would be to develop a standard specification for magistrates courts computer systems to which equipment would be expected to conform and, in parallel, to test the feasibility of greater data interchange between current and planned systems through networking arrangements available from the private sector.

A small team is to be established within the Home Office to take forward this work and to provide advice to the courts on computer matters, including the preparation of investment strategies. The work will be carried out in close consultation with the courts, suppliers of equipment, and the other agencies in the criminal justice system.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give an assurance of the availability of funding from central Government for projects eligible for funding under objective 2 of the European regional development fund, in Stockport;

(2) what projects he has identified as eligible for funding from the European regional development fund, in Stockport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Stockport's eligiblity for European regional development fund assistance, as part of Greater Manchester county, is subject to the Commission's confirmation of its provisional objective 2 list. My Department and the Department of the Environment will consider with the local authorities and other interests concerned what projects should be proposed to the Commission for support from the ERDF, and the manner in which it will be sought. Decisions on use of the fund rest with the Commission. Central Government funding will depend upon the nature of projects eventually agreed.

Folk Dance and Song Society

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has had about alleged irregularities in the election for the national executive committee of the English Folk Dance and Song Society.

Mr. Hurd: I have received one letter from a constituent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the interest rates in (a) Britain and (b) Germany.

Mr. Lilley: Three-month interbank rates on 17 March were 13·1 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 6·6 per cent. in Germany.

Inflation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current inflation rates in (a) Britain and (b) other members of the Group of Seven.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current inflation rates in (a) Britain and (b) other members of the Group of Seven.

Mr. Lilley: The current 12-month inflation rates for the United Kingdom and the other members of the Group of Seven are given in the OECD weekly publication "Current Economic Indicators", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Third World Debt

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposal on Third world debt formulated by the United States Treasury Secretary, Mr. Nicholas Brady; and whether he will be amending his own initiative in this area in the light of Secretary Baker's proposal.

Mr. Lawson: The proposals announced by Secretary Brady on 10 March relate to the middle-income debtor countries, the majority of whose debt is owed to commercial banks. The proposals include the use of IMF and World Bank finance to bring about voluntary debt reduction by the banks. They are being studied carefully in the run-up to the spring meetings of the IMF and World Bank next month, where they will be discussed. The initiative which I launched in April 1987 was aimed at the poorest, most heavily-indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa whose debt is owed largely to official creditors. Implementation of this has already begun and sub-Saharan countries are therefore already benefiting from it.

Inward Investment

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the amount of inward investment to the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Major: Inward investment in the United Kingdom is estimated to have been £11·2 billion during 1988.

Ryrie Rules

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now revise the Ryrie rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the Treasury Paper "Private Finance in Public Expenditure" that I placed in the Library of the House in February 1988 and which explains how policy has developed since 1981.

International Monetary Fund

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that Britain retains her place as the second largest shareholder, after the United States of America, of the international monetary fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The ninth quota review of the international monetary fund is currently in progress. Decisions are not expected until later this year.

Mr. Mohamed Fayed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he regards Mr. Mohamed Fayed as a fit and proper person within the meaning of section 11(1)(A) and (E) of the Banking Act.

Mr. Lilley: Statutory responsibility for the authorisation and supervision of banks and for the assessment of whether their directors, controllers or managers are fit and proper persons within the terms of the Banking Act 1987 rests with the Bank of England. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on any particular case.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year from 1978-79 the total expenditure of the Central Office of Information, including the estimated expenditure for 1988-89 and the budget from 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total Expenditure £,000s
1978-79	35,400
1979-80	40,700
1980-81	45,100
1981-82	46,100
1982-83	48,300
1983-84	60,300
1984-85	64,700
1985-86	66,900
1986-87	149,800
1987-88	150,500
1988-89	[1]151,600
1989-90	[1]144,000

[1] Estimate.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year from 1978-79 the number of employees of the Central Office of Information, including a figure for 1988-89 and a projection for 1989-90.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for including in the criteria for entitlement to housing benefit an assessment of the number of rooms which claimants should have in their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Housing Benefit Regulations permit local authorities to restrict the amount of rent eligible for housing benefit, in certain circumstances, where they consider that the claimant's accommodation is larger than is reasonably required. No room standard is set down in either legislation or guidance.

From April 1989, local authorities will apply to a rent officer for a determination of a reasonable market rent where the claimant lives in deregulated private sector accommodation. One aspect of these new arrangements will be that the rent officer will decide, against a room standard laid down in an order setting out rent officers' functions, whether the claimant is over-accommodated. If so, he will notify to the local authority a notional market rent for suitably-sized but otherwise similar accommodation. It will continue to be for the local authority to decide on the level of benefit paid. After 13 weeks, subsidy due to the local authority will generally be limited to benefit paid up to the level of the notional rent.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount paid to meet the cost of living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation from his Department's offices in Lambeth in any recent available period of 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many families in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole are in receipt of family credit;

(2) how many families in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole were in receipt of family income supplement in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information about family credit on this basis is still not available. In June 1987, the latest date from which figures are available, 27,000 families in Scotland were in receipt of family income supplement. No information is available about claims from particular local areas.

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the value of the Treasury supplement to the national insurance scheme expressed in current values and calculated on the percentages paid in 1965, 1970, 1975 and 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1975, the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund, which is paid out of general taxation, has been assessed by applying its current percentage rate to gross national insurance contributions that were paid in the tax year into the fund. In 1988-89, such gross contributions are estimated to be £33,240 million, and the current rate of the Treasury supplement is 5 per cent.

The current 1988-89 value of the Treasury supplement is therefore estimated to be £1,662 million. The remaining information requested is as follows:

Percentage rate of the Treasury supplement and value of the Treasury supplement in 1988-89 if relevant percentage rate were applied to gross contributions in 1988-89

Year	Percentage rate	£ million
1965-66	19·1	6,349
1970-71	17·8	5,917
1975-76	18·0	5,983
1979-80	18·0	5,983

Bed and Breakfast

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the expenditure incurred by each housing authority in England for providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.
The information has been placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Employment Training

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of employment training in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Employment training is now progressing well in Scotland with over 20,000 people participating. Trainees are being recruited at a rate of some 1,500 a week. This is encouraging considering that the new programme has been operational for just over six months.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the consumption of alcohol at the following weekly levels (a) men 0 to 21 units, (b) women 0 to 14 units, (c) men 21 to 50 units, (d) women 14 to 35 units, (e) men more than 50 units and (f) women more than 35 units; and what steps his Department is currently taking to highlight the dangers to health of drinking at higher levels.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the precise form requested is not available. The most recent relevant survey, conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, which included information on alcohol consumption and drinking patterns is "Drinking and Attitudes to Licensing in Scotland". The report was published by HMSO in 1986 and a copy is available in the Library.

The ministerial group on alcohol misuse established in 1987 has put in hand a range of measures to assist in tackling the problem of alcohol misuse generally. The Scottish health education group gives high priority to alcohol misuse within its broad-based health education strategy aimed at promoting healthy lifestyles.

Drug-related Offences

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were convicted of drug-related offences for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table. For this purpose, the relevant offences are taken to be the illegal importation, production, manufacture, cultivation or supply of drugs, possession with intent to supply, and simple possession.

Scotland	Persons with a drugs offence proved
1979	1,150
1980	1,155

Drugs Seizures

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the weight of police seizures of (a) cocaine, (b) heroin and (c) all drugs, for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is shown in the table. Figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Quantities of drug seizures (grammes) by the police in Scotland: 1979-87

Translation and Foreign Language Services

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what types of translation and foreign language services are being made available to firms preparing for the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Rifkind: Firms preparing for the single European market have access to translation and foreign language services mainly through private sector companies and the language departments of higher education institutions. The Government, through the Training Agency, the Scottish Development Agency and my Department, are assisting the institutions to form a language for export consortium to develop and market their services in ways best suited to meet the needs of business. The services provided will go wider than translation, interpretation and the acquisition of foreign language skills to embrace all aspects of trans-lingual commercial communication.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure on regional selective assistance for each of the years 1983-84 to 1987-88, inclusive and the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: Total gross expenditure on regional selective assistance and related schemes in the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive are £28·2 million, £38·2 million, £55·0 million, £43·9 million and £45·5 million respectively. Estimated gross expenditure in 1988-89 is expected to be around £44 million. Planned provision for 1989-90 is published in the Supply Estimates. Planned net provision (including regional enterprise grants), consistent with the figures published in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is approximately £80 million. Actual expenditure in these years will depend on the extent to which companies come forward with good projects. We shall continue to encourage Scottish businesses to take full advantage of the provision on offer.

Social Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has had any discussions with regional and islands authorities and directors of social work with a view to improving the training and supervision of social workers dealing with mentally disordered workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All regional and Islands councils are involved in the provision of training programmes, approved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, for social workers who are approved as mental health officers under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984. Officials of the social work services group of the Scottish Education Department regularly meet representatives of directors of social work to discuss matters relating to social work training.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans for the Scottish Office to make a direct contribution to the improvement of the training of social workers dealing with mentally disordered people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The need to strengthen post-qualifying training for social workers was among the considerations which led my right hon. and learned Friend to increase by 13 per cent. provision for local authority current expenditure on social work in 1989-90. In addition the Scottish Office is providing a grant of up to £200,000 over three years to St. Andrews university to establish a shared training project for nursing and social work staff working with mentally handicapped people in the Grampian and Highland regions.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many junior hospital doctors are known to have contracted hours of duty in excess of 95 hours per week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average number of contracted hours of duty of junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The estimated number of contracted hours of duty of junior hospital doctors in Scotland was 86·1 as at 30 September 1988. The 1988 data for Greater Glasgow, Lanarkshire and Forth Valley health boards are not yet available; 1987 data for these boards have therefore been included in the calculation of this average.

Young People (Housing)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any new proposals for enabling young people to enter the housing market either as tenants or owner-occupiers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Young people and others who need access to housing will stand to benefit from a number of Government measures designed to improve the operation of the housing market. These include the reform of the private rented sector and the extension of the business expansion scheme to the provision of accommodation let on assured tenancies; powers for local authorities to make schemes to assist tenants to obtain other accommodation; and powers for Scotttish Homes to assist the development of both rented and owner-occupied housing.

Local Authority Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy regarding the provision of housing by local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities in Scotland have a major role to play both as enablers and providers of housing for the foreseeable future. In their role as housing providers authorities will meet an increasingly competitive environment following the introduction of tenants' choice whereby council tenants will have the right to opt for a new landlord. There are, however, no plans to compel authorities to give up their landlord function and there are no statutory powers whereby the Government or any other body can force them to do so. The only person who can compel a council to sell its property is the individual sitting tenant.

The Government's recognition of the substantial role played by councils as housing providers is reflected in the fact that gross capital consent allocations to housing authorities have virtually doubled over the last four years.

It is important, however, that councils should not focus on their landlord function to the detriment of their role as strategic and enabling housing authorities.

Shipbuilding and Marine Engineering Industry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people employed in the shipbuilding and marine engineering industry in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in each year from 1975 to 1989.

Mr. Lang: The latest available figures for Scotland relate to 1986. After 1979 only figures for the shipbuilding and ship repair industry (activity heading 3610 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) are available. Annual figures for Strathclyde and Greenock and Port Glasgow are not readily available.

Manufacturing Investment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table taking 1979 as 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing (a) in Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: The latest available figures for Scotland relate to 1986. Similar indices for Strathclyde and Greenock and Port Glasgow are not readily available.

Electoral Registration

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of people in the parliamentary constituencies of Greenock and Port Glasgow and Renfrew, West and Inverclyde listed in (a) the electoral registers for 1988-89, (b) the electoral registers for 1989-90 and (c) the electoral registers for five and 10 years ago, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	Number of electors
Constituency	1989 electoral register	1988 electoral register	1984 electoral register	1979 electoral register
Greenock and Port Glasgow	55,612	57,339	60,217	62,360
Renfrew West and Inverclyde	57,234	57,025	54,893	79,339

The 1979 figures relate to the former constituencies of Greenock and Port Glasgow, and Renfrewshire, West whose areas correspond broadly with those of the present constituencies created in 1983.

Dog Hunting (New Forest)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he and the Forestry Commission have received by letter, postcard and petition, concerning the prohibition of hunting with dogs in the New Forest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1 January 1988 the Forestry Commission has received six letters concerning the prohibition of hunting with hounds in the New Forest. My right hon. and Learned Friend has received no communications on this subject.

Students (Allowances)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish full details of students' allowances for session 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I announced the main rates of student grant for the 1989-90 academic year in response to a question from my hon. Friend on 16 December 1988 at columns 780-82.

I am publishing today the supplementary grant rates for the 1989-90 session and details have been placed in the Library. The increases in these rates are broadly in line with the 5 per cent. increase in the main rates, but allowances for students with dependent children will be increased, on average, by 10 per cent.

In addition, there are some minor changes in the terms of the students' allowances scheme. These include:

i. adjusting the classification of some countries for the purposes of determining the rates of grant for study abroad;

ii. treating married students as independent of their parents after two years of marriage;

iii. reducing the qualifying period to two years where parental contributions can be waived in the case of a student who has been in care or custodianship.

Forestry (Report)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has determined his response to the report from the Highland regional council working party on forestry in Caithness and Sutherland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I welcome this report as a basis for resolving the apparent conflicts in land use in Caithness and Sutherland. I intend to act on those recommendations directed at my departments, and hope that the other agencies involved will also respond positively.

The report was agreed unanimously and I pay tribute to all the working party members for adopting a reasonable and reasoned approach. I think there are three significant elements in the report. First, the proposed land use strategy, which provides a policy framework for considering all land use changes including conservation and forestry. Secondly, the agreement on the scientific interest of the peatlands, and the need to conserve the areas of highest value. Thirdly, the need to establish a viable forest industry by planting a further 40,000 hectares to secure long term employment in the area.

The proposed land use strategy is a sound basis for both safeguarding the prime peatlands and managing the change of sufficient land to create a viable forest. It is an entirely appropriate mechanism consistent with the principles of our planning system. Proposals to change land use are initiated by its owners. Only when there is a public interest in the proposed change should there be any involvement with Government and statutory agencies. An indicative strategy sets out clear presumptions for or against particular uses, but leaves individual cases to be decided on their merits. By endorsing this strategy, I am providing a clear indication to private sector interests of the likely attitude of public authorities towards any proposed change in land use, and more particularly, commercial forestry, including those which come to me for ultimate decision.

As regards the specific recommendations which fall within my responsibilities, I am responding positively as follows:

(a) Forestry

Recommendations 1, 2, 3, 9, 13, 14 and 16 all relate to forestry. The Forestry Commission will have due regard to these. The detailed changes in Forestry Commission procedures proposed in recommendation 16 will be examined carefully, with other agencies as appropriate.

(b) Agriculture

DAFS will have due regard to the strategy in carrying out its duties and, in particular, will examine carefully any proposals which will allow tree planting on areas presently in agricultural or crofting use (recommendation 5).

(c) NCC

I am happy to accept recommendation 15 that consultation with the NCC should in future take place only where tree planting is proposed on existing or potential SSSIs. I look to NCC to keep the other public agencies advised of their designation programme.

It is proper to record that the proposed strategy does not totally remove the potential for conflict between conservation and forestry. There are residual problems and concerns. I am, however, greatly heartened by the attitude of the working party members and I believe that if they work within the framework and in the spirit of the agreed report, then we can resolve particular cases in a reasonable and sensitive manner. To emphasise this I am writing today advising them of my response and encouraging them to adopt the strategy and publish their views on specific recommendations relevant to their functions and duties.

Finally, I again express my gratitude to the working party members for their efforts. I hope that they will continue to co-operate in the manner achieved during the lengthy deliberations of the working party.

Trunk Road Projects

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the major trunk road projects which have been started during 1988-89 and those which he expects to start in 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Tourism

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total of Government support for the tourist industry in 1988 prices for each year from 1960 to 1988 for Scotland; and what is the projected amount for the next five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1989]: Support for tourism in Scotland is mainly provided by the Scottish tourist board (STB) and the Highlands and Islands development board (HIDB); some of the Scottish Development Agency's (SDA) programmes are also of benefit to the tourism industry. Information on the STB's expenditure since 1969 and the HIDB's since 1981 (figures for earlier years not being readily available) is set out in the table. The publication "Public Expenditure to year 1991-1992: A Commentary on the Scottish Programme", which gives information on tourism provision in future years, is due to be published shortly; copies will be placed in the Library.

New Towns

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Scottish new town development corporations towards companies established under the enterprise allowance scheme who might be in competition with existing firms.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 February 1989]: Scottish new town development corporations, where appropriate working in close liaison with their local enterprise trusts, seek to provide premises, advice and aid in securing financial assistance for which enterprises are eligible. That package of support is made available regardless of the existing competition between traders located within the designated area of the new town.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies have been prevented from operating in East Kilbride since January 1987 because of the policy of the development corporation to prevent the establishment of enterprises competing with existing firms in the new town area.

Mr. Ian Lang [holding answer 10 February 1989]: The East Kilbride development corporation has no such policy. I am aware of my hon. Friend's interest in a recent case about which I have written to him separately.

Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of exports from (a) the manufacturing, (b) agricultural and (c) mining sectors for each year since 1975 and in 1988 moneys.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The Scottish Council (Development and Industry) has been conducting a survey of Scottish manufacturing exports for a number of years. Earlier surveys were conducted on a triennial basis and coverage was low. These points should be borne in mind when interpreting the survey results in the table, which gives the best available estimates on a 1980 price basis.

Resource Management (Hospitals)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his evaluation of the resource management initiative in the Inverclyde royal hospital and other hospitals involved in the exercise.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 February 1989]: No formal evaluation has been undertaken of the two resource management projects at Inverclyde royal hospital and Bangour general hospital. The experience there, and in English hospitals, will however be of benefit as the Scottish Health Service introduces more clinically-oriented resource management in the next few years.

Schools (Assisted Places)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to his Department of the assisted places scheme in Scottish schools in each of the last five years; and if he will give the estimated cost for 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 1 March 1989]: The information is set out in the table. The assisted places scheme was introduced by the Government from 1981-82 to give parents in lower income families the opportunity to exercise choice in the education of their children.

Community Service and Probation Schemes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage the further use of community and probationary schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 March 1989]: It is our intention to develop and expand community-based disposals for offenders and to that end the Government will, with effect from 1 April this year, refund to local authorities 100 per cent. of the eligible costs of providing community service schemes. We are providing additional resources which are expected to eliminate rationing of places and temporary closure of schemes and to provide 600 extra places in each of the next three years.

A review of the use and possible development of probation in Scotland has already been announced and is proceeding.

Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures from all available sources as to the number of 16 to 18-year-olds without a YTS place and known to the local careers offices to be without work in Strathclyde region's educational divisions of (a) Argyll and Bute, (b) Ayr, (c) Dumbarton, (d) Glasgow and (e) Lanarkshire and Renfrewshire and Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The only information available on the number of young people seeking a job or a YTS place is that held by the local careers services. I understand that the numbers of young people registered at careers offices in the educational divisions of Strathclyde and in Scotland as a whole on 9 March were as follows:

Number of young people registered

It should be noted, however, that these figures are likely to include young people who have in fact found work or a YTS place since they registered and others who are seeking only work.

By way of comparison, there were 10,022 unfilled YTS places in Scotland on 24 February.

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give (a) the total number of applications received for innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) if he will give (a) the total number of applications received for investment grants from 1 April 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period and the estimated expenditure for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The information requested for the period 1 April 1988 to 28 February 1989 is as follows:

Regional enterprise grants

	Innovation grants	Investment grants
Number of applications received	85	317
Number of applications approved	32	167
Value of applications approved	£726·1 thousand	£1,004 thousand

Total gross expenditure of regional enterprise grants for the period covered is £205,000 out of a provision for 1988-89 of £1·6 million. Planned provision for 1989-90 is published in the Supply Estimates. Planned net provision for regional selective assistance and related schemes (including regional enterprise grants), consistent with the figures published in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is £80 million.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number entering employment training each month who had received (a) one training allowance, (b) three training allowances and (c) six training allowances, to be given on (i) a national and (ii) an area office basis for the latest available three months.

Mr. Nicholls: Each trainee on employment training can receive only one training allowance in any period.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total funding figures for employment training for (a) September 1988, (b) December 1988 and (c) March 1989 on (i) a national and (ii) an area office basis.

Mr. Nicholls: The total funding figures for employment training are for internal management purposes only.

Between September 1988 and March 1989 the cash limit for employment training nationally, excluding administration costs, was £493·6 million. Figures for the same period for Training Agency area offices were given in my answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 December at column 332.

British Drug Houses

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what investigations were carried out by the Health and Safety Executive following the incident at the British Drug Houses' premises in June 1988; when the results of that investigation will be published; and whether he will place a copy of the results in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) carried out a full investigation following the incident at the British Drug Houses' premises in June 1988. I will send the hon. Gentleman a copy of the results of the investigation which were published and publicised by HSE at a press conference held on 17 October 1988.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many times since 1979 the factory inspectorate has visited the British Drug Houses' premises in Poole, Dorset for the purpose of planned preventive inspections.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1979, the number of planned preventive inspections paid to British Drug Houses Ltd. premises in Poole, Dorset by Health and Safety Executive inspectors are as follows:

Number of preventive inspections

Address	Number
British Drug Houses Ltd., No. 1 Site, West Quay Road, Poole	6
British Drug Houses Ltd., Nos. 2 & 3 sites, West Quay Road, Poole	9
British Drug Houses Ltd., Broom Road, Poole	4

YTS

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reports have been published by the traininng standards advisory service, since its inception, into (a) quality of training on YTS and (b) health and safety standards on YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The information is in the Library. The training standards advisory service has issued 748 reports on the quality of training in individual YTS schemes to approved training organisations and Training Agency area and regional offices since the service began its formal programme of inspections in April 1987. The annual report of the training standards advisory service for 1987-88 summarised the main findings from inspections carried out by the service during its first year of operation. A copy has been placed in the Library.

The training standards advisory service has not published any reports on health and safety standards in YTS schemes.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the procedures for monitoring for spongiform encephalopathy workers in slaughterhouses, veterinarians and others who come into contact with untreated animal products in the course of their work.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is not operating separate procedures for monitoring spongiform encephalopathy and there have been no reported cases of this disease.

Wages Councils

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now give details of the responses to the 1988 consultation document on wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Counting replies, there were 394 responses to the consultation document on wages councils. The positions of respondents were as follows:

	For abolition	Against abolition	Inconclusive
Organisations
Employer organisations with seats on Wages Councils	23(a)	20	3
Other employer organisations	14(b)	6	2
Worker organisation with seats on Wages Councils	—	9	—
Other worker organisations	—	26	1
Other organisations	3	130	—
Individuals (d)
Individual employers on Wages Council industries	36(c)	12	—
Individual workers in Wages Council industries	—	7	—
Other individuals	4	98	—

The replies from employer organisations with seats on wages councils show a marked change of view since the 1985 consultations, when the majority wanted the system retained. In each of the six largest wages councils, which embrace 94 per cent. of workers covered by the system, a majority of the employer bodies represented want the councils abolished. Replies from both organisations and individuals raise a number of important points which my right hon. Friend intends to consider in detail before making a final decision on the councils' future later this year.

(a) Includes two respondents who support abolition in the absence of other preferred changes.
(b) Includes three respondents who support abolition in the absence of other preferred changes.
(c) Includes seven respondents who support abolition in the absence of other preferred changes.
(d) Replies with more than one signatory counted as single responses.

Voluntary Unemployment (Disqualification)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will organise a survey, on a similar but wider basis than that conducted by his Department in November 1986, into voluntary unemployment dis-qualifications to give national, and regional or district, statistics following the increase of the maximum period of disqualifications to 26 weeks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 March 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

A survey is currently being carried out to monitor the effects of increasing to 26 weeks the maximum period of disqualification for unemployment benefit in cases of voluntary unemployment. It will cover the first three months of 1989 and will provide information on the numbers and lengths of disqualifications imposed both nationally and regionally. In addition an independent agency has been commissioned to explore the impact of the increased maximum period of disqualification on decisions about leaving or taking work as well as the effects on the circumstances of those who are disqualified. We expect the results, which will be published, to be available in the summer.

ENERGY

Pluto Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the reason for the UKAEA shutting down its Pluto reactor at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell; and what is the present estimated cost of decommissioning the reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Pluto materials testing reactor at Harwell will be closed at the end of March 1990 because the prospects of business beyond the end of the forthcoming financial year are judged to be insufficient to maintain the operation of two materials testing reactors. The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has said that depending on customer requirements it expects that the other materials testing reactor—Dido—will continue in operation for several years more.

The full programme of decommissioning Pluto is being evaluated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. The planning and execution of the decommissioning programme will be carried out in consultation with the Health and Safety Executive.

Calder Hall and Chapelcross

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. to publish in full the feasibility study currently being undertaken into the development of new nuclear generating plant at Calder hall and Chapelcross when it is completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The feasibility study is a commercial document and publication will be a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on the exercise of his statutory obligations in respect of drilling platforms which are (a) parked in United Kingdom waters but not operating or (b) under tow between operating sites;

(2) at what stage in their operations his Department exercises its statutory responsibility in respect of offshore installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department exercises its responsibilities in respect of offshore installations involved in the exploration and exploitation of mineral resources in United Kingdom-controlled waters at all stages from project design to installation abandonment.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the medical supplies which are required to be carried by offshore installations; and what steps his Department takes to ensure that operators comply with requirements;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to define the duties of operators of offshore installations to employ medically qualified personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Offshore Installations (Occupational Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations 1976 require the provision of specified medical stores and medically trained persons on offshore installations. These regulations are kept under continuous review to ensure that they are properly up to-date. My inspectors enforce the requirements of these regulations during offshore inspections.

Electricity Supply Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the required rate of return from new capital investment on the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 17 March 1989 at column 389.

HEALTH

Abortion

8. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement outlining the process for obtaining consent for a general anaesthetic in order for an abortion to be performed on a girl aged under 16 years, if that girl has asked that her parents are not informed.

Mr. Freeman: In the circumstances described, written consent may be obtained from the patient herself if, in the judgment of the doctor concerned, it is in her best medical interest and she has sufficient maturity and understanding to appreciate what is involved.

14. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Islamic Medical Association, the Caring Professions Concern, or the Catholic Doctors Guild to discuss the working of the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Freeman: No requests for a meeting have been received.

15. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last paid an official visit to (a) a National Health Service abortion centre and (b) a private abortion centre; and what was the purpose of that visit.

Mr. Freeman: My colleagues and I make frequent visits to NHS and private hospitals for various purposes. To date, three visits to NHS hospitals which carry out abortions took place this month.

The most recent ministerial visit to a private hospital which is also approved under the Abortion Act 1967, took place in July 1988 and was by way of a general interest visit to see the hospital and the facilities offered.

61. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the most common technique used in the performing of late abortions in private clinics; and what this technique involves.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) and for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) on 24 January at column 531.

71. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement outlining the specific action which has so far been taken to implement the recommendations of the 1973 Select Committee on abortion.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the reports of the Lane committee on the working of the Abortion Act in 1974 and of the Select Committee on the Abortion (Amendment) Bill in 1975 and 1976. Most of their recommendations have been implemented by administrative means,. The operation of the 1967 Act continues to be monitored closely.

73. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce new regulations or legislation to curb the growing level of advertising by abortion charities in newspapers.

Mr. Freeman: All advertisements placed by registered pregnancy advice bureaux are subject to the approval of the Secretary of State and further controls are not considered necessary at this time.

Public Health (Report)

16. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations contained in the Chief Medical Officer's report on public health in England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government announced last July, that we accepted the principle of a greater commitment to the public health advanced by the Chief Medical Officer's report on "Public Health in England" and that we would be taking a number of steps to carry forward its recommendations.

These include:

- issuing general advice to health authorities on the main recommendations affecting their responsibilities including the preparation of annual reports and reviews of staffing
- the establishment of a central health monitoring unit
- additional funding for an expansion of the epidemiological function of the communicable disease surveillance centre
- initial work on updating the current law on infectious disease control.

HM Inspector of Anatomy

17. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the duties of Her Majesty's inspector of anatomy.

Mr. Mellor: Under the Anatomy Act 1984, Her Majesty's inspector of anatomy inspects and authorises licences for premises where anatomical examination is to be carried out. He licences teachers of anatomy, undertakes regular visits and site inspections to ensure that the conditions are being carried out.

"Working for Patients"

18. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision he is making under the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" for circumstances where a general practitioner overspends on his or her drug budget.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: FPCs will discuss with practices concerned any significant divergence from planned spending. Where there is a reasonable explanation for the variation the FPC will be expected to accept and accommodate it within its overall budget. If no satisfactory explanation for apparent overspending can be found the FPC will discuss with the practice what remedial action is necessary. Under no circumstances will any practice ever be required to withhold necessary medicine from a patient.

19. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the implications of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients" for the aims of his policy of care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our policy aims in the community care field remain unaltered—to promote the development of community services so that people can return to, or remain in the community and live independently wherever this is best for them. We are currently giving active consideration to the future organisation and management of community care following Sir Roy Griffiths' report and will ensure that our conclusions are consistent with our proposals in "Working for Patients".

22. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further responses he has received to the recent White Paper on the future of the National Health Service, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

32. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is to be made for the proper recruitment and training of staff and the additional cost for establishing the information technology and accountancy needed to implement the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It will be the responsibility of health authorities to decide what additional manpower they will need. There will be an even greater need for management training and development of staff. The Health Service Executive together with the NHSTA will be working closely with the service on these activities which still need to be improved further in the NHS quite apart from the implications of the White Paper.

36. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is intended that long-stay hospital care for elderly people will be included in the essential core services to be provided by National Health Service hospital trusts under proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: "Core services" is not intended to be a description of essential services but of those services of any kind which must be provided locally. In other words, as was made clear in the White Paper, core services will include all those hospital and community-based services which need to be provided on a local basis on grounds of practicability. But where patients may wish to choose the location of their treatment, districts will—under the new arrangements—be able to buy services in a more flexible way. Some long-stay care for elderly people might fall into either category. It will be for each district to consider, in the light of local circumstances, what its core services should be. It will be the responsibility of every district health authority to ensure that its population has access to a comprehensive range of services.

37. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from organisations representing Health Service workers or patients supporting the proposals in his White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As yet, we have received only a few such representations.

44. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision he is making for doctors who choose to operate a practice budget, as proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients" to treat patients where their budget is overspent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Budget-holding practices will be expected to stay within the agreed budget. But treatment must be available to patients and no circumstances will ever arise in which a practice is required to withhold necessary treatment or medicine from any patient.

Practices will be permitted to overspend in any one year by up to 5 per cent. of budget, on the basis that a corresponding reduction is made in the budget for the following year. Where overspend is due to genuine clinical needs or the changed circumstances of the practice, the practice would opt for a budgetary review. If a practice consistently overspends by more than 5 per cent. the sanction will be that it may lose the right to have a budget.

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implications for patient choice of the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A fundamental aim of the White Paper proposals is to make the Health Service more responsive to the needs of patients. We will stimulate better services to patients by encouraging suitable hospitals to apply for self-governing status, by delegating responsibility to local level and by allowing money for patients' treatment to cross administrative borders. General practitioners will be able to improve the service they offer their patients by applying for their own budgets. Patients will be able to choose their general practitioners on the basis of the services they offer. We intend to raise the performance of all hospitals and general practitioners to that of the best. The reformed Health Service will offer a better quality of service and better value for money.

46. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding his White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

49. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from general practitioners on the documents "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have recently received a considerable number of representations from individual GPs and their representative organisations on the documents "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients". These have been in person, in writing and through the helpline set up to answer GPs' queries arising from the document "General Practice in the NHS—A New Contract" which set out in more detail our plans for the family doctor service.

62. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the implications of the proposals in his White Paper, "Working for Patients", for waiting lists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" are designed to ensure that all parts of the Health Service offer the best possible service to patients. The better value for money obtained under the new system will in itself ensure an increase in levels of patient care and reduce pressure on waiting lists. To reduce waiting times for non-urgent treatment, the Government are to introduce a scheme under which 100 extra consultants can be appointed over the next three years. We are also changing the funding system used by the Health Service to make sure that patients can receive treatment in hospitals where waiting lists are shortest if they wish.

69. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the British Medical Association on "Working for Patients"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have yet to receive a formal response from the British Medical Association to the White Paper proposals.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has given consideration to introducing the White Paper reforms initially on a pilot basis in areas of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We gave very thorough consideration to the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients" during the year in which we carried out a detailed review of the Health Service. I am quite satisfied that the NHS needs reform on the lines proposed to improve its management and to improve the service to patients. Postponing full implementation would lead to uncertainty and anxiety in the Health Service without producing the benefits for patients and staff that will flow from the early introduction of the planned reforms.

Operations (Private Hospitals)

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations in the London area were contracted out to private hospitals and at what cost during 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The latest year for which information is available is 1986. In that year 1,005 patients received surgical treatment under contractual arrangements made between the Thames regions and the private sector. 1987 data will be available later this year.

Total expenditure on all contractual arrangements made by the Thames regions in 1986-87 was £19·5 million, and in 1987-88 £22·1 million. Comparable information on expenditure is not recorded by specialty.

Treatment Costs

21. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the variations in cost of treatment between different health districts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department publishes Health Service indicators annually. These include information on the average cost per acute inpatient case standardised for broad specialty mix. There may be good reasons (such as differences in case-mix not yet identifiable in the statistics) for variations in unit costs. But publication of these variations is intended to prompt action by district health authorities to eliminate unnecessary expenditure. The proposals in "Working for Patients" will provide greater incentives by encouraging both competition and greater regard to cost-effectiveness.

Self-governing Hospitals

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how regional health authorities will be required to consult with the local community on proposals for hospitals seeking self-governing status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regional health authorities will publicise fully-developed proposals in the relevant local or regional media as well as consulting community health councils. They will provide details of the application on request to members of the local community and pass on any responses to me so that I can take them into account in making my decision on the application.

Nurses (Pay)

24. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the change in nurses' pay in (a) 1975-76 and (b) the latest available year.

Mr. Mellor: Nurses received an average pay increase of 8 per cent. in 1975-76, compared with 17·9 per cent. last year. After allowing for inflation nurses pay fell by 4·3 per cent. in 1975-76 compared with an increase of 12·5 per cent. last year. Nurses will get a further average increase of 6·8 per cent. from 1 April.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

25. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to change the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Mellor: I have no such plans at present.

General Practitioners (Contracts)

26. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the effect will be of the proposed general practitioners' contracts on (a) preventive medicine and (b) patient service.

60. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the effects of the proposed general practitioners' contracts on (a) patient service and (b) preventive medicine.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposals in the report "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", which I have sent to all GPs, are intended to improve the quality of the family doctor service, and to place greater emphasis on health promotion and the prevention of ill-health. Specific changes which will improve services to patients include regular check-ups, particularly for children and people aged over 75, more health promotion clinics, more minor surgery in the GP's premises to save patients having to attend hospital and the extension of practice teams to include not only practice nurses, but also counsellors, chiropodists, physiotherapists and other health professionals.

As to preventive care, GPs will be encouraged to optimise cover for childhood immunisation and screening for cervical cancer. This will be achieved through target payments to which GPs will be entitled on reaching certain targets.

National Health Service (Contracting Out)

27. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the savings made in the last available year from the contracting out of services within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: Up to 1987-88 information collected centrally on competitive tendering related only to domestic, catering and laundry services. In the financial year 1987-88, authorities reported new cost improvement savings for these services of £35·4 million. Since 1984-85, health authorities have achieved total savings worth over £100 million for the three services.

For 1988-89, authorities planned cost improvement savings for competitive tendering of all services total £43·2 million. The outcome of these plans will be available later this year.

National Health Service (Capital Projects)

28. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the value of new capital projects for the National Health Service in the West Hertfordshire constituency where approval has been given since May 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1979 the Department has approved in principle three phases of development at Hemel Hempstead general hospital. The capital cost of each phase at approval in principle stage was for phase 1: £5·9 million; for phase 2: £3·9 million; and for phase 3: £12·4 million.

Treatment and Prevention

29. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the balance to be sought between treatment and prevention at all levels of the Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: We are as much concerned to prevent ill-health and promote good health as we are to ensure that treatment is available to all who fall ill. Not all illness is preventable. Where it is, however, we seek to ensure that the appropriate preventive services are provided (vaccination and immunisation, for example) or that steps are taken to give people the best possible advice on how to look after their health. It is not possible, or indeed appropriate, to try to quantify the balance between preventive and curative activity. Nor is it always possible to differentiate between them. A doctor treating a patient, for example, might well take the opportunity to offer advice about changing to a healthier lifestyle and I would expect any patient recovering from a heart attack to be given advice about steps to try to prevent a recurrence. Nevertheless, it must always be better to try to prevent ill health in the first place than to have to cure, or care for it later. Prevention of ill health and promotion of good health are therefore major priorities for the Government and the Health Service.

Hospital Waiting Lists

30. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about recent changes in hospital waiting lists in the Norwich health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: At September 1988 the in-patient waiting list for the Norwich health authority area stood at 9,995, as against 9,041 at March 1988.

Norwich is one of 22 districts with particular waiting problems which have been selected for special targeted help in 1989-90. Its waiting lists are to be investigated by a management team, and if the team identifies the need for an injection of funds the district will be able to apply for a special allocation from the £6 million reserved from the waiting list fund. Norwich has already received over £500,000 from the fund in 1987-88 and 1988-89, and the East Anglian regional health authority plans to make further allocations to the district next year.

Treatment (Waiting Times)

31. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce as part of his National Health Service reform proposals targets for minimum waiting times for treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regional health authorities have been asked, as part of the waiting list initiative, to agree with their districts targets for the reduction of waiting time. They are also developing with districts local statements of policy on out-patient and in-patient waiting times. These will eventually include specific targets, for example maximum wait, for specific medical conditions, including the most common waiting list conditions.

The White Paper "Working for Patients" includes a number of proposals designed to reduce waiting time for treatment. We do not, however, propose to set targets from the centre. These are best developed locally, to reflect local needs, demands and resources.

Cervical Cancer Screening

33. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any improvements have been made to the time in which results of cervical cancer screening are issued.

Mr. Mellor: We have asked district health authorities to ensure that laboratories report the results of cervical smears to the smear-taker within one month. We are informed on a quarterly basis of districts not meeting this target. In December 1988, 43 districts reported backlogs exceeding one month's work, compared with 54 in September. Among these districts the average length of backlog in December was 6·93 weeks, as against seven weeks in September. We do not have information on processing times in districts which do meet the one-month target.

Preventive Medicine

35. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement outlining his Department's latest initiatives in the field of preventive medicine.

Mr. Mellor: The Government recognise the essential role of preventive medicine in sustaining and improving people's health and have recently given priority to major initiatives such as the introduction and promotion of the MMR vaccine, the implementation of screening programmes for breast and cervical cancer and important health education campaigns on AIDS, drug abuse and coronary heart disease. We intend to develop these areas of work further and have just announced major new initiatives to combat alcohol misuse and teenage smoking, which we hope to halve by 1993, and on prevention of cancer in conjunction with the European Year of Information on Cancer.

Old Age Psychiatry

38. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he plans to make to the proposal of the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Psychiatrists that old age psychiatry should be officially recognised as a specialty within psychiatry, and that every health district should include a specialised service for the psychiatry of old age.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to be able to report that the Department has accepted the Royal College of Psychiatrist's formal request for recognition of the psychiatry of old age as a specialty. An important benefit will be that more specific information relating to the new specialty can be collected and arrangements for this are well in hand. The development of specialised services in each district is a key priority in our policy to provide a comprehensive range of services for the elderly mentally ill.

Health Inequalities

39. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy towards reducing health inequalities in different geographical areas.

Mr. Freeman: The principles advanced in the report "Public Health in England" of a greater commitment to improving public health, have been accepted. Last December, guidance was issued to health authorities about their responsibilities to improve the health of their populations, including prevention, surveillance and control of communicable disease. The Government seek to maintain the general improvements in the health of the nation and resources available next year will be equivalent to a cash increase of £2 billion which is 5 per cent. in real terms.

GPs (Rural Areas)

41. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to protect the income of general practitioners in rural areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My proposals for changes to the family doctors' remuneration system are set out in the report "General Practice in the National Health Service —A New Contract". These proposals include a rural areas supplement to the basic practice allowance designed to recognise the particular nature of practice in sparsely populated rural areas and to ensure that GPs practising in these areas are not unduly disadvantaged by the nature of the area in which they work.

51. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the likely implications for general practitioners in rural areas of his proposed changes to general practitioners' contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's proposals for linking family doctors' pay more closely to the range and quality of their services to patients are set out in the report "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", which I have sent to all GPs. The implications for rural practice are fully considered in that report. My proposals include a rural areas supplement to the basic practice allowance which is designed to recognise the particular nature of practice in sparsely populated rural areas and to ensure that GPs practising in such areas are not unduly disadvantaged by the nature of the area in which they work.

Primary Health Care

42. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has held with the health authorities concerning primary health care.

Mr. Mellor: Following publication of "Primary Health Care—An Agenda for Discussion" in April 1986, Health Ministers chaired 12 public consultation meetings in different parts of the country. Health Authorities were represented at a number of meetings. Full account was taken of the views expressed during the consultation process in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" which was published in November 1987. Ministers also discussed their proposals with the chairmen of all 90 family practitioner committees in England at a series of meetings in April and May 1988. In addition officials have held regular meetings with individual family practitioner committees and with representatives of the Society of Family Practitioner Committees and the Society of Administrators, Family Practitioner Services.

NHS Expenditure

43. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the change in spending on the National Health Service in 1976-77; and what was the change in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: In 1976-77 gross spending on the NHS in England rose by £638 million; an increase of about 1 per cent. in real terms. In 1989-90 gross spending is planned to increase by £1,685 million compared with estimated outturn in 1988-89. In addition health authorities will retain savings of nearly £300 million from a reduction in the employers' superannuation contributions. New cost improvements are expected to provide around a further £150 million. Taken together the additional resources available to the NHS in 1989-90 will be equivalent to a real terms increase of more than 5 per cent. over 1988-89.

Nurses

47. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses there were (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The number of nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff) employed in the NHS in England at 30 September 1979 and 1987 were 358,400 and 404,000 whole-time equivalents respectively.

AIDS

48. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the reports published as a result of the AIDS (Control) Act.

Mr. Mellor: No. Each regional and district health authority in England is required by the Act to publish reports annually. For information on action being taken in particular regions or districts, hon. Members may like to consult the authorities concerned.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much Government funding has been allocated to research on AIDS in 1986 and each year since; how much he expects to allocate in the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have allocated the following sums for AIDS research since 1986:

	£ million
1986-87	2·46
1987-88	10·36
1988-89	13·98

So far £14·5 million has been made available for AIDS research for 1989-90, but not all Government Departments and agencies involved in the AIDS research effort have finalised their contributions. Comparable estimates for 1990-91 are not yet available.

Food and Health

50. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's response to recent public concern on food and health.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have introduced a range of measures designed to reduce the risk of food contamination and, with industry, is continuing to consider what further action is necessary.

Both primary and secondary legislation have been under review. I recently announced my intention to consult shortly on changes in the food hygiene regulations, and the Government are presently considering the results of consultation on a wide-ranging review of the Food Act.

We have recently announced the establishment of a committee on food safety, under the chairmanship of Sir Mark Richmond, to advise Ministers on matters relating to the microbiological safety of food.

We have also taken steps, where appropriate, to reassure the public.

"Putting Patients First"

52. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that the proposals contained in the White Paper "Putting Patients First" are understood by members of the public.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My ministerial colleagues and I are taking every opportunity to publicise the review and to ensure that the public fully understands its proposals. We plan to undertake a series of visits and speaking engagements, throughout the country. In addition, a leaflet setting out our main proposals is readily available in post offices, doctors' surgeries, pharmacies and similar outlets.

Residential Care Establishments

53. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service establishments have been closed on grounds of unsuitability for residential care for the elderly or handicapped; and what information he has on their subsequent disposal.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

NHS Estate

54. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the value of (a) total National Health Service estate and (b) the land and property owned by the National Health Service that is surplus to requirements.

Mr. Freeman: The latest estimates of the value of the NHS estate, as at June 1987, have been placed in the Library. The document is a summary of the valuation of all property including that which is surplus. The realisable value of a specific site is obtained when a sale is in prospect.

Aborted Babies (Organ Sales)

55. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce legislation to ban the sale of organs from living or dead aborted babies.

Mr. Freeman: We are still considering legislation to prohibit the sale of organs for transplantation. The Polkinghorne committee is currently reviewing the existing code of practice about the use of foetuses and foetal tissue for research in the light of recent developments to the field of human tissue transplantation and other relevant research.

Capital Programmes

57. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase or decrease in spending on capital programmes between (a) 1975 and 1979 and (b) the last four available years.

Mr. Freeman: The cash expenditure by health authorities in England on capital programmes rose from £331·71 million in 1975-76 to £367·35 million in 1978-79, an increase of 10·7 per cent. over the period. The corresponding figures for 1984-85 to 1987-88 show a rise of 25·9 per cent. from £795·40 million (1984-85) to £1,001·44 million (1987-88).

Hospital Trusts

58. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from Calderdale health authority concerning the setting up of a hospital trust.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None, so far.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that the flexibility proposed in pay negotiations for hospital trusts will be limited to supplementary payments in excess of agreed national salary levels within the health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Hospital trusts will be free to follow national pay agreements or to adopt partly or wholly different arrangements.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures he will provide to ensure that the standards of medical and clinical care are maintained in hospitals following the new flexibilities and opportunities provided by the creation of hospital trusts and the creation of practice budgets for some general practitioners' practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have proposed in its White Paper "Working for Patients" that a framework of quality control known as medical audit should be established in all hospitals and GP practices in the NHS. Medical audit means that doctors keep careful records of how patients are diagnosed and treated and how successful the treatment is. The results can then be considered by other doctors to see if satisfactory clinical standards are being maintained and to advise on possible improvements.

The Government's proposals for medical audit as set out in working paper No. 6 are therefore designed precisely to ensure that the standards of medical and clinical care are maintained. They apply to all hospitals, both self-governing and health authority managed, and to all general practices including those managing practice budgets.

Rural Maternity Units

59. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding rural maternity units.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's principal objective in maternity and neonatal care is to improve the services, and in consequence ensure the safety of mothers and their babies. The second report of the maternity services advisory committee (MSAC), which we have commended to health authorities, although recognising that a woman should have a choice of where her baby is to be born, encourages delivery in a maternity unit where emergency facilities are readily available. It is for health authorities to determine the level and pattern of services, taking into account their detailed knowledge of the needs of local communities.

Hospices

63. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was allocated by his Department in 1988 to hospice projects.

Mr. Freeman: Most NHS funding for local hospice projects is from health authorities. However, in the current financial year, the Government have provided:

(i) an additional £5·5 million for health authorities towards the extra cost of the nurses' pay award as it affects their contractual and other longstanding arrangements with independent and mainly charitable hospitals and hospices; about a quarter of this sum was for hospices;

(ii) a grant of £400,000 to "Help the Hospices" for disbursement to individual hospice projects;

(iii) grants of £170,000 to the London Lighthouse and of £256,000 to the Mildmay Mission Hospital, which provide in-patient hospice units for the care of people with AIDS.

Hospital Doctors and Consultants (Discipline)

64. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he envisages any early change in the procedure to deal with alleged disciplinary misdemeanours by hospital doctors or consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: NHS review working paper 7 "NHS Consultants: Appointments, Contracts and Distinction Awards" states the Government's intention to start negotiations with the profession on the basis of proposals contained in the report of the joint working party which examined hospital and community doctors' and dentists' disciplinary procedures. The report, which was completed last year, contains a number of useful recommendations including a new procedure for dealing with cases of professional misconduct and incompetence which warrant disciplinary action short of dismissal and improvements both to existing disciplinary procedures and the system of appeals to me against dismissal. The working paper makes it clear that our aim is to introduce new arrangements by the end of the year at the latest.

Medical Technicians and Physicists

65. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement about the recruitment and retention of medical technicians and medical physicists in the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 24 January to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) at column 866.

Down's Syndrome

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current incidence of Down's syndrome; and what it was (a) 10 years and (b) 20 years ago.

66. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the incidence of Down's syndrome in newborn infants in (a) the latest year for which figures are available, (b) 10 years previously and (c) 20 years previously.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Figures are derived from a voluntary system of notification which collects information on cases reported at birth or up to seven days therafter. It is, therefore, likely to be an incomplete measure of the total number of babies affected.

Number of babies born with Down's syndrome and rate per 10,000 total and live births in England and Wales for 1967, 1977 and 1987

Year	All births		Live births
	Number	Rate	Number	Rate
1967	613	7·3	594	7·1
1977	425	7·4	413	7·3
1987	450	6·6	443	6·5

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those hospitals which provide specialist services for the therapeutic and remedial treatment of Down's syndrome;

(2) what recent steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that therapeutic as well as remedial treatment is available for Down's syndrome.

Mr. Freeman: No information is available centrally about hospitals providing such specialist services and no action has been taken by the Department to make treatment available specifically for Down's syndrome. Health care and treatment for people with a mental handicap and associated physical conditions caused by Down's syndrome is provided by the mental handicap and generic services in hospitals and in the community, including primary care services. When specialist care or treatment is required for an acute or chronic condition referral is arranged in the usual way. The Department has been funding research on Down's syndrome, and other departmentally-funded research in the field of mental handicap is also relevant to people with Down's syndrome.

Waiting Lists

67. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the variations in waiting lists between different health districts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposals in our White Paper "Working for Patients" will help reduce the variations in waiting times between health authorities. 100 extra consultants will be appointed over the next three years, and these will be targeted at the districts and specialities where waiting times are the longest. We will also change the funding system used by the health service to enable patients to receive treatment in hospitals where the wait is shortest if they wish.

We have made £86 million available over three years through our waiting list fund to enable hundreds of thousands of extra patients to be treated from the waiting lists. Next year some £6 million of the fund will be used to give special targeted help to districts with particular waiting problems.

Northern Regional Health Authority

68. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: On 17 May at the next of the regular meetings my right hon. and learned Friend holds with all regional chairmen.

Medical Ethical Committees

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of medical ethical committees.

Mr. Freeman: Medical ethics are a matter for the professions concerned. Some medical bodies have established medical ethical committees to advise their members—these are outside the remit of the Department of Health.

Within the National Health Service each health authority is required to have a research ethics committee to supervise the ethics of clinical research investigations. The work of these committees is explained in health circular HSC (IS) 153, which is available in the Library.

Health Authorities (Membership)

72. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received opposing his proposals to remove local government representatives from health authority membership.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A few. We have also received letters which positively support our proposals.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's research effort on the sexual abuse of children.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 27 January at columns 795-98. Within the Department's research programme child protection was made a priority theme in 1988-89. This reflects the need for research into child abuse and child sexual abuse. The Department, in collaboration with other Government Departments, is putting together a full and effective programme of child protection research. Government-funded research on child abuse including child sexual abuse has been commissioned and is being planned by the Scottish Office, the Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland), the Economic and Social Research Council and is under consideration by the Home Office.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received a copy of the Children's Society publication entitled "Working with Sexually Abused Children;" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. I am sure that the resource pack from the Children's Society will prove to be a helpful tool for professionals working with children who have been or may have been sexually abused.

Weil's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 February to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent North, Official Report, column 851, why members of angling organisations are not issued with warning leaflets alerting them to be vigilant about Weil's disease.

Mr. Freeman: The leaflets referred to in my earlier reply are also available to anglers in areas where there is risk of Weil's disease.

Alcohol and Drug Addicts

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure the continuance of the services for alcohol and drug addicts provided by Accept.

Mr. Freeman: The funding of local services is a matter for the local statutory authorities concerned. However, I understand that funding to ensure the continuance of Accept's activities is being provided by the London regional health authorities who have such services within their regions.

Secure Units

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regional health authorities provide secure units for people with mental illness or psychiatric disorder and with mental handicap; how many beds are now open in each unit; and how many further units or beds are firmly planned.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 16 March at columns 327-30. The only regional secure unit specifically for mentally handicapped people is the Sycamores unit at Borocourt hospital, Reading.

Pharmaceutical Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to require the inspection of pharmaceutical wholesaling establishments supplying the National Health Service with parallel imports, in those countries which are not a party to the pharmaceutical inspection convention.

Mr. Mellor: No. Arrangements for inspection of pharmaceutical wholesalers in other member states are a matter for the competent authorities in such states.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to seek concerted action by the United Kingdom's European Community partners in relation to recent problems associated with an unlicensed counterfeit medicine imported into the United Kingdom from Greece.

Mr. Mellor: The representatives of the drug regulatory agencies in the European Community last week affirmed their commitment to inform each other without delay of any incident involving counterfeit materials. The United Kingdom has requested a meeting of Community experts to discuss aspects of the EC parallel importing scheme and this will include counterfeiting

Toxoplasmosis

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to set up a national screening service for pregnant women for congenital toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Mellor: As with other maternal infections the question of toxoplasmosis in pregnancy, including the possibility of screening, is kept under regular review. We are currently seeking the views of experts in this field in order to consider what action may be necessary.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give national figures by district health authority area of cases of congenital toxoplasmosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Congenital toxoplasmosis is not a legally notifiable condition; data on incidence are not therefore available. However, data on deaths occurring where congenital toxoplasmosis[1] has been assigned as the underlying cause of death[2] are available. During the years 1983-87 there were six such deaths registered in England and Wales.

[1] International Classification of Diseases, (ninth revision) 271.2 (part).

[2] Ages 28 days and over from 1986 onwards.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures, by district health authority area, of recorded screenings for congenital toxoplasmosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information centrally. A recent survey of toxoplasmosis in pregnancy in west Glamorgan found an overall incidence of maternal infection with toxoplasma of two in 1,000.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning his Department's policy on health education in the prevention of toxoplasmosis with special regard to prevention of the infection of pregnant women.

Mr. Mellor: Hygiene measures can help to prevent infection with toxoplasmosis and are especially important for pregnant women. They include washing hands after working with raw meat and handling cat litter, and cooking all meat thoroughly. Pregnant women should also avoid contact with young kittens. The health education authority's leaflet "You and Your Pet" contains advice on toxoplasmosis and on general hygiene in relation to pets.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's research into a vaccine for toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Mellor: The Department does not itself conduct research into vaccines or other medicines, but is always prepared to consider well-founded proposals. Research in the United States of America into a possible vaccine against toxoplasmosis indicates that its development is a long way off.

Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which regional health authority areas there has been a reduction in the proportion of children suffering from dental caries over the past five years; and which of these areas officially has fluoridated drinking water.

Mr. Freeman: Surveys of dental caries levels in children were carried out in England in 1983 and in 1985-86. The results, given in the table[1], showed that there was little change between 1983 and 1985-86. In none of the regions is drinking water wholly fluoridated.

Recent studies have shown that fluoridation of water has continued to produce important benefits in those areas where schemes operate over and above the general decline in caries over the last 15 years.

Operating Department Assistants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operating department assistants are trained each year; and how many operating department assistants leave the National Health Service each year.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Whitley Councils

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for the replacement of the Whitley councils.

Mr. Mellor: None.

General Practitioners (Contracts)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table similar to those contained in the new contract for general practitioners document, for the income of a general practitioner with a list size of 1,000 using the average number of new referrals, night visits and the age of patients for a list size of 1,000.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the first example in appendix F of "A New Contract" which fits his specification. Copies of this document are available in the Vote Office and the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has made any assessment of the consequences which would result from a large number of general practitioners resigning from the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Obviously, the consequences could be serious but I have no reason to believe that anything of the kind will happen.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing for each of the regions of England how many general practitioners are men and how many are women.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

Unrestricted principals England as at 1 October 1987

	Total	Male	Female
England	24,922	19,718	5,204
Northern	1,584	1,309	275

Voluntary Sector (Grants)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when voluntary organisations will know the level of section 64 grants for the next financial year.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a large number of applications for new and renewal section 64 grants in 1989-90, the total of which far exceed the resources available. I am currently considering with my ministerial colleagues how resources are to be allocated and I expect to be able to notify organisations of their awards shortly.

Medical Students

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any projected increases in medical student numbers by universities and hospitals in the United Kingdom over the next 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The report of the second advisory committee for medical manpower planning was published in January 1989. In the light of its conclusions, based on projections for the supply and demand of doctors over the next 20 years, we do not consider immediate action is indicated to alter the current medical school intake in the United Kingdom. The report also recommended that the manpower situation should be kept under review and this we intend to do.

Practice Nurses

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to provide the same opportunity for practice nurses to attend locally-based courses as are available for other branches of nursing;

(2) what are the criteria for reimbursing practice nurses for training, and what is his policy on practice nurses receiving the same funding for training as other branches of nursing;

(3) what guidance his Department has given to family practitioner committees regarding the apportioning of funding for courses and the restrictions on eligibility for family practice nurses to obtain training and grants for courses.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities and family practitioner committees should collaborate locally in making arrangements for meeting the continuing education and training needs of nurses, midwives and health visitors. Under a central initiative in 1988-89, more than 500 places were provided in educational establishments, free of charge to practice nurses, based on the curriculum approved by the four United Kingdom national boards for nursing, midwifery and health visiting. We hope to repeat the arrangements in 1989-90. Depending on the outcome of discussions with the representatives of the medical profession on the changes set out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health", we propose to permit family practitioner committees to take account of the cost of training practice nurses when allocating resources to GPs for staff and premises from 1 April 1990.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West of 9 February, Official Report, column 802, what plans he has to improve public awareness in respect of the integration of mentally handicapped people into local communities.

Mr. Mellor: We are discussing with the voluntary organisation CMH completion of the project that we have funded it to undertake to assess ways of improving public acceptance of people with a mental handicap moving into the community. We shall be considering other steps in the light of this project.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what was the outcome of the recent meeting between his Department and the campaigning group, SANE, in relation to the possibility of setting up a study to monitor mentally ill patients discharged from hospital care.

Mr. Freeman: The proposals made by SANE are under active consideration and we expect to reach a decision shortly.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of staff on duty attached to emergency vehicles for each shift for December 1988 and January 1989 of the London ambulance service.

Mr. Freeman: The figures are as follows:

	Early	Late	Night
1 December 1988	330	290	182
2 December 1988	324	272	170

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ask the disablement services authority to reconsider its directive which limits the supply of spare artificial limbs to certain categories of people; and if he will seek an assessment from the authority of how much money it hopes to save by this new ruling.

Mr. Mellor: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to which the right hon. Member should address this question.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, before the disablement services authority was established (a) what was the policy regarding the provision of spare artificial limbs, (b) which people were entitled to them and (c) what proportion of those entitled had them provided.

Mr. Mellor: Spare artificial limbs were issued only where an artificial limb and appliance centre medical officer could see that there were clinical grounds for the issue.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has discussed the question of benzodiazepine addiction with his counterparts with other European Community member states.

Mr. Freeman: We have had no such discussions.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to see a reduction in the number estimated to be addicted to benzodiazepines.

Mr. Freeman: There are no precise figures to show the level of benzodiazepine dependence, although recent years have seen a reduction in the number of prescriptions dispensed for these drugs. A number of measures have been taken to tackle the problem of benzodiazepine dependence, including the issue of advice to doctors on the careful use of these drugs, the promotion of alternatives to their use, and the development of services to help those dependent on them.

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being undertaken into the best methods of coping with the side-effects and withdrawal symptoms caused by benzodiazepines.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The main agency through which the Government support medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that the MRC is supporting a team at the Institute of Psychiatry, London, which is examining the effects of benzodiazepines on mental function, and exploring ways of helping patients to discontinue this medication.

Drugs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any limits are placed on the inducements given to doctors by drug companies to persuade them to prescribe particular drugs for their patients.

Mr. Mellor: The pharmaceutical price regulation scheme explicitly excludes gifts and hospitality other than that provided for medical symposia from the costs accepted in the price of NHS medicines.

Dementia

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish his best estimates of the total number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease;

(2) if he will publish his best estimates of the total number of people suffering from dementia.

Mr. Freeman: The information available centrally relates only to admissions to National Health Service mental illness hospitals or units with a main diagnosis of dementia (International Classification of Diseases 290·0, 290·1, 290·2, 290·3, 290·4, 290·8, 290·9). Dementia in Alzheimer's disease is included under these diagnoses. In 1986, the most recent year for which information is available, there were 20,848 admissions with a diagnosis of dementia in its various forms. It is not known what proportion of these admissions are in fact dementia in Alzheimer's disease. The total figure above is not the number of patients suffering from dementia as a patient can be discharged and re-admitted more than once during a year. We do not hold information on the number of patients as opposed to admissions. Also not all sufferers are admitted to a NHS mental illness hospital or unit and so do not appear in official statistics.

Ancillary Workers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the National Health Service ancillary workers' pay claim.

Mr. Mellor: Since the last time this matter was raised during questions on 1 November 1988 we have received two letters from hon. Members and one from a member of the public.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been moved into the community from psychiatric institutions in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of discharges to the community from NHS mental illness hospitals and units in England after a duration of stay of one year or more for the last five years for which information is currently available.

Year	Number of Discharges
1982	3,465
1983	3,563
1984	3,928
1985	3,441
1986	3,751

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer 20 February, Official Report, column 528, he will provide reference to any information concerning listeria considered during his Department's expert group's appraisal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 27 February 1989]: As I said in my answer of 20 February 1989 at column 529 the group considered a wide range of information on the scientific basis of the cook-chill system from a variety of sources. To identify any particular material considered by the group would tend to give that aspect of the group's work undue prominence and would not properly reflect the broad information base available to the members of the group.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether a safe level of listeria monocytogenes in pre-cooked chilled food has been established.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The 1988 World Health Organisation working group indicated that virtually nothing is known about the infectious dose of listeria monocythogenes, although it may be related to host susceptibility. This is why we have given advice to pregnant women and other vulnerable groups to avoid certain soft cheeses, and to reheat thoroughly cook-chilled meals and ready-to-eat poultry. We are also working with the food industry to consider optimal production methods which will reduce the levels of listeria in foods as far as is practicable.

NHS (Agency Staff)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of agency staff employed in the National Health Service; intemising (a) what jobs they do, (b) what the agencies are paid for their work and (c) what comparable payments are made to those same grades employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 March 1989]: A breakdown of agency nursing and midwifery staff and medical and dental staff employed in the National Health Service is shown in the table.

We do not collect figures for other agency staff or information on health authorities' expenditure specifically for agency staff centrally.

It is for authorities at local level to determine with agencies rates of pay. However, the Department has set the following guidelines for nursing and midwifery staff and medical and dental staff respectively:

That authorities pay nurse agencies a maximum calculated on the mean of the appropriate NHS nursing staffs pay scale for the grade plus the agency commission and the employer's national insurance contribution.

Payments to locum medical agencies are currently to be restricted to no more than was being charged at 31 March 1988. Future arrangements are under consideration.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy to allow electronic tagging of residents or patients in residential homes and nursing homes or hospitals.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The management of a resident or patient is a matter for the local judgment of those professionally concerned with his or her care.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Scotland (Taxation)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his best estimate on the most recent information available as to the annual amount of direct and indirect taxation raised in Scotland; and what is the annual total of central Government and local government expenditure there for a similar period.

Mr. Major: For the latest information on identifiable Scottish public expenditure I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on 25 October 1988 at columns 120-29. The latest available information on income tax in Scotland for 1986-87 amounts to £3,250 million. In the same year national insurance contributions are estimated to have amounted to £2,121 million, and local authority rates (excluding water rates) paid in Scotland totalled £1,653 million. Figures for remaining major elements of direct taxation and for indirect taxation are not collected on a regional basis.

Family Incomes

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage increase in the real take-home pay of a married man with two children on half average male earnings from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real take-home pay for a married man with two children on half average earnings is 23 per cent. higher in 1988-89 than in 1978-79.

Personal Allowances

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the personal allowance for a married man would be if it had been increased in line with earnings in each year since 1979.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the personal allowance for a married man would be now if increased in line with earnings in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If personal allowances had been increased in line with the growth in male average earnings since 1978-79, the married man's allowance would be £4,525 in 1989-90.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will visit the Nottingham, North constituency to explain the consequences of his Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the Nottingham, North constituency.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the community charge is to be liable to value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The community charge will not be subject to value added tax.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those areas of public employment for which there is no funded pension scheme; if he will tabulate the liabilities of current funding by category, type, Ministry and any other appropriate description; and if he will list those industries that have been privatised whose employees now have a funded pension scheme.

Mr. Brooke: The majority of public service schemes —Civil Service, armed forces, judiciary, fire, police—are unfunded and financed on a "pay-as-you-go" basis, although two—the National Health Service and the teachers—are "notionally funded" (that is, in his periodic valuations the Government Actuary creates a notional fund, and calculates whether this is in balance, in surplus, or in deficit). Only the local government superannuation scheme and the parliamentary pension scheme are fully funded, although a number of small non-departmental public bodies (for example, Medical Research Council) also have funded schemes.

The local government superannuation scheme in England and Wales comprises 88 separate funds which are valued by an actuary every five years (three years from 1 April this year). Copies of these valuation reports, which contain estimates of the liabilities, are sent to the Secretary of State for the Environment. The information is not collated centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. In the case of the parliamentary scheme, the liabilities are set out in the Government Actuary's report (House of Commons paper No. 13) based on a valuation at 1 April 1984 and laid before the House in 1986.

Private pension scheme arrangements are a matter for the individual company. However, the principal privatised industries—British Gas, British Telecom, British Airways —had funded schemes before privatisation as well as after.

Interest Rates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Interest rates are set at an appropriate level to maintain downward pressure on inflation.

Invisible Trade Balance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact payments to the EEC had on the invisible trade balance in (a) December 1988 and (b) 1988 as a whole.

Mr. Moore: Invisible trade figures are collected only on a quarterly basis. In the fourth quarter of 1988 the invisible trade balance showed a surplus of £821 million after unusually high net payments to the EEC of £840 million. For 1988 as a whole, net payments to the EEC were £1,442 million and invisible trade recorded a surplus of £5,892 million.

Unitary Tax

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to implement section 812 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988; and if he will make a statement on unitary tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Some two years ago Her Majesty's Government announced that they were prepared to defer initiating action under what is now section 812 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 (previously section 54 of the Finance Act 1985) in recognition of the progress that had been made towards resolving the unitary tax issue. The Government further made it clear that if it became necessary to take action after 31 December 1988, it would not apply to dividends paid on or before that date.

The Government believe that progress has been made in the last two years but that problems remain, in particular the election fee which companies have to pay in order not to be subject to worldwide unitary tax. It proposes to review the situation jointly with the United States Treasury later this year. If it became necessary to take action on or after 31 December 1989 this would not apply to dividends paid on or before that date.

Crown Premises

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contributions will be made in lieu of community charges in respect of Crown premises or persons resident in them.

Mr. Major: There are two circumstances in which contributions will be made in lieu of community charges in respect of Crown premises or persons resident in them.

First, persons who are resident in Crown property which is designated by the Secretary of State will be exempt from the personal community charge and, in Scotland, the personal community water charge. A contribution in lieu of those charges will be made to the local authority by the relevant Government Department or Crown body, which will recover those charges from the residents concerned.

Second, any contribution in lieu of the standard community charge and, in Scotland, the standard community water charge which would otherwise be payable in respect of premises which are occupied by a Government Department or other Crown body will be made to the local authority by the Government Department or Crown body occupying those premises.

Finance Bill

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published.

Mr. Major: The Finance Bill will be published on Thursday 13 April.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of the average private medical insurance policy with comprehensive cover for (a) a pensioner aged over 60 years, (b) a pensioner aged over 70 years and (c) a pensioner aged over 80 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: Information broken down in this way is not available.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make available the estimates used in his calculation of £40 million tax relief for 1989-90 for the private medical insurance premium for the average pensioner;

(2) what is his estimate of the average premium paid for private medical insurance by those aged over 60 years who currently hold private medical insurance policies;

(3) what is his estimate of the proportion of the £40 million set aside for tax relief for private medical insurance that will go to top-rate taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: Tax relief on private medical insurance for the over-60s will not be available until 1990-91, when about 330,000 tax units (single people and married couples) aged 60 or above are expected to qualify for tax relief on medical insurance. The average subscription per tax unit is estimated to be about £400. Around one half of the cost of relief is expected to be received by higher-rate taxpayers.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of private medical insurance tax relief if (a) 1 million (b) 1·2 million (c) 1·5 million and (d) 2 million qualify for tax relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: The cost of relief at the various levels of take-up specified would depend on the type of policies taken out and the marginal tax rate of the payers of the premiums. These would be likely to vary with the level of take-up.

Schedule E

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the numbers of taxpayers who will be affected by his proposals to simplify the assessment of earnings under schedule E; and what proportion are on a marginal rate of 40 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 March 1989]: It is estimated that around half a million taxpayers—mainly directors—will be affected by these proposals and that about 40 per cent. will be higher-rate taxpayers.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the transitional arrangements will be applied to those making a new investment in personal equity plans before 5 April.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The transitional arrangements for PEPs are contained in the personal equity plan regulations 1989 laid before Parliament on 14 March. Plan managers will be able, if they wish, to operate on the basis of the improved provisions announced in the Budget from 6 April 1989, but where plan managers are unable to adapt their systems to apply the improvements by that time, they have until 31 December 1989 to do so. The new requirement that investment and unit trusts must have 75 per cent. of their investments in United Kingdom equities does not apply until 6 April 1990.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year from 1984-85 the cost of Central Office of Information services recovered from each client Department.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 March 1989]: Information on departmental publicity expenditure incurred through the Central Office of Information is a matter for departmental Ministers and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Details of departmental expenditure on publicity for the financial years 1984-85 to 1988-89 were supplied by Ministers in response to questions from the hon. Member and published in the Official Report November-December 1986; July 1987; December 1987-January 1988; and March 1989.

Taxi Buses

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that the taxi buses providing scheduled services in consequence of the recent initiatives on transport policy are exempted from value added tax on the same basis as large public service buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 21 March 1989]: The zero-rating of bus fares is limited to vehicles capable of carrying 12 or more passengers, that is, those which are used, in the main, to provide the bulk of mass public transport. The Government have no plans to extend zero-rating to smaller vehicles.

TRANSPORT

Hazardous Substances (Road Transport)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute an immediate investigation into (a) the carriage of dangerous substances by road, (b) the numbers of heavy goods vehicles involved in accidents in 1988-89 and (c) the numbers of heavy goods vehicles carrying dangerous loads that were involved in accidents over the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The regulations governing the carriage of these goods by road are regularly reviewed and updated. The figure for accidents in 1988 involving HGVs is not yet available. In 1987 it was 15,107. This is some 18 per cent. lower than 10 years ago.

There were 101 accidents involving vehicles carrying these goods reported to HSE in 1986-87. This was the first year separate records were kept. The comparable figure for 1987-88 was 68.

Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the local authorities that have been appointed to design trunk road schemes valued in excess of £1 million and (b) where competition has been invited for the design of such schemes the local authorities which have been invited to submit competitive bids.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since fee competition between consultants was introduced in January 1985, the local authorities listed in the Table have been appointed to design trunk road construction and improvement schemes estimated to cost over £1 million.

Local authority	Number of schemes
1. Bedfordshire CC	1
2. Cambridgeshire CC	3
3. Cheshire CC	1
4. Cornwall CC	3
5. Cumbria CC	3
6. Devon CC	1
7. Dorset CC	2
8. Durham CC	1
9. Gloucestershire CC	1
10. Hampshire CC	1
11. Hertfordshire CC	1
12. Humberside CC	1
13. Kent CC	1
14. Norfolk CC	1
15. Northamptonshire CC	2
16. Northumberland CC	1
17. North Yorkshire CC	1
18. Shropshire CC	1
19. Staffordshire CC	2
20. Suffolk CC	2
21. Warwickshire CC	1
22. West Sussex CC	1
23. Wiltshire CC	2

As already explained, local highway authorities are also appointed to design major maintenance schemes costing over £1 million in the areas where the trunk road network is managed by them. They do not bid for either type of work.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy on whether the design of trunk road schemes valued in excess of £1 million should be carried out in the public or private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our policy is to allocate the design work for trunk road construction and improvement schemes estimated to cost over £1 million to private sector consultants, through competitive tendering. Exceptionally, such work may be awarded without recourse to competition, to the highway authority in whose area the scheme lies. This is where the authority has already carried out some of the design and allocation to a consultant would involve delay or extra costs; where the project is interlinked with an adjacent local highway authority scheme; or where there is a large amount of traffic management and control which would involve the authority in any event.

The design of major maintenance schemes costing over £1 million is handled by the authority or consultant who is responsible for managing the maintenance of the part of the trunk road network in question. Most of the network is managed by local highway authorities.

British Rail (Disciplinary Procedure)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the role of British Transport police in matters concerning British Rail's disciplinary procedure.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that the British Transport police have no role in British Rail's disciplinary procedures unless it appears that a criminal offence may be involved.

Nuclear Materials Carriage Flasks

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he received any request for a transport licence for nuclear materials carriage flasks that arrived on the Pacific Sandpiper in Barrow on 16 February.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport of all nuclear materials must be made in accordance with national and international regulations. The certificates required to comply with these regulations were issued by my Department for the shipment aboard the Pacific Sandpiper that arrived on 16 February.

Dangerous Freight

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations has he received regarding the transport by road of dangerous freight; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many road accidents have taken place in each of the past five years in which at least one of the vehicles involved was carrying dangerous freight, what casualties were caused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have received several letters from members of the public, either direct or forwarded by hon. Members. On accident figures, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 20 March at column 397.

There were no fatalities, and three casualties caused by the goods being carried in the two years 1986-1988. While not complacent, I regard these figures as representing a good safety record.

Springburn-Bellgrove Railway Crash

Mr. Michael Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when he expects to receive the results of the railway inspectorate's report on the Springburn to Bellgrove railway line crash; and if he will be making a statement.

Mr. Portillo The inquiry into the Bellgrove accident is to be held on 19-21 April at the Merchants house of Glasgow, 7 West George street, Glasgow. The chief inspecting officer of railways will be presenting his report to me at the earliest opportunity. I cannot, at this time, give any indication when that will be.

Coach Companies (Service)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to monitor the standards of service offered by National Express Bus Company and other national coach companies, and complaints thereon by customers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The services offered by National Express Bus Company and other coach operators are a matter for their commercial judgment. Any customer complaints can be dealt with by normal consumer protection legislation. Long-distance services were deregulated under the Transport Act 1980, but operators are still subject to the control of PSV operator licensing. PSV drivers are subject to driver licensing and driver hours legislation.

Road Deaths

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, upon what information he based his recent statement that the three main causes of road deaths were drunken drivers, dangerous drivers and motor cyclists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A comma appeared in the press reports after the word 'drivers'. The point I was making was that the main cause of road deaths are drunk drivers, dangerous drivers and dangerous motor cyclists. We know from coroners' reports that alcohol is a key factor in about a third of road deaths.

Accident causation studies show that human error, resulting in dangerous driving is a prime factor in 70 per cent of accidents and a factor in 95 per cent.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of all road deaths in the latest year for which figures are available involved (a) motor cycles, (b) dangerous drivers and (c) drunken drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: (a) In 1987 about 17 per cent. of road deaths, 870 out of 5,125, occurred in accidents that involved motor cyclists.

(b) As cause of accident is not collected it is not possible to determine from the available data how many accidents involved dangerous driving.

(c) During 1986, the latest year for which complete drink-drive figures are available, it is estimated that 950 out of the 5,382 road deaths, that is, nearly 18 per cent., occurred in accidents where at least one driver was over the legal alcohol limit. Some of these accidents also involved motor cycles and therefore will be included in the previous figure.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, 7 February, Official Report, column 613, he will make it his policy to publish the final version of the review report on the international transport of nuclear materials to coincide with its consideration at the standing advisory group of the International Atomic Energy Agency in April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review report is an internal International Atomic Energy Agency document. Publication is therefore a matter for the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the national arrangements involving radioactivity scheme does not apply to emergency procedures involving the rail transport or road transport of spent nuclear fuel.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Emergency procedures to deal specifically with incidents involving nuclear fuel flasks have been provided and are administered by the Central Electricity Generating Board in England and Wales and the South of Scotland electricity board in Scotland.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all rail accidents involving trains carrying spent nuclear fuel, by date and place; and if any radioactivity has been released from any flask or container involved in a rail accident since such transport began.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No incident involving a nuclear fuel flask in transit has led to a release of radioactivity since this traffic was started 30 years ago. From time to time there have been minor incidents, usually involving empty flasks. These are of no radiological significance. The Department does not keep statistics on them.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy at the European Council of Transport Ministers in Brussels on 14 March to propose a study of the safety of road, rail and air transport of plutonium, enriched uranium, tritium and spent nuclear fuel within and from the European Community.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No such study is needed. The transport of radioactive materials is required to comply with international standards laid down by United Nations bodies. The regulations are kept under continuous review.

Research Reactor (Greenwich)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what transport regulations will cover the safety of the moving of the Royal Navy's research reactor at Greenwich royal naval college to Plymouth in 1993.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The movement of the Royal Navy research reactor will be made in full compliance with national and international transport regulations for the safe transport of radioactive materials that apply at the time of the transfer.

A list of the current regulations has been sent to the hon. Member.

Rubbish Disposal at Sea

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, 16 March, Official Report, column 287, what reports he has now received from his marine surveyors concerning the adequacy of arrangements made on ships to ensure compliance with annex V of the Marpol convention prohibiting the disposal into the sea of plastic, synthetic rope and other rubbish.

Mr. Portillo: Garbage generated on board ship can be disposed of either into shore reception facilities or, in the case of non-plastics, can be retained on board for disposal at sea outside prescribed limits. Surveyors have not been asked to report on the arrangements on board ships. The essential point of their inspection is to remind those on board that an offence would be committed if garbage is illegally discharged into the sea; and any arrangements made should be designed to avoid such a discharge.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reports of alleged infringements of regulations S.I. 1988 No. 2292 and S.I. 2293 relating to garbage and merchant shipping have been investigated by his Department since they came into effect.

Mr. Portillo: No reports have been received of specific instances alleging infringements either under the Prevention of Pollution by Garbage Regulations (1988 No. 2292) or under the Reception Facilities for Garbage Regulations (1988 No. 2293).

Pavement Parking

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce proposals to tackle problems of pavement parking.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to do so shortly.

Lindane Container (Loss)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to recover the container of lindane insecticide lost in the Channel; and what is being done to monitor the situation.

Mr. Portillo: A container containing lindane has been lost in an area of the Channel in which, under a bilateral agreement, the French authorities are responsible for co-ordinating counter-pollution action.

The Department's marine pollution control unit has maintained close contact with the relevant French authorities throughout the incident and has offered United Kingdom assistance to locate and recover the missing container. We have been assured that they have all the resources they need for the time being.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the French authorities are taking samples of water, sediments and fish.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what objectives he has given Mr. Newton on taking up his post as chairman of London Regional Transport.

Mr. Paul Channon: I have today sent the following letter to Mr. Newton setting his initial remit.

You take up your position at a time when London Regional Transport faces a number of major challenges.

First, and the highest priority, is to carry through the actions needed following Mr. Fennell's report on the King's Cross tragedy. A vigorous start has already been made on this vital task.

Second, there is a need to provide for the projected continuing increase in traffic particularly on the Underground, and for the growing public transport needs of Docklands.

Third, there is the need to improve the quality of services and the security afforded to the traveller.

Fourth, it is necessary to complete the effective restructuring of London Buses in order to improve performance and prepare for deregulation in the early 1990s.

The Board under your chairmanship will tackle these tasks in the light of LRT's general statutory and financial duties, which include the duty to have due regard to efficiency, economy and safety of operation.

We need a clear long term strategy and a framework of medium term objectives that I would settle with you. For this, I should like you to review LRT's plans in all areas, and put to me by the end of June 1989 your proposals for a management, investment and financial strategy which aims to give London safe and reliable rail and bus services; provides good value for money; and, so far as possible, transfers costs from the taxpayer to the passenger and other beneficiaries. As part of establishing the objectives I would like to agree with you a set of quality of service targets for the Underground.

You should know that the present provision for LRT in the Government's expenditure plans is for external finance of £287 million in 1989-90 and for the following levels of investment:

	£ million
1989-90	486
1990-91	540
1991-92	461

I understand that the London Regional Transport board has today appointed Mr. Newton as chairman of London Underground Limited and Mr. Telford Beasley as deputy chief executive of London Regional Transport. I welcome these appointments.

Vehicle Movements (Monitoring)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prohibit the collection of data in a form that can trace or monitor the movements of a particular vehicle; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 20 March 1989]: Surveys of vehicle movements provide useful statistical data for transport planning and analysis. No such data on individual vehicle movements collected by the Department are divulged to third parties. Computerised data would be subject to the Data Protection Act and all statistical data are dealt with under the Government statistical service code of practice published as Command Paper 9270 in June 1984.

The Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Bill would provide that the Secretary of State could not require information to be furnished to him in a way which enabled him to identify individual drivers of motor vehicles equipped to receive driver information.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what procedures are operational to provide ministerial permission at short notice to waive the collection of tolls at the Severn bridge when requested in the interests of road safety;

(2) what procedures are available to waive the collection of tolls at the Severn bridge in order speedily to reduce tailbacks of traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 March 1989]: Under section 6(4) of the Severn Bridge Act 1965 the Secretary of State may direct the suspension of toll collection by reason of any accident or other emergency if it appears to him necessary to do so and without making an order or giving notice. Under these powers a procedure has been established for the rapid waiving of tolls when necessary. The use of this procedure would not be justified solely by large volumes of traffic.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the totals and percentages of motorway fatal and other serious accidents, recorded in tailbacks that are (a) predicted and (b) unexpected in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many fatal and other serious accidents on motorways occurred in tailbacks of stationary or slow-moving traffic in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 March 1989]: The stats19 road accident report form does not record whether there was a tailback at the scene of a road accident.

Civil Servants (Air Travel)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what criteria airlines are selected for purchase of tickets for civil servants travelling on official duties (a) within the United Kingdom, (b) in Europe and (c) elsewhere; whether travel agents are used; and whether block bookings are made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 March 1989]: The overall objective in organising travel for civil servants is to obtain best value for money and airlines are selected on this basis. If British airlines can match others in terms of cost and convenience they would normally be used.

Each Government Department makes its own booking arrangements.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92, the provision for value added tax liability on new construction within the budgets given for local authority capital spending on roads and transport in table 8-1 of "the Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" chapter 8.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local authorities have always been able to reclaim VAT paid on any expenditure not for a business activity. This rule now automatically extends to their road construction programme. VAT paid by their business activities, such as their airport companies, is covered by the normal reclaim procedure applicable to the private sector. Extra provision is not needed.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to re-evaluate the suitability of the HS 748 Andover aircraft for the air freighting of plutonium to European destinations;

(2) what studies have been made by his Department of the suitability and safety of (a) Prestwick, (b) Carlisle, (c) Bournemouth Hurn, (d) Dounreay and (e) Wick airports for the air freighting of commercial plutonium from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All movements of radioactive materials by air must comply with national and international regulations which require safety to be built into the package design and do not depend for their effectiveness on the use of a particular type of aircraft or choice of airport.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the agreement made on 20 December 1988 between the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Japan Power Reactor and Nuclear Fuel Development Corporation for the development of criteria for certification of a plutonium air transport cask; whether British Nuclear Fuels plc has been involved with the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the JPNC in criteria development; and if he will request the United Kingdom advisory committee on the safe transport of radioactive materials, ACTRAM, to evaluate the developments arising from the agreement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Negotiations between the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Japan Power Reactor and Nuclear Fuel Development Corporation are a matter for the parties concerned. British Nuclear Fuels plc has not been involved in those negotiations.

It would not be appropriate to refer these matters to the advisory committee on the safe transport of radioactive materials which has completed its programme of work.

Commuter Services (North London)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to authorise any application for additional investment to relieve overcrowding on British Rail's commuter services north of the Thames.

Mr. Channon: In response to a request from the Government early last year, British Rail submitted proposals for additional vehicles for these services. I approved a first tranche of 200 vehicles last October and have today approved a further 124 class 321 vehicles at a cost of £43·4 million to cater for expected future growth in demand. The total of 324 additional vehicles will enable rolling stock north of the Thames to be redeployed in a way which will bring significant relief from overcrowding on commuter services into Liverpool Street, Fenchurch Street, King's Cross and Euston.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drunkenness

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures of the number of arrests and subsequent convictions for drunkenness in England and Wales for each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of convictions for drunkenness was published in "Offences of drunkenness, England and Wales, 1987" (Home Office statistical bulletin 31/88), a copy of which is in the Library. No information is collected centrally on arrests for drunkenness.

Private Investigators

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department is giving to the statutory registration of private security companies and private investigators; what mechanisms he has for ensuring that the views of private investigators are taken into account; what consultations his Department has had with the Institute of Professional Investigators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have made it clear that they look to the private security industry to provide self-regulation. Following publication of the report on the industry by the Association of Chief Police Officers, my right hon. Friend asked officials to consider with the police and the industry ways in which self-regulation might be improved and a working group has been set up for this purpose. The Home Office has been in touch with the Institute of Professional Investigators and the institute's views which have been submitted to the Home Office will be brought to the attention of the working group.

National Pet Week

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to offer support to National Pet Week.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This does not fall into the Home Secretary's responsibilities.

"Broadcasting in the 90s"

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he has received during the consultation period in relation to the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s"; and if he will give the number for each ITV region.

Mr. Renton: We have received over 2,900 responses, and a few late submissions are still coming in. A breakdown by ITV region of those responses which could be attributed to a single region could be provided only at disproportionate cost. We have it in mind in due course to place in the Library a list of the main organisations which have submitted comments.

Steel-cored Bullets

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the results of the tests carried out by Thomas Alfred Warlow of his Department's forensic laboratory at Huntingdon into the special properties of steel-cored bullets in the penetration of laminated windscreens of vehicles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Warlow examined 12 of the vehicles hit by bullets during the Hungerford shooting incident. Using unfired ammunition recovered from the scene, he measured the velocities of the bullets discharged from the firearms, calculated the kinetic energies and also made micro sections of different bullets and examined their construction. He did not conduct tests of the kind referred to in the question.

Armed Police

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Avon and Somerset police as to what measures have been taken to improve the training and competence with guns and marksmanship of armed officers in the Avon and Somerset police following reports at the inquest of Glyn Davis, at Cullompton, Devon, in November 1988, that a police officer fired two revolver rounds at the deceased at a range of 9-10 yards, and missed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: After every armed operation in which shots are fired by police officers the incident is carefully examined to identify the lessons to be drawn. Where necessary these are incorporated into firearms training programmes.

An independent inquiry into this incident, which took place in darkness, was carried out under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority and no criticism was made of selection, training and safety standards. Avon and Somerset constabulary has carried out its own review and is satisfied that its measures are effective and comply with the national standards.

Warning and Monitoring Trials

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates, locations and purpose of United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation trials in 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The 1989 exercise dates for the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation are 15 to 16 April, 18 June and 29 October. These exercises, which are designed to practise operational procedures, will involve UKWMO operational controls and monitoring posts throughout the country.

Drink-driving

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the decision to review 742 drink-driving convictions in Greater Manchester after the use there of alcohol-impregnated swabs in taking blood tests and the possible review of 1,117 further cases.

Mr. John Patten: Between March 1987 and December 1988, police stations in the Greater Manchester police area were issued with blood sampling kits in which the alcohol-free swabs had been replaced by the stores department of the force with swabs acquired from an independent source. It was later found that these locally substituted swabs contained a solution with a very small percentage of alcohol. The blood analysis results in a number of these cases may therefore have been affected. At present, there are known to be a total of 742 cases in which prosecution was based on the results of the blood sample; together with a total of 729 cases in which prosecution was based solely on breath test evidence. In addition, there are a further 388 cases where it is not yet possible to say into which category they fall.

I am arranging to review as quickly as possible the convictions in all those cases in which prosecution was based on the results of the blood sample, and I will also consider representations from individuals who believe that they were wrongly convicted. Each case will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his estimates of the costs to public funds of (a) reviewing 742 drink-driving convictions after use by Greater Manchester police of alcohol-impregnated swabs in taking blood tests and (b) the possible review of 1,117 further cases arising from the mistake.

Mr. John Patten: Our present estimate is that the cost to the Home Office is likely to be of the order of £36,000. This figure may be subject to revision when fuller details of the cases are available.

Police Manpower

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people there are to every police officer in (a) the north-west and (b) nationally; and what were the comparable figures for 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is set out as follows:

[1] Police/population ratio

	31 December 1988	31 December 1979
(a) North-West
Cheshire	512	510
Cumbria	426	424
Greater Manchester	372	394
Lancashire	437	437
Merseyside	311	347
(b) England and Wales	407	414

[1] Population per officer is calculated on the basis of the authorised establishment of each force at 31 December.

Betting

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his determination under section 1 of the Horserace Betting Levy Act 1969 of the horserace betting levy scheme beginning 1 April.

Mr. Hurd: I have today sent the following letter to the chairman of the Horserace Betting Levy Board and written similarly to the chairman of the Bookmakers' Committee. A copy of the scheme has been placed in the Library.

"In your letter of 1 November 1988 you reported to me that the Board and the Bookmakers' Committee has failed to agree the Scheme to have effect for the 28th levy period and that the Scheme accordingly fell to be determined by me. I have now reached my decision and enclose a copy of the Scheme which I have determined.

In reaching my decision I have taken into account all the submissions on the issue made to me by the Government-appointed members of the Levy Board and by the Bookmakers' Committee, together with other submissions and representations, including from the Jockey Club and the Horseracing Advisory Council, on which the Board members and the Committee were afforded the opportunity to comment to me.

As recommended to me both by the Board members and by the Committee, the Scheme is 'shop based', that is to say, levy on the cash horserace betting turnover of betting offices is to be calculated by the reference to the turnover of each individual office, not the turnover of bookmaking companies. Levy on credit betting turnover necessarily has to be fixed on a different basis and is, therefore, to be calculated by reference to a scale which as nearly as practicable equates with the levy rates on cash betting.

The cash yield from the Scheme will depend upon the level of leviable betting turnover. Assuming a turnover of £4,000 million, the total estimated yield will be about £34·5 million. In their final negotiations with the Bookmakers' Committee, the Levy Board sought some £34 million from the scheme, albeit assuming at that time a somewhat lower turnover. Equally, the Committee subsequently indicated that it was prepared for the scheme to produce some £34 million.

Like the schemes recommended to me both by the Board members and by the Committee, the Scheme which I have determined is "leveraged", that is to say, should turnover in the 28th levy period increase beyond £4,000 million, for each 1 per cent. such increase the levy yield would be more than 1 per cent. This means that racing as well as bookmaking would benefit from higher turnover. It is, therefore, all the more important to re-emphasise my expectation that the Levy Board as a whole will continue to aim to achieve value for money in its expenditure, continuing and if necessary building upon the arrangements for that which were introduced following the last determination, of the 23rd levy scheme. It is equally important to put on record my confidence that the bookmakers will be able to make their contributions to the levy at the rates in the Scheme without making any increase in their deductions from the punters.

The rates of levy in the Scheme, whilst in some respects higher than those recommended by the Bookmakers'

Committee, are overall lower than those sought by the Board. It has not been possible for me to accept the contention of some in the racing industry, to which the Board members have referred, that the target levy yield from this scheme should be set by reference to comparisons with the rates of return from betting to racing in other countries. The facts on this point are disputed and remain unclear.

I also believe it to be right, under the current levy arrangements, for the needs of racing to be met by the levy to be quantified annually in cash terms, rather than assuming that what is required is a fixed percentage of turnover. Under the levy legislation the rates of levy are to be settled annually. Both the needs of racing and the capacity of bookmakers to make contributions can increase or decrease as a proportion of leviable turnover; they are not necessarily in a precise relationship to one another.

My statutory duty is to determine a scheme for one year only, and it would not be right for me to say that the rates for the 28th levy period should or should not remain the same in successive schemes. In that it is shop-based, the Scheme represents a novelty. The Levy Board and the Bookmakers' Committee will no doubt wish to monitor its operation as closely and quickly as possible, and to take the results into account in their negotiations on successive schemes.

I understand the arguments for the recommendation from the Government-appointed members of the Board that there should be an inquiry into the long term funding of racing. The possible privatisation of the Horserace Totalisator Board is a relevant factor for me to have in mind in reaching my conclusion on the need for, and scope of, an independent and objective assessment of the issues within that recommendation. I will announce that conclusion when I have received and considered advice of Lloyds Merchant Bank as to the feasibility of that privatisation. That advice is expected soon.

My hope is that the negotiations for the 29th levy scheme will be conducted constructively and in a spirit of co-operation."

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cordless Telephones

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many prosecutions for breach of the Wireless Telegraphy (Cordless Telephone Apparatus) (Restriction) Order (SI, No. 774) have been made in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) England in each of the last three years for which records are available.

Mr. Atkins: The Wireless Telegraphy (Cordless Telephone Apparatus) (Restriction) Order 1987 (SI, No. 774) came into force on 21 May 1987. Persons contravening the order can be prosecuted under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949. They can also be prosecuted for the unlicensed use of cordless telephone apparatus under the 1949 Act. My Department can also apply to a court under section 80 (section 81 in Scotland) of the Telecommunications Act 1984 for cordless telephones held in breach of the order to be forfeited, thereby avoiding criminal prosecutions. Finally, members of the public may decide voluntarily to surrender illegal apparatus to my Department, thereby avoiding all court proceedings. The relevant number of cases is as follows:

	Northern Ireland	Scotland	Wales	England
Prosecutions
1987	—	1	—	16
1988	—	1	—	3
1989 (to 20 March)	—	—	—	—
Forfeiture orders
1987	—	—	2	4
1988	—	1	—	13
1989 (to 20 March)	—	—	—	1
Voluntary surrender
1987	4	—	2	71
1988	6	9	2	141
1989 (to 20 March)	—	—	1	17

INWARD

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much his Department's support for INWARD has increased in the last three years; how much investment has been secured thereby; and how many jobs have been created or safeguarded.

Mr. Atkins: Department of Industry support for INWARD was £263,000 in 1986-87, £380,000 in 1987-88 and £450,000 in 1988-89. During the period INWARD has been involved in securing 40 projects which have resulted in known investment in excess of £94 million and the creation/safeguarding of approximately 1,700 jobs.

Overseas Companies (North-West)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many overseas owner companies are located in the north-west; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Atkins: There are over 600 foreign-owned companies operating in the north-west. No comparable statistics are available for 1979.

Foreign Investment (North-West)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many jobs have been created or safeguarded by foreign investment in the north-west since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: There are no comprehensive figures but developments known to the Invest in Britain Bureau indicate that over 11,000 new jobs have been created and approximately 9,300 safeguarded by foreign investment in the north-west since 1979.

South Africa

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on how British companies have complied with the European Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the 12-month period to 30 June 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: By 8 March 1989, 120 companies had submitted reports to the DTI under the code of conduct. Copies of the reports and of the Department's analysis and summary have, as in previous years, been placed in the Library of each House. These documents may also be inspected at the Department's export market information centre, at the British embassy in Pretoria, at the British consulate-general in Johannesburg, and at the British consulates in Cape Town and Durban.

The analysis and summary is the third since the adoption of the revised code of conduct by EC Foreign Ministers in November 1985.

The period under review has seen a further reduction in the number of black employees of British subsidiaries being paid below the code's recommended minimum level, with companies' reports indicating that again over 97 per cent. were paid above this level. In addition, companies continued to report impressive levels of involvement in projects benefiting not only their employees and their families but also the wider communities from which their work forces were drawn. Companies also continued to encourage the growth of black businesses, a new element introduced to the code in 1985.

The Government are once more grateful to companies for their continued co-operation in providing reports, and urge them to maintain this performance and to comply fully with the code.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the individual payments to be made to the members of the national engineering laboratory supervisory board; and what is the projected total cost of the board's activities.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 20 March 1989]: some of the board's members are civil servants and Scottish Development Agency employees and these members will not receive any membership fee. The five members who are neither civil servants nor employed by the Scottish Development Agency will each be paid a fee of £5,000 per year (plus VAT if the member is registered for VAT purposes). In addition, such members will be entitled to the reimbursement of any travel and subsistence expenses incurred on account of board membership. Because the total cost of meeting expenses claims in a full year cannot be accurately estimated at present, we are unable to give a projected total cost of the board's activities.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Natural Environment Research Council

113. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the location of each natural environment research council establishment in England, showing whether there are any plans to close any of them or to curtail their work in any way.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows the location of each natural environment research council establishment in England indicating where one or more areas of scientific research is to be reduced in 1989. None of the establishments listed are to be closed. In some cases resources from lower priority areas of scientific research are to be redeployed to support new opportunities or expansion in areas of high priority.

Student Loans

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received opposing the introduction of the student loans scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Since the publication of the White Paper on top-up loans for students we have received about 3,000 letters, expressing a variety of views. These included 29 petitions against student loans, with about 14,000 signatures, and about 170 formal responses to the White Paper from organisations with a special concern for student support. The responses have given us no reason to doubt that our plans are well judged. We shall take constructive criticisms into account as we proceed to develop a scheme for introduction in the autumn of 1990.

Private Medical School

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what is his policy on setting up a medical school using private finance.

Mr. Jackson: Any proposal to alter the present arrangements whereby medical schools receive public funds via the University Grants Committee (or, from 1 April, the Universities Funding Council) would need to be considered on its merits by my right hon. Friend together with the Secretary of State for Health. Important factors would include the demand for trained doctors, and the General Medical Council's involvement in setting and maintaining standards.

Medical Schools

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many medical schools there are in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland; and whether there is any plans to change these numbers.

Mr. Jackson: There are no plans to change the numbers of medical schools, which are 21 in England, one in Wales, five in Scotland (including one which offers pre-clinical studies only) and one in Northern Ireland.

Medical Students

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present cost of training medical students in (a) the pre-clinical part and (b) the clinical part.

Mr. Jackson: Based on the latest available figures, for the academic year 1987-88, the cost per student charged to the appropriate university cost centre is £9,470 for the two-year pre-clinical part of the course and £23,058 for the three-year clinical part. These figures exclude universities' central costs, associated National Health Service costs and the cost of student support.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many of the medical students presently in universities and hospitals in the United Kingdom originate from Wales;

(2) how many medical students there are in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the table:

Undergraduates on pre-clinical and clinical medicine courses 1987-88

	Universities in:
	England	Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland	United Kingdom

Part-time	20	—	48	30	98
Of which domiciled in Wales
Full-time	649	304	28	4	985
Part-time	—	—	—	—	—

Most students following clinical medicine courses are in hospitals for much of their courses.

Sex Education

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken, following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that in any future considerations of the scope of sex education in schools attention should be paid to the need for this to cover discussion of stereotypes of men and women, and the dangers these represent in marital relationships, as well as to biological and emotional matters.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for the scope and content of sex education in schools rests with the school governors, in accordance with section 18 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

National Curriculum

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which handbooks relating to the national curriculum are currently out of print; when they will be available; for what reasons any delays in supply have occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department issued on 23 February two documents offering general guidance on the national curriculum, circular 5/89 on "The School Curriculum and Assessment" and a handbook for teachers entitled "From Policy to Practice". Nearly half a million copies of the handbook were sent direct to teachers in maintained schools, trainee teachers and local education authorities in the week after publication. The circular and handbook have remained in print and copies are available on request. The first orders and associated documents relating to national curriculum subjects, on mathematics and science attainment targets and programmes of study, were issued with an explanatory circular (6/89) on 14 March. Initial copies have already been sent to all maintained schools, and further copies are being sent to LEAs

Human Genome Project

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what scientific research is currently sponsored on the human genome project (a) solely by his Department, (b) through the research council, (c) in conjunction with industry, (d) in collaboration with the European Commission and (e) within a multilateral international programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 20 February at column 518.

Mossley C of E Primary School

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the points raised by the head teacher of the Mossley Church of England primary school about the way in which his local management initiative is being implemented by the local education authority and which have been forwarded to him by the hon. Member for Congleton.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have written to my hon. Friend about the detailed concerns raised by her constituent. It is a key aspect of local management that schools' funding should be determined on the basis of objective need to spend rather than existing spending patterns. The main determinants of needs will be the numbers and ages of pupils. It will be for LEAs to determine the weightings for pupils of different ages after consultation with the governing body and head teacher of each school to be covered by a scheme. My right hon. Friend will consider LEAs' detailed proposals for allocating resources to schools within the overall framework set out in circular 7/88 on local management.

City Technology College (Surrey Docks)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assurances have been given to the governors of Bacon's school concerning finance for a proposed new city technology college in Surrey docks.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend wrote to the Reverend Canon Gerald Greenwood, director of the Southwark diocesan board of education, the sponsors of the prospective Bacon's city technology college, on 10 March. That letter confirmed that we would be prepared to make capital grant available, up to a total of £10 million, for the establishment of a Bacon's city technology college on the Surrey quays site. My right hon. Friend made clear, however, that that was subject to the city technology college proposal being adopted by the governors of the Bacon's school, to the outcome of a detailed feasibility study of the costs involved, to the sponsors providing their share of those costs, and to his decision on an application by the governors for his leave to their giving notice of their intention to discontinue the school under the provisions of section 14 of the Education Act 1944.

My right hon. Friend also made clear that any such approach from the governors would be treated strictly on its merits. The factors he would take into account in these circumstances were set out in his statements of 28 July last year at column 402 and 23 January this year at column 383.

British Antarctic Survey (Ship)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether a contract has been placed for the construction of the new ship for the British Antarctic survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The natural environment research council yesterday signed a contract with Swan Hunter Shipbuilders for the construction of a new ship for the British Antarctic survey, to replace its 33-year-old dual purpose research and logistics vessel, the royal research ship John Biscoe.

The new ship, which will be named the James Clark Ross, will enable the British Antarctic survey to enhance its marine biology, geology and geophysics research programmes and to strengthen the logistical support which it gives to its bases in Antarctica.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food if he will list by location the forestry projects currently taking place within the three counties of Yorkshire.

Mr. Ryder: Between 1 April 1988 and 28 February 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved 157 new applications for planting grants in the three counties of Yorkshire. These are listed:

Intervention Stores

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many European Economic Community intervention stores exist in the United Kingdom; where they are located; and what were the amounts and products held at each site on the last date for which information is available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At the end of February 1989 140 stores in the United Kingdom were holding products bought into intervention. Their locations, the products and quantities held are as follows:

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 3 March 1989, Official Report, columns 373-74, when he intends to introduce an amendment to the Diseases of Animals Protein Processing Order 1981 requiring protein processors to take samples from each day's production and to notify his Department of the results;

(2), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 3 March 1989, Official Report, columns 373-74, when he intends to lay an order providing for the compulsory bacteriological monitoring of all poultry laying flocks;

(3), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 3 March 1989, Official Report, columns 373-74, when he intends to introduce measures on the registration of breeding and laying flocks and the registration and monitoring of hatcheries;

(4), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 3 March 1989, Official Report, columns 373-74, when he intends to strengthen control measures applicable to rodents to further minimise the risk of spread of salmonella;

(5), pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 3 March 1989, Official Report, columns 373-74, when he intends to introduce statutory requirements for the hygienic handling of eggs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 16 March I introduced secondary legislation under the Animal Health Act 1981 requiring poultry flock owners to submit samples from their flocks for salmonella testing and to keep records of the test results.

This will be augmented as soon as possible with orders requiring the registration of flocks, the registration and monitoring of hatcheries and introducing statutory requirements on rodent control and hygienic handling of eggs.

An order will also be made as soon as possible requiring protein processors to take samples from each day's production and to notify the results to my Department.

Animal Blood

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions there are on the importation of products containing animal blood.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The importation of any product containing animal blood is subject to licensing controls exercised by orders made under the Animal Health Act 1981. In addition any such product intended for sale for human consumption must satisfy the Imported Food Regulations 1984.

Animal Feed

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he plans to restrict the use of animal blood in animal feed products;

(2) whether he is considering further restrictions on the feeding of animal by-products to ruminants;

(3) what evidence he has on the animal health implications of feeding ruminants with products containing animal blood.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Various pathogens can be transmitted by animal blood. Feeding ruminant animals with protein material, including blood, derived from ruminants has been prohibited since 18 July last year. This ban will remain in place unless processing methods are established which are sufficient to destroy the agent of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Blood from other animals fed to ruminants must be processed to the standards required by regulations under the Animal Health Act 1981.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he intends to introduce legislation requiring the labelling of animal feeds with a list of ingredients;

(2) Whether he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring animal feed products containing animal blood to be labelled as such.

Mr. Ryder: The European Council of Ministers is currently considering a proposal which will require suppliers of animal feeds containing more than one ingredient to declare the materials or categories of materials used in them.

Potatoes

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has determined the market support prices for potatoes to apply in Great Britain of the 1989-90 crop year beginning 1 July 1989.

Mr. MacGregor: Agriculture Ministers have consulted the National Farmers Union about the market support arrangements to apply for the 1989-90 crop year. We have decided to authorise the Potato Marketing Board to enter into pre-season contracts with producers over the period November 1989 to May 1990 at a scale of prices not exceeding a weighted average of £53 per tonne. We have also authorised the board to intervene directly on the market throuhout the season where this will ensure that support can be carried out more cheaply than by purchasing under contract, provided that the total intervention during 1980-90 does not exceed 500,000 tonnes. The target area for potato planting by registered producers in Great Britain was fixed last July at 155,000 hectares.

Nitrates

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 24 November to the hon. Member for St. Ives, (Mr. Harris), Official Report, columns 9-10, what action the Government propose to take to designate areas sensitive of nitrate leaching.

Mr. MacGregor: After further careful consideration, the Government have reached broad conclusions on the type of agricultural measures which could be introduced in nitrate-sensitive areas. These will now be the subject of extensive consultations with farming, water and other interests. We have also decided that the first designated zones should represent a pilot sample of different types of areas in which a range of agricultural measures can be tested.

It remains the Government's policy that, wherever possible, any agricultural restrictions should be on a voluntary basis, with compulsory powers available as a fallback. Where farmers are obliged to restrict their agricultural activities beyond the degree which could be regarded as good agricultural practice, they should be compensated. Under currently foreseeable circumstances the costs of compensation would be offset by CAP support savings resulting from reduced agricultural production. As part of their approach, the Government will be mounting an intensive advisory campaign in selected key areas. This will involve visits to individual farmers on specific aspects of good agricultural practice.

It will be necessary to amend the current provisions in the Water Bill to provide appropriate powers, and the Government will shortly be tabling amendments. We will also be examining carefully the European Commission proposal for a directive on nitrate pollution of water but, in view of the importance the Government attach to this issue, we are anxious to press ahead with pilot schemes.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 20-21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, I represented the United Kingdom at this Council.

The main business before the Council was the Commission's proposals for farm support prices and related measures for 1989-90. No agreement was reached. The Council will return to the subject at its next meeting on 17 April, with the firm intention of reaching decisions.

The Council again considered the Commission's proposal on the level of imports of butter from New Zealand between now and 1992, and the linked qustion of the arrangements for imports of sheepmeat. Several member states were unwilling to take decisions, and the butter import arrangements were therefore rolled forward for a further two months until the end of May 1989 on the basis of [illegible] quantities.

Finally the Council adopted a directive regulating imports of meat products from Third world countries with a view to avoiding human and animal health risks.

DEFENCE

Helicopters

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost at time of purchase of the most recent procurements of (a) one Sea King HAS 3/5 ASW helicopter and (b) one Westland-Augusta EH 101 helicopter.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is no longer our practice to publish unit production costs.

Challenger

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost at time of purchase of the most recently procured Challenger FV tank that is currently in service.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is no longer our practice to publish unit production costs.

Air Misses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many air misses between hang gliders and military aircraft were reported in 1988; and how many of these were in risk category A.

Mr. Neubert: Only one such air miss report was filed in 1988. The joint air miss working group assessed this as category C, that is involving no risk of a collision.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on the publication of the results of inquiries into air misses involving military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 16 February at columns 331-34.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the air miss between a British Airways BAC 1-11 and a Royal Air Force Harrier north of Carlisle on 8 November 1988; and when he expects the results of the inquiry to be published.

Mr. Neubert: This reported air miss is currently being investigated by the joint air miss section of the National Air Traffic Services, before being considered by the joint air miss working group. A copy of the group's conclusions will be placed in the Library in due course.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if low-flying training by Royal Air Force aircraft is planned to take place in Morocco.

Mr. Neubert: Discussions with the Government of Morocco on ways to strengthen links between the Royal Air Force and the Moroccan Air Force are continuing. The details are confidential.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has obtained a copy of the July 1988 report by the West German Federal Health Office in Berlin into the effects of low-flying military aircraft on the health of children in Bavaria; and what evidence he has on the effects of low flying on the health of children in Britain.

Mr. Neubert: Yes, my Department has a copy of the West Germany Federal Health Office pilot study report on "Health Effects of Noise from Military Low level Flights". The Department has no specific evidence on the effects of low flying on the health of children in Britain.

Noise Levels

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the policy of purchasing dwellings subjected to noise levels from military aircraft of 125 db (A) or more, set out in his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 3 February, Official Report, columns 447-48, applies to dwellings not located in the vicinity of a military airfield.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the heights, speeds and aircraft types which were found to produce noise levels of 125 db (A) or more in noise test measurements during Exercise Bedlam.

Mr. Neubert: The information is as follows:

Aircraft	Speed	Power Setting	Height (ft)	Average decibel level at ground level
Phantom	507 knots (583 mph)	Full Reheat	315	126dB (A)
Tornado	433 knots (498 mph)	Full Reheat	250	(126db (A)
Jaguar	462 knots (531 mph)	100 per cent. + reheat	250	126dB (A)
Lightning	495 knots (569 mph)	Full Reheat	250	126db (A)
Victor	265 knots (305 mph)	103 per cent.	200	127dB (A)
Vulcan	256 knots (294 mph)	100 per cent.	250	127dB (A)
VC10	298 knots (343 mph)	Full Power	250	125dB (A)

The hon. Member will wish to note that the above figures are not representative of general military low flying in the United Kingdom and I would refer him to my predecessor's reply of 13 June 1988 to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) at column 70.

Range Activity (Otterburn and Spadeadam)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire of 3 February 1989, Official Report, column 448, if he will now publish figures showing the extent of range activity by aircraft at Otterburn and Spadeadam in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: Otterburn is primarily an Army artillery range and the use of the facility by aircraft is extremely limited. It would not be possible to detail this usage in terms of number of aircraft and sorties flown without disproportionate cost and effort.

The following represents the number of 10-minute flying slots utilised at Spadeadam range in the years 1985-88. Records prior to 1985 no longer exist.

Year	Number
1985	6,330
1986	6,348
1987	5,959
1988	4,645

Lindholme Facility

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the Royal Air Force communications facility at Lindholme near Doncaster; which North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces provide personnel to operate the Lindholme facility; how many personnel are based at the Lindholme facility; and what are their ranks and functions.

Mr. Neubert: 840 Signal Unit at Lindholme forms part of the defence communications network and is entirely United Kingdom manned. It is not our practice to give details of the strength and composition of operational units.

Territorial Army

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for expansion of Territorial Army units based in the west country.

Mr. Neubert: As part of the phase II enhancement of the Territorial Army announced by the Government in 1984 the establishment of the Territorial Army in the west country has been increased by over 850 personnel. Of these additional numbers 175 will have been incorporated into existing Royal Army Medical Corps and Royal Military Police units and the balance into the formation of new Infantry, Army Air Corps and Royal Army Ordnance Corps units.

The main enhancement to the infantry is the formation of a new home defence battalion, 4 Devon and Dorsets, with companies based at new TA centres at Exeter, which has just been completed, and Paignton and Plymouth which are both under construction. A new company of the RAOC, 94 Ordnance Company, will be based at Keynsham, near Bristol, while the Territorial Army's first and currently, only squadron of the AAC is at Middle Wallop. All these units have been formed and are gradually increasing towards their established strength.

No additional enhancements to the RTA are currently planned.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place between his Department and the company currently leasing Mercedes tractors to the British Army of the Rhine regarding their availability in the event of hostilities.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 13 March 1989]: The information available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise records on the volume of trade in main agricultural commodities is given in the table. The financial amounts payable which may have derived from the European Community are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Wakeham: None. The official salary received by the Secretary of State for Health is set in accordance with the Ministerial and Other Salaries Order 1988. He receives a ministerial salary of £34,479 and a reduced parliamentary salary of £18,148. In addition he retains an entitlement to allowances available to other Members.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Demonstrations (Lhasa)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Chinese Government about the recent shootings of demonstrators in Lhasa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 17 March to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) at column 364. In addition the ambassadors of the troika in Peking have carried out a demarche on behalf of the Twelve at the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the situation in Tibet, in context of the commitment of the Chinese authorities to ensure full respect for human rights.

European Court of Human Rights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of cases to date in which the United Kingdom has appeared before the European Court of Human Rights for breach of article 10 of the European convention; what was the judgment given; how many cases and who are the claimants that are pending to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The European Court of Human Rights has found a violation of article 10 of the European convention in one case brought against the United Kingdom. In The Sunday Times judgment of 26 April 1979, which concerned contempt of court, the court found a violation by 11 votes to nine.

There are five cases pending before the Commission in which the Government have submitted, or have been requested to submit, observations on article 10 of the convention. In three of these cases the applicants have not agreed to their identity being disclosed. The remaining two cases have been brought by Times Newspapers Ltd. and Neil, and by Atkinson and others.

Israel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further talks he proposes to have with the Israeli authorities about open discussions to seek a solution to mutual problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain in close touch with the Israeli authorities and look forward to welcoming Mr. Shamir to London soon.

Council of Europe

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether relations between the European Community and the Council of Europe were discussed at the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Council discussed relations between the EC and the Council of Europe and agreed to continue the existing practical co-operation and to intensify political level contacts between the two organisations.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 20 March.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 20 March. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State represented the United Kingdom, accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State.

The Council was preceded by an informal meeting of EC and EFTA Foreign Ministers. This noted the close economic and political links between EC and EFTA, and the importance of strengthening and expanding co-operation on the lines laid down in the 1984 Luxembourg declaration. The meeting welcomed M. Delors' call for a more structured relationship and the results of the meeting of EFTA Heads of Government in Oslo on 15 March, and agreed to establish a new bilateral dialogue with a view to a further ministerial meeting in the autumn. The United Kingdom warmly welcomes this new drive to deepen the relationship between the Community and its EFTA neighbours.

The Council discussed progress in the GATT Uruguay round and preparations for the meeting of the GATT trade negotiations committee in Geneva in early April confirming the guidance given to the Commission in November.

The Council also agreed to improve contacts between the Community and the Council of Europe.

An EC-Malta Association Council also took place.

In the framework of political co-operation the Twelve reaffirmed the unacceptability of Iranian behaviour over the Rushdie affair and the continuing ban on high-level visits.

Chemical Weapons

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to investigate the links between the firm Pen-Tsao-Materia-Medica Centre, based in Hong Kong, the firm Imhausen-Chemie A. G. based in Lahr, and the export of chemicals for the alleged chemical warfare agent factory at Rabta in Libya; and if he will raise the matter of dual-use chemicals export from the European Community at the next Foreign Affairs Council meeting of the EEC.

Mr. Waldegrave: Investigations by the Hong Kong authorities do not indicate that there has been any breach of Hong Kong law. We do not have any evidence that material has been shipped through Hong Kong to Libya.

The Foreign Affairs Council on 20 February adopted an EC directive controlling the export of eight "core" chemical precursors. All these chemicals were already subject to United Kingdom export control. The United Kingdom continues to work closely with other countries to tighten restrictions on the export of chemical weapon-related precursors and equipment.

Ex-President Marcos

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweath Affairs if he has received any representations from the Philippines Government to help them trace such assets of former President Marcos as may be in Britain or have been in Britain.

Mr. Eggar: The Philippines authorities have brought several cases to our attention. We have always co-operated fully.

Namibia

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has concerning the organisations which will be responsible for the registering and processing of Namibian detainees held by the South West Africa People's Organisation after the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 435;

(2) if he will make a statement outlining the provisions which are made in the United Nations settlement plan for the safe return of Namibians held in South West Africa People's Organisation camps in Angola and Zambia;

(3) what information he has on the number and names of Namibians currently detained in South West Africa People's Organisation camps in Angola and Zambia;

(4) what representations he has received during the last year concerning the fate and condition of Namibian detainees held by the South West Africa People's Organisation in Angola and Zambia;

(5) what steps he is taking to encourage the establishment of mechanisms in Angola and Zambia to ensure that Namibians resident outside Namibia are given a free and voluntary choice whether to return to Namibia to take part in free and fair elections under the United Nations plan; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what recent steps he has taken within the United Nations or other organisations to ensure that the lives of those Namibians detained by the South West Africa People's Organisation are not endangered and that they are permitted to return to Namibia to participate in the forthcoming elections;

(7) what recent representations he has made to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees concerning the Namibian detainees held by the South West Africa People's Organisation in their camps in Angola and Zambia; and what response was received to these representations.

Mr. Eggar: We condemn human rights abuses whenever they may occur. We are aware of allegations of ill-treatment by SWAPO of detainees held in their camps in Angola and Zambia. This is primarily a matter for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to investigate, but we have raised the issue with SWAPO. We have also made our concern known to the office of the high commissioner.

The United Nations plan for Namibian independence provides for the release of political prisoners and detainees and the voluntary return of exiles. We shall naturally do everything we can do to assist the United Nations Secretary General and his staff to ensure that all the provisions of the United Nations plan are implemented.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the status of the informal understandings reached in 1982 on the question of United Nations impartiality during the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan for Namibia;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy as to the extent to which the United Nations is to be regarded as responsible for guaranteeing that relevant parties adhere to the letter and spirit of the impartiality package referred to in the United Nations Secretary General's report of 23 January on the question of Namibia;

(3) whether he has any information about any mechanisms which may be in place to ensure that all relevant parties concerned with the United Nations settlement plan for Namibia adhere to the provisions of the impartiality package;

(4) whether he will place in the Library a copy of the details of the impartiality package referred to in the United Nations Secretary General's report on 23 January on the question of Namibia.

Mr. Eggar: The provisions of the impartiality package referred to in the hon. Member's question have not been made public. However, the United Nations Secretary General confirmed in his report of 23 January (United Nations document S/20412) that the package remained binding on the parties. The Secretary General's report was in turn approved by United Nations Security Council resolution 632 of 16 February. We for our part shall do all we can to assist the United Nations Secretary General and his staff in ensuring that the provisions of the impartiality package are fully applied.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent progress by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank on development loans to Brazil, relating to the power sector and rain forest.

Mr. Chris Patten: The World Bank has development lending for the Brazilian power sector under consideration. The scope of the bank's proposed second power sector loan is under review between the bank and the Brazilian authorities. I cannot say when these discussions will be concluded or what the outcome will be. I have given an assurance to concerned non-governmental organisations that we will consult them, if and when a loan is put to the World Bank's executive board, before we decide what line to take.

Kampuchea

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conditions under which Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to give reconstruction aid for use internally in Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: We shall not consider Government-to-Government aid for reconstruction until Vietnam has fully withdrawn from its illegal occupation of Cambodia.

ENVIRONMENT

Rights of Way

18. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has had about the working of the footpath and rights of way sections of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of representations on these sections have been received. We are awaiting the advice of the Countryside Commission, which is monitoring the operations of the rights of way provisions in the 1981 Act and which has already published two reports.

Rating Reform

19. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate what the average community charge would have been in April 1989, based on the estimated level of domestic rates.

Mr. Ridley: Illustrative community charge figures for 1989-90 will be published when local authority budget returns have been received.

25. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a ward sister would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in the proportions of 80-20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroom flat in Hornsey.

Mr. Ridley: A ward sister earning £15,000 living in a flat in Hornsey worth £70,000 would pay a community charge of £291 (disregarding the transitional safety net) and £875 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

32. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the same basis as table E5 in the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", what percentage of householders in Barnsley, Central constituency whose equivalent net income falls in the range of (a) £100 to £200 per week and (b) £400 to £500 per week would, on 1988-89 figures, pay a higher net community charge, un-safety netted, than net rates.

61. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the same basis as table F5 in the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", what percentage of householders in The Wrekin constituency, whose equivalent net income falls in the range of (a) £100 to £200 per week and (b) £400 to £500 per week would, on 1988-89 figures, pay a higher net community charge, un-safety netted, than net rates.

100. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the same basis as table F5 in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", what percentage of householders in Norwich, South constituency whose equivalent net income falls in the range of (a) £100 to £200 per week and (b) £400 to £500 per week would, on 1988-89 figures, pay a higher net community charge, un-safety netted, than net rates.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not available. The table in the Green Paper was based on a sample survey which cannot provide reliable estimates for individual constituencies.

101. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the proposed introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend and I receive a variety of representations about the new system of local government finance. Recently, they have tended to be concerned with the detail of the community charge regulations.

103. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposed timetable for the community charge regulations for England and Wales being laid before the House.

Mr. Gummer: The following statutory instruments on the community charge in England and Wales were laid before the House on 17 March.

The Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989
The Personal Community Charge (Students) Regulations 1989
The Personal Community Charge (Exemptions) Order 1989
The Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals Regulations 1989
The Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals (Transfer of Jurisdiction) Regulations 1989
The Community Charge (Information Concerning Social Security) Regulations 1989

These form the bulk of the regulations on the community charge. Further regulations will be laid later this year, in the summer and autumn.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the present status of the Price Waterhouse study on the forecast of costs; and whether he intends to carry out any further assessments of the unit costs of implementing and calculating the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: The Government commissioned the firm of Price Waterhouse to undertake an independent study of preparation and collection costs of rates reform in England and Wales. The report was published in June 1988 and its findings taken into account in allocating resources to charging authorities. I have no plans to carry out a further study.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations from the European Commission of the implementation of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider exempting from the community charge those who have been deemed educationally subnormal or statemented under the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Gummer: The Local Government Finance Act 1988 provides a community charge exemption for adults who are severely mentally impaired, as defined in the Act. I have no plans to amend that definition.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to enable local authorities to make arrangements with individuals who wish to pay the community charge on behalf of another charge payer.

Mr. Gummer: It was always envisaged that local authorities could offer this facility, and practice note No. 12 published last month contained advice on its implications.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those organisations which have requested copies of "You and the Community Charge", published in December 1988 and the number of copies distributed.

Mr. Ridley: The booklet has been requested by local authorities; educational establishments; charitable, church and voluntary bodies; businesses; and political organisations.

In addition, hon. Members and many members of the public have asked for copies. In total, approximately 900,000 copies have been distributed so far. Orders for a further 100,000 are currently being dealt with. Demand continues.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how many copies of "You and the Community Charge", published in December 1988, have been printed to date; what were the initial one-off costs of art work and creative design; and what is the total cost to date of copies printed.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has printed 1,800,000 copies so far, reflecting a continuing high demand for this booklet. Art work and design cost £10,227. Printing has cost £115,427.

Agricultural Land (Building)

20. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to encourage the release of agricultural land for building at a faster rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. It is frequently inappropriate to release agricultural land for building.

Young People (Housing)

21. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any new proposals for enabling young people to enter the housing market either as tenants or owner-occupiers.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have provided for an 80 per cent. increase over the next three years in the finance available to the Housing Corporation to provide new houses to rent and to promote low-cost home ownership including shared ownership. The deregulation of new private lettings will also encourage landlords to make more homes available to rent

Land Disposals

22. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many directives he has made to owners of land on the land register under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 to dispose of their holdings; and, of these, how many have been disposed of.

31. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many directives he has made to owners of land on the land register to dispose of their holdings; and, of these, how many have been disposed of.

40. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many directives he has made to owners of land on the land register to dispose of their holdings; and, of these, how many have been disposed of.

Mr. Trippier: The power to direct disposal of land entered on the land register can only be exercised site by site. By the end of February 1989 I had directed the owners of 77 sites to take steps to dispose of their interest in the Land. To date 42 of the sites have been sold.

Wildlife Preservation

23. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to preserve wildlife.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 already afford protection to all birds and to other species of animal or plant considered to be endangered and to any area of land considered to be of special scientific interest by reason of its flora, fauna or geographical or physiographical features. The schedules of protected species are reviewed every five years and, as a result of the last quinquennial review, 48 species of animals and 31 species of plants received added protection. The next review is scheduled for 1991.

County Hall, London

24. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his response to the request by the County Hall Development Group for a waiver from Lambeth Council's request for an environmental impact statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend directed on 14 March that an environmental statement was not required.

Chlorofluorocarbons

26. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the ban on the use of products in his Department which contain chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a number of representations about the use of chlorofluorocarbons by Government Departments.

45. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the world's chlorofluorocarbon production is made in Britain.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Figures for United Kingdom production of CFCs are not available for reasons of commercial confidentiality. In 1986, it is estimated that the European Community accounted for some 40 per cent. of world CFC production.

65. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken since the international ozone conference to encourage the replacement of chlorofluorocarbons and halons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A message will be delivered from my right hon. Friend as chairman of the "Saving the Ozone Layer" conference on the first day of the meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol in Helsinki on 2 May.

75. Mr. Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what percentage cuts in (a) consumption and (b) production of chlorofluorocarbons Her Majesty's Government are committed; and by when.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the Montreal protocol and the implementing European legislation, production and consumption of CFCs must be reduced by 20 per cent. by 1994 and by a further 30 per cent. by 1999. On 2 March the EC Environment Council, in response to a United Kingdom initiative, called for the protocol to be strengthened so as to require a cut in production and consumption of CFCs of 85 per cent. as soon as possible, and their complete elimination by the end of the century.

99. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to reintroduce legislation to tackle the problem of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Montreal protocol requires cuts in production and consumption of CFCs of 50 per cent. by 1999. Within the overall framework of the EC regulation implementing the protocol in the Community we are strongly encouraging industry to reduce use of CFCs to the maximum possible extent. As a result of the steps industry is taking on a voluntary basis the United Kingdom will more than halve its consumption of CFCs by the end of 1989, 10 years ahead of the protocol requirement. If, however, extra powers are needed to back up this voluntary action we shall take them. The United Kingdom and its EC partners have now called for CFC production and consumption to be cut by at least 85 per cent. as soon as possible with a view to their complete elimination by the end of the century, and for the protocol to be strengthened accordingly.

108. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many countries which attended the current month's London conference on the ozone layer indicated that they would sign the Montreal protocol on reducing chlorofluorocarbon consumption.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 20 countries attending the "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference indicated their firm intention of ratifying or acceding to the Montreal protocol. A further 14 countries stated that they would give serious consideration to becoming parties to the protocol

Rivers (Discharge Consents)

27. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to seek to increase the penalties currently available to the courts for dealing with those who breach their consents to discharge into rivers.

Mr. Howard: The maximum penalties which may be imposed by magistrates for offences under section 32 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are fines not exceeding £2,000 and terms of imprisonment of up to three months. On indictment in the Crown court there is no limit on the fine that may be imposed and terms of imprisonment can be up to two years. Penalties for pollution offences are kept under regular review but there are no immediate plans for increasing them.

Field Heath Nurseries, Uxbridge

28. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision on the appeal concerning Field Heath nurseries, Uxbridge.

Mr. Howard: As my hon. Friend will recall from the answer given on 27 January 1989 the further views of the parties are under consideration. A decision will be reached as soon as this process has been completed.

"Environment in Trust"

29. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many "Environment in Trust" leaflets have been printed to date; and at what cost.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 25,000 sets of "Environment in Trust" leaflets have been produced so far, at a print cost of £99,760. In addition, the one-off costs of creative design and artwork are £117,594.

Rate Increases

30. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Association of County Councils in respect of rate increases in 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: None, although I met it to discuss the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90 on 30 November last.

Unleaded Petrol

33. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use of unleaded petrol in the European Community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are committed to promoting unleaded petrol in the European Community and have played a major role in securing the agreement to directives which cover the requirement for new cars to run on the fuel and its availability in Europe.

107. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in demand for unleaded petrol since January 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the month to mid-February, unleaded petrol accounted for 5·5 per cent. of the market. Demand has increased more than fiftyfold since figures were first made available in April 1987 when uptake stood at less than 0·1 per cent.

111. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the Government have for encouraging wider use of unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget raised the duty differential between 4-star leaded and unleaded fuel by an additional 4p a gallon. This should result in a price difference of about 10p per gallon at the pump. It is the second largest differential in the European Community. I am confident that it will ensure a continued rapid increase in take-up of unleaded fuel. The average motorist travelling 10,000 miles in a year stands to save about £35. The Chancellor has also increased the duty on 2-star leaded petrol which will encourage the switching of storage facilities to unleaded petrol, and ensure that the number of outlets continues to rise rapidly. The Government will continue to take steps to promote the widest possible use of unleaded petrol.

Water Pollution

34. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to ensure that water authorities are penalised for supplying polluted water as drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Clause 51 of the Water Bill will make it an offence for a water undertaker to supply water unfit for human consumption. The penalty for an offence may take the form of a fine or imprisonment. Under clause 19 of the Bill my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be able to enforce compliance with drinking water quality standards set by regulations made under the Bill.

Stonehenge

35. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of English Heritage to discuss the improvement of visitor facilities at Stonehenge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I met Lord Montagu on 28 February.

English Heritage produced a very imaginative scheme for a new visitor centre some time ago. There has been a delay in taking it forward through the normal planning procedures because of the need to find a route for access to the centre which satisfactorily balances the Army's security and operational needs with the interests of visitors, other landowners and the local community. However, I very much hope that we are now close to a solution.

Norfolk Structure Plan

36. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any representations about the Norfolk structure plan during the last six months.

Mr. Chope: No.

Departmental Publicity

37. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's publicity budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: The provisional budget is £7·5 million including support costs.

Toxic Waste

38. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government expect to publish their response to the second report from the Environment Select Committee on toxic waste HC22-I.

83. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to respond to the Environment Committee's second report on toxic waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As soon as possible.

44. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to strengthen the regulatory regime for policing sites for the dispersal of toxic waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Extended and strengthened controls over waste disposal were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 29 June 1988 and I put forward supplementary proposals on 23 November 1988. In addition, on 24 January 1989 the Government issued a consultation paper, "The Role and Functions of Waste Disposal Authorities", proposing to separate those authorities' operational and regulatory functions and promote the more effective control of waste disposal. Legislation to enact these measures will be introduced as early as possible during this Parliament.

Council House Sales

39. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to ensure that councils deal promptly with applications by their tenants to buy their homes.

Mr. Trippier: As I announced in my answer of 10 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) at column 699, provisions came into force on that date enabling tenants whose applications are delayed by the landlord to have rent payments put towards the purchase price.

60. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Trippier: From April 1979 to December 1988 about 1 million tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns.

77. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he proposes to encourage council tenants to buy their homes.

Mr. Trippier: As I announced in my answers of 9 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) at column 672 and 10 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) at column 699, we intend to increase the maximum value of discount from £35,000, and have brought into force new measures to help tenants whose applications are delayed by their landlord.

Public Housing (Transfers)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he will make to ensure an orderly interaction between tenants' choice and other mechanisms for transferring public housing to the private sector.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment and the Housing Corporation have today issued a joint statement. This sets out detailed arrangements for ensuring a smooth and sensible interaction between tenants' choice on the one hand; and voluntary disposals by local authorities and transfers by new town development corporations, the Commission for New Towns and housing action trusts on the other hand. The main principle proposed is that particular dwellings should be subject to only one transfer proposal at any one time, and that proposal should be allowed to run its course before any other transfer proposal affecting the same dwellings can be put in train. Copies of the statement have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

105. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been received under the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988 for transfer of the housing stock of local authorities; and how many he has approved.

Mr. Trippier: None. Regulations have recently been laid before Parliament to implement the tenants' choice scheme on 5 April.

Land Registers

41. Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of sites, and their area, on land registers for each of the bodies listed in schedule 16 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, as amended.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House today.

47. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests he has received to include specific vacant sites of under one acre to be listed on land registers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

104. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests he has received to include specific vacant sites of under one acre to be listed on the land registers.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Dame J. Fookes).

84. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it will take for the land currently on the land registers to be removed therefrom.

Mr. Trippier: Land is removed from the land registers either when it is brought into use, or sold, or where part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 ceases to apply to the owning body. The large number of separate public bodies whose unused or underused land is entered on the registers and the variety of circumstances related to each site make any prediction as to the time taken for the land currently on the register to be removed meaningless. At the end of February 1989 there were 84,400 acres of land on the registers: in 1986 10,200 acres of land were removed; in 1987 15,460 acres and in 1988 10,940.

85. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all vacant, unused and underused land held by Government Departments is now included on the land registers.

87. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all vacant, unused and underused land held by Government Departments is now included on land registers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Trippier: From the time the first land registers were compiled, Departments have provided details of land that meets the criteria for entry on the registers of unused and underused publicly-owned land maintained by my right hon. Friend under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Generally, sites less than one acre in area are not entered on this register.

52. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of sites, and their area, on land registers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 owned by each Government Department.

57. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites, and of what area, on land registers are owned by each Government Department.

72. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites, and of what area, on the land registers are owned by each Government Department.

Mr. Trippier: The information is set out in the table which shows the position on 28 February 1989.

Department	Number of sites	Total area (acres)
Department of health	230	4,605
Department of the Environment	35	1,005
Ministry of Defence	39	699
Department of Transport	40	382
Department of Energy	12	140
Home Office	3	5

Planning Decisions

42. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of planning reports from his Department's inspectorate awaiting his decision, and if he will list them, giving the dates they were submitted by the inspectorate.

Mr. Chope: At the end of February 182 reports on planning appeals by the planning inspectorate were awaiting decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I will write to the hon. Member with details of these cases.

Sports Council

43. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Sports Council; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I met the chairman of the Sports Council on 20 March together with the chairmen of the regional councils of sport and recreation. We discussed a number of issues relating to sport and recreation. I also had a private dinner with the chairman of the Sports Council yesterday evening.

Rate Increases

46. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average percentage increase in domestic rates in 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: The available figures now show an average domestic rate increase in England of between 8 and 9 per cent.

Urban Development Corporations (Land Sales)

48. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by urban development corporation the cash sums raised from land sales each year since designation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Of the 10 UDCs established in England, only London Docklands and Merseyside development corporations reported receipts from land sales up to the end of 1987-88. For the figures for London Docklands I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 21 February 1989, at column 569 to the hon. Member for Ilow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon). Receipts reported for Merseyside development corporation are as follows:

Financial Year	£000
1982-83	6
1983-84	120
1984-85	—
1985-86	72
1986-87	291
1987-88	225

Manchester City Council

49. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the leader of Manchester city council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Trippier: The Secretary of State for the Environment last met the leader of Manchester city council, Mr. Graham Stringer, during a visit to the Central Manchester urban development corporation on 28 July 1988, which was the main topic of discussion.

Refrigerant Gases

50. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will launch a programme to finance the safe disposal of existing refrigerant gases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Both United Kingdom manufacturers of chlorofluorocarbons, and some refrigeration companies, already offer a recycling service for used chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants free of charge.

Pollution

51. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the contribution that individual citizens might make towards reducing pollution.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The individual citizen can make a considerable contribution towards the reduction of pollution. The prevention of litter and the choice of environmentally friendly products—for instance the use of lead-free petrol—are among the many examples of the action that can be taken.

Overbuilding (Outer London)

53. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the further representations he has received from London borough representatives and others on overbuilding in outer London, including during the 23 February meeting at his Department and since that date.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend and I discussed several planning issues with hon. Members and councillors representing a number of the London boroughs at a meeting on 23 February. Those present have not made any further representations about overbuilding. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 8 March at column 525, which sets out the further advice we have given to local planning authorities in London about residential densities.

Football Membership Scheme

54. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when next he will meet the football authorities to discuss the implementation of identity cards for football supporters.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no present plans to meet the football authorities but would be happy to do so whenever they feel this would be helpful and a mutually convenient date can be found.

76. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the likely cost to football clubs of introducing a football membership scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: It is not possible to estimate the financial effects of the scheme until its details, particularly the technology to be employed, have been settled. I understand that a number of companies have said that with co-operation from the football authorities and proper marketing and management, the scheme could be set up and run at no cost to the clubs.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his proposals are for the transfer of football passes between one person and another.

Mr. Moynihan: The details of the national membership scheme for football supporters will be for the football membership authority to draw up and submit to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for approval. A central premise of the scheme is that membership cards will not be transferable.

Rivers (Discharge Consents)

55. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum level of fines for breaching consents to discharge into rivers.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway).

Black Country Development Corporation

56. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last visited the Black Country development corporation; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend last visited the development corporation on 15 February this year. Matters discussed related to the regeneration of the corporation's area including major projects such as the propose Sandwell mall and the Black Country spine road.

Council Officers (Political Activity)

58. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the acceptable extent of party political activity by local government officers earning above £13,500.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have concentrated on the appropriateness of applying political restrictions to the staff concerned rather than the extent of party political activity allowed to them. The representations have reinforced us in our view, that public political activity by such staff is unacceptable where it could conflict with the officers' duties. Our proposals in the Local Government and Housing Bill focus on those cases.

Dogs (Registration)

59. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for a national dog registration scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 23 January to my hon. Frined the Member for Thanet, North, (Mr. Gale) on 23 January 1989 at column 461.

Ozone Layer (Conference)

62. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ozone conference.

110. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the international conference on the ozone layer held in London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The outcome of the highly successful "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference was summarised in the chairman's message prepared by my right hon. Friend. Copies of the message, together with a more detailed account by the conference rapporteur, have been placed in the Library.

Water Privatisation

63. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete the sale to the public of the nine English water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The nine English water authorities will be privatised by the end of 1989.

97. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes meeting the chairmen of the water authorities to discuss water privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend met the chairmen on Monday 20 March. Further meetings will be arranged as necessary.

Childhood Cancer (Humberside)

64. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding has been made available by his Department for the London School of Hygiene's small area health statistics unit; and what progress has been made to date by the unit in analysing the incidence of childhood cancer in Humberside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The costs for the small area health statistics unit so far total £507,894 of which the Department has provided £167,605. As I explained to my hon. Friend in my letter of 20 March 1989, the unit is not yet fully operational and has not so far been able to undertake studies in specific areas. However, the question of the SAHSU analysing the incidence of childhood cancer in Humberside has been referred to the steering committee for the unit and I should expect the committee to reach an early decision on whether further investigation would be worthwhile and should be undertaken.

Bathing Waters

66. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many bathing waters in England and Wales met European Community standards in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: In December 1979, the Government identified 27 bathing waters in England and Wales under the terms of the EC bathing water directive (76/160/EEC); 18 of these met the mandatory standards for coliform parameters in the directive. This continued to be the position until 1986 when an extended survey of 354 bathing waters in England and Wales was carried out. The Government announced early in 1987 that these waters would be included within the scope of the bathing water directive. In 1987, 197 out of 360 identified waters in England and Wales (55 per cent.) met EC standards. In each year compliance has been assessed on the basis that at least 95 per cent. of the samples met the mandatory standards.

Sheffield UDC

67. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the first corporate plan from the chief executive of the Sheffield urban development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: I expect to receive Sheffield development corporation's first corporate plan early in the summer.

Cheap Housing

68. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his proposals on cheap housing deals between councils and developers.

Mr. Howard: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the announcement in the House by my right hon. Friend on 3 February 1989 at columns 433-34 about the role of the planning system in securing the release of land for low-cost housing to meet specific local needs in rural areas.

My Department has received a considerable number of inquiries and representations in response to our announcement which has been generally welcomed as a positive measure in helping to meet the need for suitable low-cost housing in rural areas.

Rate Support Grant (Basildon)

69. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the rate support grant for Basildon district council 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: Basildon district council is not entitled to block grant in 1989-90. Its block grant position has not changed since 1988-89. Basildon's proposed 74 per cent. rate increase cannot, therefore, be justified by changes in its block grant.

Sewage (Discharge Consents)

70. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many temporary relaxations in sewage works discharge consents have been allowed within the past 12 months.

Mr. Howard: This information is not at present held centrally. Details of applications made and consents granted under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are held on each water authority's register although in the past the consents may not always have included details of any time limits which had been agreed. Current practice is however, that any time limits which apply to consent conditions are specified as part of the consent and therefore included on the register.

Competitive Tendering

71. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress local councils are making in putting their services out to competitive tender under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Gummer: The competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 are being implemented in stages under regulations made in July 1988. The first round of work won in competition has to be under way by 1 August this year with further rounds by 1 January and 1 August in subsequent years. A substantial number of authorities are going out to tender well ahead of the timetable and dividing up the work into sensible packages. Where anti-competitive practice is alleged by contractors my officials are following up the cases vigorously.

Waterways (Pollution)

73. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of British waterways fall below acceptable European Community standards for pollution.

Mr. Moynihan: There is no European Community legislation setting general quality standards for waterways. However, the United Kingdom has designated some 50,000 km of waterways for the purposes of the EEC directive on the "Quality of freshwater needing protection or improvement in order to support fish life" (78/659/EEC).

In 1984, a survey showed that over 90 per cent. of these waterways met all the directive's mandatory standards.

Homelessness

74. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his current plans for addressing the problem of homeless families in the light of the recent Audit Commission report, "Housing the Homeless: the Local Authority Role".

Mr. Trippier: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 22 February at column 700.

88. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department is giving to help overcome the problems faced by the single homeless in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have taken a number of measures designed to assist the single homeless who do not fall into a priority need category. These include funding the Housing Corporation's programme of hostels and shared housing, which nationally has approved at least 18,500 places since 1981, and giving priority to key workers through the Housing Corporation's mixed funding programme with a total of £58 million being made available in 1988-89 for this initiative. The Department has produced a leaflet which has been widely distributed, encouraging householders to take in lodgers; and we have also funded a IYSH trust leaflet which informs young people of their housing options before they leave home. The Housing Act 1988 will, of course, increase the amount of private rented accommodation, in the sector where young people have traditionally sought accommodation.

94. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider reallocating capital receipts in stress areas to help local authorities provide homes for homeless households.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has no powers to do this. The incidence of homelessness is, however, taken into account when capital allocations for housing are distributed to local housing authorities.

Tenants' Incentive Scheme

78. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce details of the tenants' incentive scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Corporation invited comments by 6 March on its proposal to introduce a tenants' incentive scheme in 1990. The corporation is considering the responses.

Rent Arrears

79. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the highest rental arrears recorded for (a) Langbaurgh borough council and (b) Middlesbrough borough council; in which months they occurred; and what is the present position.

Mr. Trippier: Tables showing the rent arrears outstanding to English local authorities as at 1 April 1987 and 1988 are in the Library. I have no information for other months of the year.

Rural Housing

80. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further proposals he has for enabling local authorities in rural areas to make provision for local housing need.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend on 3 February at column 433. A further announcement, about increased Housing Corporation funding for housing associations, was made by my noble Friend the Minister for Housing in another place on 7 February. Together, they will significantly increase low-cost housing provision for local need in rural areas.

Drinking Water (Oxford)

81. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the monitoring of the quality of drinking water supplied by the Thames water authority to the Oxford area.

Mr. Howard: Thames Water carries out daily monitoring for a number of substances in water supplied to the Oxford area, and undertakes about 7,000 analytical determinations a year. Further information may be obtained from the water authority.

Rented Accommodation

82. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current trend in the supply of affordable rented accommodation.

Mr. Trippier: The annual number of lettings of local authority and housing association housing has held up well in recent years. Our plans to increase private investment in the housing association sector and the 80 per cent. increase in the Housing Corporation's programme should significantly raise the output of new subsidised housing association dwellings.

Rates (Derbyshire)

86. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much Derbyshire county council's rate has increased since 1981-82; and what was the average for all other counties over the same period.

Mr. Gummer: Derbyshire county council's precept has increased by 161 per cent. since 1981-82. The average rise for all other counties since 1981-82 is 106 per cent.

Archaeological Sites

89. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that unscheduled archaeological sites of importance discovered in the course of site clearance following the granting of planning permission for redevelopment can be excavated and recorded prior to redevelopment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The desirability of preserving an ancient monument and its setting is a material consideration for the determination of planning applications, whether or not that monument is scheduled. Local planning authorities may also wish to impose conditions requiring developers to allow access for archaeologists to observe work and record items of interest.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

90. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the section 7(1) submissions received by him from the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation in the last three months.

Mr. Trippier: In the last three months the development corporation has submitted one section 7(1) application in respect of housing, associated uses and open space on a 16·7 ha site at Norton Fields, Runcorn. Statutory consultations in relation to this application are being undertaken.

Water Privatisation

91. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making in his discussions with private water companies concerning his request that they shall not raise water charges for 1989-90 by more than 10 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on 14 March at column 211-12 pursuant to the answer I gave to his question of 23 February.

Association of County Councils

92. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the officers of the Association of County Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Association of County Councils and the other local authority associations on 29 November last year. The matters discussed were the associations' responses to the consultation papers "Capital Expenditure and Finance" and "Local Authorities' Interests in Companies".

Enterprise Zones

93. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to revise the granting of tax allowances to large corporations in enterprise zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have no plans at present to revise enterprise zone benefits.

District Plans

95. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether planning inspectors take into account draft district plans before they complete their statutory confirmation.

Mr. Chope: In dealing with called-in planning applications and appeals, inspectors may have regard to local plans that are going through the statutory procedures leading to their adoption or approval. The weight to be accorded to such a plan will increase as successive stages in the statutory procedures are reached. Further advice is given in DOE circular 22/84.

Sewage Discharges

96. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sewer outfalls discharge untreated sewage into coastal waters.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 March at column 420.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when concessions were granted by his Department to South West Water to discharge raw sewage into fresh watercourses in the South Hams constituency; for how long the concessions last; and if he will review the arrangements;

(2) what quantity of raw sewage is discharged into fresh watercourses, following concessions granted by his Department to South West Water; how regularly it is permitted; and what steps are taken to neutralise that discharge so that the waters are purified to an acceptable standard;

(3) how many concessions have been granted by his Department to the South West Water authority to discharge raw sewage into fresh watercourses on the South Hams constituency; and how many have been granted for the towns of Dartmouth, Salcombe, Totnes, Ivybridge, Brixham and Kingsbridge.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 March 1989]: No such concessions have been granted by the Department.

Information is not held by the Department in a form which would allow the identification of discharges in any particular area or, where appropriate, any time limits imposed. Details of all consents granted a water authority are, however, held on the register maintained by the water authority which may be inspected, free of charge, at all reasonable hours.

The only discharges of untreated sewage to inland waters are from storm and emergency overflows. By definition, the operation of these is intermittent and thus conditions imposed reflect this and prescribe when a discharge may take place.

Business Rates

98. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes meeting representatives of small businesses to discuss non-domestic rating.

Mr. Gummer: Ministers and officials from my Department frequently meet representatives of both large and small businesses to discuss the Government's arrangements for a fairer and more stable non-domestic rating system from 1 April 1990.

Pollution Control

102. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement part II of the Control of Pollution Act since 1974.

Mr. Moynihan: The main provisions of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 were brought into force between July 1984 and October 1986. These provided for more effective protection of inland surface and underground waters, the extension of controls to cover all coastal and estuarial waters and public involvement, for the first time, in the water pollution control system.

These provisions are to be re-enacted and where appropriate strengthened in the Water Bill.

Water Rates

106. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average percentage increase in water rates to be charged by the statutory water companies over the coming year.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) on 14 March at columns 211-12, pursuant to his question on 23 February.

Urban Dereliction

109. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by urban development corporations in tackling urban dereliction over the last year.

Mr. Trippier: Excellent progress has been made. Many illustrations were recorded in "Progress on Cities", produced on 9 March to mark the anniversary of the action for cities initiative. Three particular projects announced that day give an indication of the scope and diversity of UDC activities: a major subsea research, development and testing centre (Teesside DC); a £1·8 million environmental improvement scheme for the historic Castlefields area of Manchester (Central Manchester DC) and a construction industry training centre in conjunction with Henry Boot Training Ltd. (Black Country DC).

Housing (Brent)

112. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the housing investment programme allocation for 1989-90 for the London borough of Brent.

Mr. Trippier: An initial allocation of £15,233 million has been made.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the first report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be published.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The first report of HMIP was published today.

The report gives a full account of the inspectorate's activities and achievements in its first year of existence, from April 1987 to March 1988, and touches on some of the major developments in 1988-89. HMIP's first annual report comes at a time of increased awareness of environmental and pollution issues. It should be of interest to everyone with a direct concern in pollution control including central and local government, industry, pollution specialists, pressure groups and researchers.

We set up HMIP in 1987 to provide a more effective and efficient basis for carrying out pollution control. Its formation laid the foundation for an integrated approach to pollution control. We accept that improving environmental standards demands high levels of monitoring and enforcement and adequate resources. The inspectorate's first report demonstrates the vitally important contribution that its activities are making to the protection and enhancement of the environment.

We have already taken the lead in Europe in preparing an integrated pollution control system. Integrated pollution control is the way legislation on environmental protection will develop across Europe in the 1990s.

The system will enable us to achieve a real and lasting overall reduction in pollution. We have recently strengthened the inspectorate's professional capability by the addition of 13 posts. This will ensure that they will remain in the vanguard of the Government's initiatives on environmental policy.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Rate Defaulters (Imprisonment)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were imprisoned in England year by year since 1979 for defaulting on their domestic rate payments; and what was the average term of imprisonment.

Mr. Gummer: The number of people imprisoned in England and Wales since 1979 because of non-payment of rates was:

	Number
1979	525
1980	465
1981	415
1982	483
1983	461
1984	420
1985	384
1986	366
1987	350

Information for England only and on the average term of imprisonment could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Magpies

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further studies he has made, since 1985, of the increase in the number of magpies in England and Wales, and the effect of this on the songbird population, particularly in the south of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council has supplied information on the magpie population from the results of the common bird census carried out annually by the British Trust for Ornithology (BTO). The NCC advise that magpie numbers in parts of southern England have increased markedly in recent years. Present evidence, pending the outcome of further studies, is that predation by magpies is only one of a number of complex factors affecting the population of small birds.

I understand that a research project by the BTO and the university of Sheffield, sponsored by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, will commence shortly to assess the effect of magpies on songbird populations. The Game Conservancy has a study under way of magpie predation of gamebirds.

Housing Associations

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average housing association rent in Camden, Hammersmith and Fulham, Kensington and Chelsea, Islington, Westminster and the City of London; and what this is predicted to be for (i) fair rent tenancies and (ii) assured tenancies by 1991 and 1994-95.

Mr. Trippier: In 1988 the average annual registered rents for housing association property in the London boroughs specified, with the exception of the City of London for which no information is available, were as follows:

Camden	1,424
Hammersmith and Fulham	1,382
Kensington and Chelsea	1,339
Islington	1,299
Westminster	1,630

The figures include both furnished and unfurnished accommodation, but do not include rents for property let under assured tenancies or occupied under licence for which information is not available.

No predictions are made of future rent levels.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing associations and local authority homes have been completed annually between 1978-79 and 1988-89 in the central London boroughs of Camden, Hammersmith and Fulham, Kensington and Chelsea, Islington, Westminster and the City of London.

Mr. Trippier: Housebuilding completions reported as taking place in these housing authorities in each calendar year from 1980 to 1987 appear in the "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas; 1980 to 1987". Figures for 1978, 1979 and the first half of 1988 were published in "Local Housing Statistics" issues 49, 59 and 87 respectively.

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Water Quality

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the number of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) iron, (b) manganese, (c) copper, (d) zinc, (e) phosphorus, (f) barium, (g) cadmium, (h) chromium, (i) mercury, (j) nickel and (k) lead in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Thames water authority from the Hampton treatment works;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the number of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) herbicides, (b) fungicides, (c) PCBs, (d) insecticides, (e) total bacteria counts, (f) faecal coliforms and (g) faecal streptococci in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Thames water authority from the Hampton treatment works;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the number of breaches in 1988 in the EEC guide levels and maximum concentrations for (a) chlorides, (b) sulphates, (c) magnesium, (d) sodium, (e) potassium, (f) nitrates, (g) aluminium, (h) nitrites and (i) phenols in water intended for human consumption supplied by the Thames water authority from the Hampton treatment works.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from Thames water authority that the water leaving the Hampton treatment works complied with the standards set in the EC drinking water directive for all the parameters listed by the hon. Member during 1988 except for a single sample which exceeded the herbicide standard.

I have no information in relation to EC guide levels.

Rain Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has had from Dr. John Houghton, director general of the Meteorological Office, about his request for information about the climatological consequences of the destruction of the Brazilian rain forest.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department will continue to keep in touch with the work led by Dr. John Houghton which I described in my reply to the hon. Member on 17 March, Official Report, column 367.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sewerage outlets discharge untreated raw sewage into the sea.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave today to the Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy).

Construction Aggregates

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish new guidance on the supply of construction aggregates.

Mr. Chope: Planning guidelines for aggregates provision in England and Wales are being published today in mineral planning guidance note 6 and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library. It updates and replaces advice issued previously in DOE circular 21/82 and Welsh Office circular 30/82 and has been prepared following a public consultation exercise in 1988. The guidelines recognise that there is a need to ensure continuity of supplies to the construction industry of basic raw materials, and to meet demand. However, it is very important to strike the best balance of social, environmental and economic costs, and the guidelines demonstrate the burden of responsibility on mineral planning authorities in deciding applications for aggregate mineral extraction.

Aggregates working is often noisy, dusty and visually intrusive and the Government believe that industry, in consultation with local planning authorities, should make every effort to reduce these damaging effects. There is also a need to apply the national and regional guidelines at the mineral planning authority level and the Government believe that this important work should be treated as a priority task by the planning authorities and the regional aggregates working parties. In addition this recent review of the guidelines and the public consultation exercise have highlighted a number of long-term supply issues and these will be addressed by the Government through the Department of the Environment's mineral planning research programme.

London Residuary Body (Superannuation Fund)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has received from the London residuary body in respect to the transfer of its superannuation fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has received proposals from Sir Godfrey Taylor, chairman of the London residuary body (LRB), under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985 for the transfer to a new corporate body on 1 April 1990 of the superannuation fund and associated functions, rights and liabilities which it inherited on the abolition of the former Greater London council.

My right hon. Friend is minded to accept the LRB's proposals, with certain modifications, and will shortly be commencing consultations with the London boroughs, including the City, and other interested parties over an outline for the transfer of these responsibilities. The scheme proposes the establishment of a new "London Pensions Fund", a corporate body with a membership of between seven and 11 members appointed by my right hon. Friend. It would have an independent chairman, with the remaining board members being drawn equally from London local government and independent sources. It is proposed that the London Pensions Fund would be brought within the scope of local government legislation.

My right hon. Friend will also be seeking views on the establishment of a voluntary consultative committee which he might consult over appointments to the London Pensions Fund.

Transferred Property (Sales)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his policy will be in relation to requests for his consent under sections 105 and 133 of the Housing Act 1988 to sales of transferred property by a mortgagee or chargee in possession.

Mr. Trippier: Subject to certain exceptions (notably sales under the right to buy), sections 105 and 133 of the Housing Act 1988 require my consent to be obtained before property which has been transferred by local authorities under section 32 or 43 of the Housing Act 1985 or by public sector landlords under part IV of the 1988 Act ("tenants' choice") may be disposed of by its new owners.

We understand that some prospective acquirers of property under these powers have it in mind to apply, at the time when a mortgage or other charge is granted on transferred property as security for a loan, for my consent to subsequent disposals should certain defined circumstances arise. My right hon. Friend will, of course, consider all applications for consent under sections 105 and 133 on their merits. Subject to that, however, my right hon. Friend will be prepared in principle to consider sympathetically applications at the time when such mortgages and charges are to be granted for my consent under either section 105 or section 133 to subsequent disposals of transferred dwellings by named mortgagees and chargees in the exercise of a power of sale, provided:

that the dwellings to be disposed of are vacant when the power of sale is exercised;

that the sales are to individuals intending to use the dwellings as their only or principal homes; that the sales are at the best price that can reasonably be obtained; and that the sales are by the mortgagee or chargee in exercise of the power of sale contained in the original mortgage or charge.

Forest Proposal (Midlands)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has considered and responded to the Countryside Commission's proposal for the creation of a new forest in the midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 21 March 1989]: I understand that the Countryside Commission intends to submit proposals for the creation of a new forest in the midlands to the Department later this year, after considering a feasibility study by consultants and carrying out consultations with the Forestry Commission and other interests.

Docklands (Tourism)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to develop tourism in docklands.

Mr. David Trippier [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The LDDC fully recognises the tourism potential of docklands. It has responsibility for tourism and leisure, projects to improve information to tourists and the tourism industry, projects to conserve and improve the environment and restore historic buildings, and it is attracting imaginative private sector developments, including proposals likely to bring in visitors. Public transport improvements are also helping.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what tourist facilities are being built into Canary wharf.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Canary wharf is planned to include 500,000 sq ft of retailing and other leisure facilities and extensive public places.

Air Pollution

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce new limits for diesel engine pollutants emissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

We shall be consulting shortly on regulations which will apply limits on gaseous emissions from diesel engined vehicles for the first time.

For cars we shall apply European standards in two stages. The first stage (directive 83/351/EEC) sets standards identical to those which currently apply to petrol-engined vehicles. It will take effect on 1 October 1990. The second stage (directive 88/76/EEC) will apply the same limits that will mean the general fitment of catalysts to petrol-engined cars. It will take effect by 1 October 1993.

On 1 October 1990 we shall also apply the European particulate limits for diesel-engined cars (directive 88/436/EEC). Special arrangements in line with all these directives will be made for direct injection diesel-engined cars.

For all other diesel-engined vehicles we shall apply the recently agreed European standard on gaseous emissions (directive 88/77/EEC) at the earliest date permitted, 1 October 1990.

Discussions are continuing in the European Community on a tightening of the 88/77/EEC standards and on the introduction of particulate limits for these other categories of vehicle.

UN Environment Programme

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who represented Her Majesty's Government, at the latest United Nations environment programme conference in Basle on the international trade and regulation of hazardous and toxic wastes; what proposals were made at the conference by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement about the outcome of the conference.

Mr. Ridley: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside led the United Kingdom delegation at the diplomatic conference in Basle. I will make a statement about the conference as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Regional Assistance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected residual regional develpment grant expenditure for Scotland for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Rifkind: Estimated gross expenditure on regional development grant, including both the original and revised schemes, in 1988-89 is expected to be around £76 million. Planned net provision for 1989-90 is £61·2 million—details are published in the supply estimates.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected regional selective assistance expenditure in Scotland for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Rifkind: Planned net provision for regional selective assistance and related schemes (including regional enterprise grants), consistent with the figures published in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on the Scotland Programme," for 1989-90, 1990-91 aand 1991-92 is £63 million, £80 million and £80 million respectively.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure on regional development grant for each of the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive, and the estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 March 1989]: Total gross expenditures on regional development grant under both the original and revised schemes in the years 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive are £143 million, £109·2 million, £107·5 million, £170·2 million and £78 million respectively. Estimated gross expenditure in 1988-89 is expected to be around £76 million. Planned provision for 1989-90 is published in the Supply estimates. Planned net provision, consistent with the figures published in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is approximately £30 million.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Development Agency about its future.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have regular meetings with the board of the Scottish Development Agency about its future plans. Most recently, my right hon. and learned Friend met the Chairman, Sir David Nickson, on 7 March.

Landfill Sites (Inspectors)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inspectors responsible for landfill sites are currently employed in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The authorities responsible for landfill sites are the district and islands councils. The hazardous waste inspectorate of the Scottish Development Department, which examines the management of hazardous waste by the responsible authorities, employs six staff for a part of their time equivalent to about two full-time officers.

Illegal Dumping

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy towards central Government subsidy of incinerators as a means of removing the cost incentive for illegal dumping.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Government policy is that the full costs of disposal and treatment should be met by waste producers. The Government have proposed strengthened and extended controls, including a duty of care on producers and holders of waste to ensure its legal disposal.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy towards the imposition of heavier fines on people convicted of illegal waste-dumping.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Fine levels are set against a five point standard scale, which is subject to periodic review. The penalty imposed in any individual case is for the court to determine.

Re-Chem Incinerator (Bonnybridge)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the closure of the Re-Chem incinerator at Bonnybridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The Government received four representations in 1984, two from industry, one from the industrial waste panel (Scotland) and one from Glasgow college of technology expressing concern about the closure. None has been received since then.

Hazardous Waste

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy towards the compilation of a register of hazardous waste producers, with information relating to the means of waste disposal in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The disposal of controlled waste in Scotland is governed by the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Regulations 1977 and the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. All waste must be disposed of at a site which is being used in accordance with a licence issued by the waste disposal authority for the area, and the waste disposal authority must keep available at its principal office a register of these licences. The special waste regulations make provision for a system of consignment notes to be used by those who produce, transfer for disposal or dispose of special waste so that the waste disposal authority concerned is properly informed.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy to give statutory powers of enforcement to the hazardous waste inspectorate in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The proposals for amendments to waste disposal law, which were announced by the Scottish Development Department on 14 February, including the placing of the inspectorate on a statutory footing.

Waste Disposal

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are proposed for giving citizens in Scotland greater access to information about the transportation and disposal of waste in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Under the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland) Regulations 1977, every waste disposal authority keeps a register of site licences, which is available for public inspection at its principal office. Some of the Government's proposals to strengthen and extend the controls on waste disposal, including the registration of waste handlers, will result in greater public access to information.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take in order to deter illegal waste dumping in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: The Government support the proposals in the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Bill to deter illegal waste dumping. The Scottish Development Department will shortly be issuing a follow-up consultation paper on waste disposal law amendment, which will address the subject.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the transportation of waste from Scotland to Third world countries in exchange for foreign currency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally, but the hazardous waste inspectorate of the Scottish Development Department is not aware of any traffic of this kind.

Landfill Sites

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of landfill sites by district in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Our latest information on the number of landfill sites where an operating licence or council resolution is in force is as follows:

Labour Statistics

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what change there has been in the level of employment in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Between June 1979 and June 1988 the civilian work force in employment in Scotland is provisionally estimated to have fallen by 77,000, but in the most recent five years there was an increase of 106,000. These estimates are subject to revision when the results of the 1987 census of employment become available.

Wildlife Poisoning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the last five years the number of cases of wildlife poisoning in Scotland caused by the illegal use of pesticides or poisoning; and if he will identify the species involved and if possible the poison or pesticide involved.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of incidents and affected species involving the illegal use of pesticides or misuse of poisons against wildlife in Scotland, as confirmed by the wildlife incident investigation service, in each of the years from 1984 to 1988, are given in the table.

Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is Forestry Commission policy on leaving unplanted areas of archaeological, scientific or wildlife value on Forestry Commission land; and whether the commission has a rule of thumb as to the percentage of unplanted land it will maintain in its operational forests;

(2) whether the Forestry Commission has examined the wildlife conservation value of its properties in the lowlands of England and Wales; what is the policy of the commission on leaving areas in such properties unplanted if this is seen to be in the best interests of nature conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The wildlife conservation value of the Forestry Commission's properties throughout Great Britain has been carefully examined in the course of drawing up conservation plans for each of its forest districts. These plans contain environmental management policies for the forests as a whole and prescriptions for sites of particular conservation value.

All well-designed forests have a proportion of open space within them for environmental as wel as practical reasons. These include not only roads and rides needed for operational purposes, but open spaces left for the protection of sites of archaeological value, the provision of deer glades, the needs of particular flora and fauna, and the development of recreation. Open spaces near water are of particular value. Since each conservation plan is tailored to the circumstances of individual sites, there is no fixed percentage of land to be left unplanted, but it is often of the order of 15 per cent. Where open space is lacking in existing forests opportunities are sought to create it at the earliest practical opportunity.

Further information is given in the four environment leaflets published recently by the Forestry Commission, copies of which are in the Library. In addition, the commission is preparing a more comprehensive booklet giving guidelines on nature conservation in forests.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, locations and areas of woodland grant scheme applications in excess of 100 hectares submitted since the start of the scheme in Scotland, showing for which of these an environmental assessment has been requested by the Forestry Commission; and if he will give reasons why environmental assessment has not been requested for any remaining applications.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Those applications received under the woodland grant scheme for more than 100 hectares of new planting in Scotland are listed in the tables. Environmental assessments have been requested for nine of these applications. An environmental assessment was not requested for the others, either because the applications were received before the environmental assessment provisions took effect or because they did not meet the criteria specified in the Forestry Commission booklet "Environmental Assessment of Afforestation Projects". A copy of this booklet is in the Library.

In addition, environmental assessments have been requested for six applications of less than 100 hectares.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will expand his response to "Forestry in Scotland" by the Countryside Commission and "Forestry in Scotland: Planning the Way Ahead" by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Mr. Rifkind: My letters to the chairman of the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the president of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities provide a full response to the reports by the commission and the convention respectively. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for 1989-90, 1990-91, and 1991-92, the provision for value-added tax liability on new construction within the budgets given for capital expenditure on roads by his Department and the local authorities in Scotland in chapter 17 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The relevant provision for trunk roads is £13·9 million, £19 million and £20·7 million respectively for the years in question. Allocations to local authorities for capital expenditure on road construction do not include provision for VAT liabilities. Local authorities are able to reclaim VAT where supply is not for the purpose of business activities.

Drinking Water (Contamination)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all water supplies in Scotland that are in breach of the EEC directive on water quality in respect of safety limits in lead in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The water supplies concerned are listed in the table. Improvement work is in hand for all these supplies and in most cases will be completed by the end of this year. Of the remaining 17 supplies, all in Strathclyde and Lothian regions, 15 are expected to comply with the EC limit not later than mid-1991 and two major schemes, of which lead remedial work is only a part, will extend into 1992.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in implementing section 5 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, in respect of its obligation to place duties upon educational authorities and social services authorities to identify, assess and provide for the needs of people with mental handicaps at the time that they move out of full-time education; and what arrangements have been made to ensure that these facilities are being monitored in respect of their implementation in terms of quality of life.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Section 5 does not apply in Scotland. The relevant provision is section 13 which came into operation on 1 February 1988. We are currently considering appropriate monitoring arrangements.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and whether he will meet the cost implications required to appoint authorised representatives for all people with mental handicaps in connection with the provision of services and the right to obtain relevant information to facilitate an informed choice of a selection of appropriate support services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A date for implementing sections 1 and 2 has not yet been set. The cost implications of those provisions will be the subject of consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interests.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Scottish legal aid board will be authorised to pay legal aid accounts in cases where prior to the commencement of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Amendment (No. 3) Regulations, work carried out by the solicitor had the effect of bringing proceedings to an end before a full section 1 application was determined.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In terms of a determination under section 4(2)(c) of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986, as amended, dated 29 July 1988, the Scottish legal aid board may make payments under specified conditions in cases where full civil legal aid is not made available.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, which date will be fixed by the Scottish legal aid board as the date of notification by a solicitor that the £60 limit has been exceeded, under the terms of the Advice and Assistance (Scotland) Prospective Cost (No. 3) Regulations, 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The date of the solicitor's letter notifying the Scottish legal aid board that the £60 limit has been exceeded.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is given concerning any provisions there are for payment in full of legal aid to solicitors, under the Civil Legal Aid (Scotland) Amendment (No. 2) and (No. 3) Regulations 1988, where work is undertaken in good faith for a client who was believed to be eligible for legal aid; and from whom it was agreed to accept payment by instalments towards his estimated legal aid contribution, on which the client subsequently defaults after legal aid has been refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In a letter to the profession dated 5 August 1988, and in the winter 1988 edition of its quarterly journal The Recorder, the Scottish legal aid board has advised solicitors to make such arrangements with clients as will protect them against the possibility of a refusal by the client to pay, noting that this is ultimately a matter between solicitor and client.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to increase the number of management agreements negotiated to date in environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland and improve their attractiveness to farmers and crofter within environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland has published explanatory leaflets and held public meetings in each of the designated areas in Scotland to publicise the scheme. Local officers of the Department and Scottish agricultural college advisory staff are available to provide information and advice to farmers or crofters in the designated areas.

Sports Medicine

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of health expenditure is devoted to sports medicine; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will state the number of consultants engaged in sports medicine and the health boards by whom they are employed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to expand the practice of sports medicine within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of medical services for the treatment of injuries whether sporting or otherwise is for individual health boards.

Education Initiatives

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the main education initiatives which the Government have undertaken in Scotland since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A list, with short descriptions, of the main initiatives undertaken in Scottish education since 1979 follows:

1. Standard Grade—Introduction to schools of new courses and examinations for age 14-16 that give every pupil credit for his or her achievements.

2. Action Plan—A new deal in education and training for age 16+, bringing pre-vocational and vocational training up to date and fitting it to the needs of employers and individuals.

3. Technical and Vocational Education Initiative (TVEI)—A national programme to provide within the school curriculum for the practical and applied skills and attitudes needed in employment in the years ahead.

4. Industry/Education Initiative—A national measure to increase links between schools and employers so that each has a better understanding of the others needs and requirements.

5. Curriculum and Assessment—A review of the primary and early secondary curriculum and of assessment procedures, to introduce better quality and greater consistency in the delivery of education, and make the good practice of some the standard for all.

6. Modern Languages—Planned extension of competence in a modern European language to all pupils.

7. Special Educational Needs—More effective procedures to identify, record and make suitable provision for pupils with severe handicap. 1981 Act.

8. Pupils with Learning Difficulties—Development of better provision and support for those pupils.

9. Information Technology—Support for provision of computers in all schools.

10. Equipment for Science and Technology—Support for extension and modernisation of equipment in schools.

11. Research—Research projects to support all major Government initiatives.

12. Publication of Inspection Reports on Schools—Reports produced on all schools which have been subjected to a full inspection, for information to parents and exemplification of good practice.

13. Training for Teachers

13.1 All graduate entry to teaching announced in 1983. New degree course for primary teaching introduced in 1984; degrees for music and technology teaching in 1987.

13.2 Revised and extended postgraduate courses with more emphasis on school experience and the integration of theory and practice (primary-1986, secondary-1987).

13.3 Better delivery of in-service training by:

the introduction in 1984 of a specific grant to education authorities to encourage priority to nationally important topics; indentification of priority areas through the creation of the Scottish Council for Staff Development in Education (SCOSDE) in 1987; and an enabling clause in the self-Governing Schools Etc (Scotland) Bill currently before Parliament to introduce the appraisal of teachers' performance.

14. Teachers' Pay and Conditions of Service—Revision through agreement of teachers' pay and conditions of service in 1987, which made specific provision for 14.1 the appointment of a new grade of senior teacher;

14.2 time away from the classroom for parents' evenings;

14.3 time for in-service training and other forms of professional development (PAT).

15. Staff Development

15.1 A major management training programme for headteachers has been launched.

15.2 More training support is planned for probationer teachers.

15.3 Views have been invited on a voucher scheme to stimulate teachers' personal professional development.

16. Parental Choice—Introduction of a right for parents to choose their children's school. More than 13 per cent. of pupils at P1 stage are now the subject of a placing request, more than 10 per cent. of pupils at S1. More than 90 per cent. of placing requests are granted.

17. Parental Involvement in Schools—Establishment of School Boards in every local authority school in Scotland by October 1989; membership to include parents, teachers and co-opted members. This will give parents an effective voice in their children's education and in the management of schools.

18. Assisted Places Scheme—The Assisted Places Scheme, introduced in 1981, has widened the scope for exercise of choice by parents and the range of educational opportunity for children, by enabling parents of modest income to send their children to independent fee-paying schools if they so prefer. The Scheme assists 2,670 pupils, at 41 schools. From 1989-90 the Scheme will be extended to include pupils in the later stages of preparatory schools. The total number of pupils benefiting is expected to rise to about 3,000 by 1991-92.

19. Technology Academies—An initiative involving private sector sponsorship to extend the scope for choice, to widen the range and diversity of schools available and to raise standards and expectations of pupils, parents and teachers.

20. Parent Involvement in Discipline—Regulations made in 1982 require parents to be involved in decisions about disciplinary behaviour at a very early stage where exclusion from a school is in prospect. The closer involvement of parents with schools through School Boards will also encourage the partnership between home and school in maintaining good standards of behaviour.

21. Abolition of Corporal Punishment—Since 1987 corporal punishment has been abolished as a sanction for pupils whose education is directly provided in whole or in part from public funds.

22. Playground Supervision—Some £4 million has been provided in the Revenue Support Grant settlement in 1989-90, to enable education authorities to provide for proper playground supervision at lunchtimes.

23. Educational Expenditure—Between 1979-80 and 1987-88 net current expenditure per pupil by local authorities on schools increased in real terms by 39 per cent. (now £1,587 per pupil compared with £1,143 in 1979-80 at 1987-88 prices).

Burrell Gallery

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the cost of building the Burrell gallery in Glasgow was met by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have today authorised the payment of £595,662 in full and final settlement of the Government's grant contribution towards the cost of building the gallery. This will make the final total of Government grant £9,426,160. A total of £1,742,336 was contributed by the Burrell fund and the balance of just under 50 per cent. was met by Glasgow district council.

Investment Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the will give the total number of applicants (a) received and (b) approved for investment grants from 1 April 1988 to 31 December 1988; what was the total amount of expenditure involved; and what the total estimated expenditure planned for that period;

(2) if he will give the total number of applicants (a) received and (b) approved for innovation grants, from 1 April 1988 to 31 December 1988; the total amount of expenditure involved and the total estimated expenditure involved and (c) the total estimated expenditure planned for that period.

Pharmaceutical Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of pharmaceutical imports from Greece in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

Imports of medicinal and pharmaceutical products from Greece in 1987 and 1988 were £6·7 million and £11·8 million respectively.

Expenditure

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give the total national United Kingdom expenditure on health care provision, including both public and private sector provision, but excluding any double counting, in money terms, for the latest 10 financial years for which figures are available; and whether this includes the voluntary sector;

(2) if he will give the national United Kingdom expenditure on private sector health care provision in money terms, for the latest 10 financial years for which figures are available; and whether this includes the voluntary sector.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The following table shows annual United Kingdom public and private health care expenditure in the period 1979 to 1988. The figures are derived from the United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office and do not double-count expenditures. The voluntary sector is not separately identified in the national accounts.

South Cumbria District Health Authority

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes in revenue have been made in South Cumbria district health authority since 30 September 1982 in cash, real terms and percentages.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to my right hon. Friend.

Vehicle Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health hazards presented by those exhaust emissions of vehicles which are capable of being reduced or eliminated by catalytic converters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The effects of the relevant primary pollutants, carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen, and of secondary pollutants, notably ozone formed by subsequent reactions in the air, have been considered in consultation with United Kingdom experts and through the World Health Organisation. Their assessment is that there is no evidence that current environmental concentrations in the United Kingdom arising from traffic sources present health hazards.

Social Workers (Training)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has plans for his Department to make a direct contribution to the improvement of the training of social workers dealing with mentally disordered people;

(2) whether he has had discussions with local authority associations and directors of social services with a view to improving the training and supervision of social workers dealing with mentally disordered people.

Mr. Mellor: Social work training is essentially a matter for the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. We have had no discussions with the local authority associations or directors of social services about training for those social workers dealing with the mentally ill.

General Practice Finance Corporation Ltd.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to complete the sale of the General Practice Finance Corporation Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am pleased to announce that I have accepted an offer of £145 million from Norwich Union Life Insurance Society for the acquisition of all the ordinary share capital of the General Practice Finance Corporation Ltd., and the repayment of the company's indebtedness to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. The transaction is being completed this morning.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulances from the London ambulance service were deployed at the Clapham rail crash; how many St. John ambulance brigade vehicles were brought into use as a result; and if any non-London ambulances were used in London on the day in question.

Mr. Freeman: The LAS deployed 35 ambulances, 11 large sitting case vehicles and three small sitting case vehicles. A further seven vehicles attended the scene from the LAS training school, as well as the emergency control vehicle. In addition, six ambulances from the Surrey ambulance service with support from its control unit and three vehicles from their training school attended. These were the only non-London ambulances used in London on that day. No St. John ambulances were used as a result of the incident.

Sports Medicine

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the number of consultants engaged in sports medicine in England and Wales and the health authorities by which they are employed.

Mr. Mellor: Sports medicine as such is not a recognised medical speciality so no such figures are available.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of health expenditure in England and Wales is devoted to sports medicine; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to expand the practice of sports medicine within the National Health Service in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Treatment for injuries sustained as a result of sport are not separately costed. Some sports injuries will be treated by general practitioners, and others in accident and emergency departments or, for example, hospital orthopaedic departments. This is a matter for clinical judgment by the responsible doctor.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each health district and health region in England and Wales the size of the waiting list on 30 September 1988, the percentage increase or decrease since 31 March 1988, and the national rank order of the district by size of waiting list.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is in the Library. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Population Statistics

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the population of England and Wales in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The estimates of resident population for England and Wales at mid-1986 and mid-1987 are 50,075,000 and 50,243,000 respectively. An estimate for mid-1988 will be available shortly.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales the number of electors on the register for each of 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The figures requested for 1988-89 have been published in "Electroal Statistics, 1988" (Series EL no. 15), a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Similar figures for 1989-90 are still being assembled centrally; they will be published in "Electoral Statistics, 1989" (Series EL no. 16) at the end of May.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental hospitals have been closed in the past year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is routinely collected but not yet available for 1988. I will place a list in the Library in the near future.

Children (Secure Accommodation)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged under 16 years are detained in Her Majesty's prisons; and when he expects to provide suitable secure accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Provisional figures for 31 December 1988, the latest date for which information is available, show there were 24 untried males aged 15 remanded to prison department establishments.

The provision of appropriate alternative facilities including secure accommodation is the statutory responsibility of local authorities. The Department has powers to make grant aid available to meet the capital cost of providing secure accommodation, and is always prepared to consider any application which might be made by local authorities to increase the stock of such facilities.

Applications from a number of authorities are actively under consideration for the provision of new or extended secure facilities and approval has already been given to build two new secure units in Birmingham and Humberside, which will provide a further 16 secure places.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the arrangements for opting for trust status for hospitals will affect the status and appointment of hospital chaplains.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Hospital chaplains who transfer from health authority employment will retain their existing contracts and rights. For the future, NHS hospital trusts will be free to appoint chaplains on such conditions as they may determine.

General Practitioners (Contract)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when formal negotiations on the proposed new contract for general practitioners began; how many meetings have taken place between the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association negotiators and his officials; how many hours of negotiation have taken place; how many departmental papers have been sent to the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association negotiators in the context of the negotiations: and how many papers have been received by his officials from the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association in response;

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Formal negotiations on the proposed new contract for general practitioners began in March 1988. They followed on from the Green Paper "Primary Health Care—an agenda for discussion" published in 1986 and the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" published in 1987. Since March 1988 there have been 18 meetings between the general medical services committee negotiators and my officials and some 100 hours of negotiations. Thirty-three papers from my Department and five from the GMSC have been considered at negotiating meetings.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times he has met the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association to discuss the proposed new contract for general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have had three meetings with the general medical services committee to discuss the proposed new contract for general practitioners on 8 September 1988, 9 February 1989 and 20 March 1989. The first two meetings were to review progress on the continuing discussions on the new contract and covered the policy aims of the revised contract very fully. The last meeting was a three-hour discussion of the eight detailed points that the GMSC wished to put to me and its requests for outstanding detailed information.

The GMSC has always agreed with me that revised regulations and a new statement of fees and allowances are required and should take effect in April 1990. We have agreed a number of points of the new contract including some originally proposed by the GMSC. I have stressed at all three meetings that I believe that we should make progress in the discussions because of the need to give GPs as much notice as possible of the new terms and conditions so that they can adjust their practices to prepare for them.

I explained to the GMSC at our last meeting that I would reflect on the detailed submissions it put to me and respond to them in the draft regulations and statement that I will now put to it. Further consultation will take place on the terms of the draft regulations and statement.

Private Residential Homes

34. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet Age Concern to discuss the rapid increase in the number of private residential homes and its relevance to the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 March 1989]: We are currently giving active consideration to the future organisation and management of community care following Sir Roy Griffiths' report. We hope to bring forward our proposals soon and will consider requests for meetings from organisations involved in community care at that stage.

Hearing Aids

40. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the waiting lists for hearing aids in the Leicester health authority; and what action the Government propose to take to cut them.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 March 1989]: Provision of local health services is a matter for the relevant district health authority, in this case Leicestershire. The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of the authority for the information he seeks.

No-fault Compensation

56. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the British Medical Association concerning the introduction of a partial no-fault compensation system for high risk medical practitioners.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 March 1989]: We have had no such discussions.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by each district health authority area the overall levels of spending per head of population;

(2) if he will list by each district health authority area the levels of spending per head of population by each identifiable cost centre.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 19 December 1988]: District based figures of total revenue expenditure per head of resident population for 1987-88 are shown in the table.

For information on average treatment costs by type of hospital for health regions and England as a whole I refer the hon. Member to the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1986-87)—copies of which are held in the Library.

Sources:

(a) 1987-88 annual accounts of district health authorities.

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population:—1987 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:

1. District capital expenditure and all expenditure incurred by regional health authorities on behalf of their regions as a whole is excluded.
2. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts.
3. Significant variations in per capita expenditure figures at district level arise principally because:
   i. people travel across district boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally.
   ii. the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for the difference in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular population.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Payments

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether a disabled person, in receipt of a disablement pension or the relevant disability allowances, is able to transfer such payment to another country, should that person decide to reside in another country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Disablement pension is payable to a person who resides abroad. Reduced earnings allowance is generally payable only during temporary absences but is payable for permanent absence if the disabled person goes to a country with which we have a social security agreement which provides for this or goes to another EC country (provided he is a national of an EC country, or a stateless person or refugee living there). Attendance allowance and mobility allowance are payable during temporary absence of up to six months, or temporary absence for the specific purpose of being treated for an incapacity or a disabling condition which began before leaving Great Britain.

Severe disablement allowance (SDA) is payable during temporary absence for the specific purpose of being treated for an incapacity which began before leaving Great Britain; or during temporary absence if the person had been continuously incapable of work for six months when the absence began and remains continuously so incapable. However, if the disabled person is going to another EC country and is helped by the EC regulations on social security for migrant workers he will be able to continue to receive SDA even if he does not meet the above rules.

Community Charge Benefits Regulations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received from computer companies on the timetable for the preparation of the community charge benefits regulations;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the preparation of the community charge benefits regulations; and when he expects that they will be laid before the House.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No representations have been received from computer companies about the timetable for preparing the Community Charge Benefits (General) Regulations 1989. Copies of the draft regulations were sent on 16 March to the Social Security Advisory Committee and to the local authority associations in accordance with the consultation requirements set out in section 61 of the Social Security Act 1986. The regulations will be laid before the House once the Social Security Bill has been enacted. In order to assist local authorities and the computer companies in their preparation for the introduction of the community charge benefits scheme, it is intended to send copies of the draft regulations to each authority as soon as possible after the completion of the consultation process.

Disablement Income Group

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department has given to the report published by the Disablement Income Group entitled, "Am I Entitled? Problems With The Take Up And Administration Of Attendance And Mobility Allowance"; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department co-operated with this study, and commented on a draft of the report but we have not yet had an opportunity to consider the final version. We shall take careful account of the findings, together with the other recent Disablement Income Group report, "Being Disabled Costs More Than They Said," in our consideration of the OPCS findings.

Social Fund

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate as to how much of the funds allocated to the social fund will have been unspent by the end of the 1988-89 financial year, broken down into (i) budgeting loans, (ii) crisis loans, and (iii) community care grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Based on expenditure to the end of February 1989 the gross underspend on the loans budget at the end of the 1988-89 financial year is estimated at £18 million. The estimated underspend on the grants budget is £20 million. Crisis loans and budgeting loans are paid from a single loans budget.

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the revised social fund allocation for the office at Chatham following the transfer to that office of responsiility for the area covered by Rochester area office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 March 1989 the office at Rochester will close and merge with the office at Chatham on 1 April 1989. Accordingly the social fund allocation for Chatham has been adjusted. The revised allocation is:

Grants budget	159,467
Loans budget	385,634

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 20 March 1989]: Information is not available in the form required because records are held on a combined basis with the Department of Health.

Information for both Departments is as follows:

Grade	Total staff	Female staff		[1]Ethnic minority staff
		Number	per cent.	Number	per cent.
1	3	—	—	—	—
2	12	2	16·7	—	—

7	1,049	173	16·5	13	1·2
TOTAL	1,773	320	18·0	62	3·5

[1] Ethnic minorities figures are based on questionnaires voluntarily completed by staff (75 per cent. response rate to date).

ENERGY

Drilling Rigs

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of his Department's instructions to operators, following the blowout on the Ocean Odyssey, to suspend drilling using flexible jumper hoses at high pressure until an alternative acceptable to his Department can be found, he will now present an interim report on the scope and methods of his Department's review and give an estimate of the completion date and if he will also release details of the number of well drilling operations which are prevented from proceeding until his Department's review is satisfactorily completed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A full report of my Department's investigation into the Ocean Odyssey accident has been passed to the procurator fiscal in Aberdeen. The report takes account of both operational practices and the failure of the flexible hoses. Work is continuing on assessing all applications for consent to drill high pressure wells in order to ensure that they can be carried out safely giving full regard to the lessons learnt from the accident. Ten well operations are being delayed. Consent will be given when my Department is satisfied that it is safe to proceed.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of his Department's order that the drilling rigs Neddril Trigon, Glomar Labrador, Glomar Moray Firth, KCA Sandpiper, Shelf Driller, Trident X and Trident XI, are to be dry docked for inspection and remedial work following the discovery of serious cracking in the spud cans of one rig, he will now release the report of these inspection findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Conclusions and recommendations will be published when the results of the inspections have been fully assessed.

Oil and Gas Pipelines

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will provide a list of all installations of submarine emergency shutdown valves in oil and gas pipelines which have been or are being, or are planned to be carried out since the Piper Alpha disaster;

(2) how many existing oil and gas pipelines were fitted with submarine emergency shutdown valves prior to the Piper Alpha disaster; and what are their locations;

(3) if he will provide a list of all oil and gas pipelines with an operating pressure in excess of 600 lb per sq in and a diameter of 6 in or greater which do not contain submarine emergency shutdown valves; and if he will also provide a list of the production platforms, onshore reception terminals and other facilities which are connected to these pipelines.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are approximately 124 offshore oil and gas pipelines with an operating pressure in excess of 600 pounds per sq in and a diameter of 6 in or greater that do not have sub-sea emergency shut down valves fitted. Full details of these have been placed in the Library.

Six pipelines had sub-sea emergency shut down valves fitted prior to the Piper Alpha accident, located adjacent to the Brent Alpha, Fulmar, Murchison, Balmoral, Buchan and Argyll platforms. It was also intended that two valves would be installed on the new pipeline, yet to be commissioned, in the Ivanhoe/Rob Roy field.

Following the Piper Alpha accident and in response to a letter from my director of safety asking for pipeline isolation arrangements to be reviewed, the industry has to date made proposals for the installation of an additional 26 sub-sea pipeline isolation systems, seven of which have already been installed. A list of these has also been placed in the Library. My Department is giving urgent consideration to the proposals from operators and I expect the completion of the review work to identify the need for additional systems.

These systems together with the mandatory offshore installation isolation systems, the proposals for which were issued for consultation this week, will provide a further step to greater safety offshore.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why the list of major changes to the Piper Alpha platform in annex B to the technical investigation interim report does not mention the tie-in of the Tartan field gas export pipeline to the Piper platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison The tie-in of the Tartan field gas export pipeline to the Piper Alpha installation was outside the scope of annex B of the technical investigation interim report but is covered elsewhere in the report.

Electricity (Cost)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the price which would be charged for electricity if the cost of fuel for generation provided the same proportion of that price as it did three years ago.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This a matter for the electricity supply industry. I will ask the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member.

Water Quality

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, he will list the criteria of the European Community directive on drinking water which the supply in his Department's head office failed to meet in 1988.

Mr. Parkinson: The responsibility for monitoring the quality of drinking water in my Department's headquarters building rests with the Property Services Agency.

I am advised that the criteria of the European Community directive on drinking water for the permitted maximum admissible levels which the supply in my Department's head office failed to meet in 1988 are:

	Permitted maximum admissible levels
Sulphate	250mg/litre
Fluoride	1500ug/litre
Potassium	12mg/litre
Sodium	175mg/litre
Magnesium	50mg/litre
Iron	50ug/litre
Manganese	50ug/litre
Nickel	50ug/litre
Conductivity	1500us/cm
Turbidity	4NTU

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the liaison arrangements between his Department and the international safeguards authorities at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna and Euratom in Luxembourg over the transport and transfer of nuclear materials to and from the Atomic Weapons Establishment to the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Commission regulation (Euratom) 3227/76 and the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement make provision for the receipt from and shipment to a facility not under safeguards.

Sellafield (Safeguards)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if full facility attachments and particular safeguards provisions are now in force for all facilities at Sellafield containing safeguardable nuclear materials; and what has been the cost of implementation of a comprehensive safeguards regime for Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The particular safeguards for provisions for facilities at BNFL Sellafield are currently under discussion and to date four have been brought into force. Facility attachments for certain facilities which the IAEA inspect are also being negotiated.

The costs of meeting safeguards requirements cannot be separately identified among the general running costs of the facilities concerned. The costs incurred by Euratom and the IAEA are a matter for the authorities concerned.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Self-defence

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that he give attention to the need for self-defence education, as part of physical education, in secondary schools, and to the necessary training for physical education teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: At the time of that recommendation, responsibility for determining the content of the school curriculum locally rested with individual schools, governing bodies and local education authorities as appropriate. The Education Reform Act 1988, however, establishes a national curriculum which includes physical education. Arrangements for considering the content of guidelines on PE will be set up by June 1990 with a view to beginning to implement them in schools from autumn 1992. Self-defence education may be among the matters to be considered. It will be for LEAs to determine the necessary in-service training for teachers of PE, and for teacher training institutions to decide upon the content of initial teacher training courses.

School Leavers

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the change in the proportion of school leavers in the north-west going on to further or higher education in the north-west since 1979-80.

Mr. Jackson: In 1979-80, 18·2 per cent. of leavers from maintained schools in the North-west intended to proceed to a course of further or higher education. The comparable figure for 1986-87 was 27·6 per cent.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the change in pupil-teacher ratios in the north-west since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in the north-west in 1979 and 1988 were as follows:

January each year	1979	1988	Percentage change
Primary	23·6	22·5	−4·7
Secondary	16·4	15·0	−8·5

Indic Languages

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received urging that Indic languages be specified as eligible for the modern foreign languages foundation subject; what ethnic minority representatives and other interested parties he is meeting to discuss this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Indic languages are among those specified as eligible for inclusion in the national curriculum, within the framework of the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 3 March at columns 338 and 339. Since that announcement, my right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations on this matter, including one from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden). The proposals already take account of earlier representations about the inclusion of Indic languages, which had been received after the passage of the Education Reform Act. My right hon. Friend has no present plans to meet ethnic minority representatives or other parties, but will consider carefully any further representations made during the consultation period on the proposals.

Teaching as a Career

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide further resources towards recruiting people back to teaching; and if so if he is prepared to increase the budget to its teaching as a career promotion unit.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 27 January that the remit of TASC would be extended for a further three years beyond April 1990. The future level of funding of the unit is at present under consideration. An important part of TASC's activity will continue to be to promote the re-employment of former teachers.

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the gap between the rate support grant additional allocation and the net effect of improvements to teachers' pay and conditions of employment, will be met in full from central sources.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is consulting the local authority associations and others about his proposals to give effect to the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions in 1989-90. Paragraph 4 of my right hon. Friend's consultative letter of 16 February made clear that the Government do not intend to revise the rate support grant settlement on account of those proposals. The additional cost to local authorities of the proposals will be offset in part by the greater than expected reduction in the employers' contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme which my right hon. Friend announced on 10 February.

University Staff

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional funds have been earmarked specifically for university staff salaries for each of the years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92; and what conditions have been attached.

Mr. Jackson: Following the 1987 salary settlement the Government have earmarked £67 million for the salaries of academic staff in institutions to be funded by the Universities Funding Council in 1989-90 on condition that the universities produce satisfactory evidence of the implementation of staff appraisal. The Government have also offered to make additional sums available over the three years for staff pay if all industrial action ceases and settlements which introduce differentiation into the pay of lecturers and technicians are agreed.

Nursery and Primary Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total capital expenditure for nursery and primary education for each of the last 10 years in absolute cash terms and in real terms using 1979 as the base year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information available is as follows:

Local authority expenditure on nursery and primary education England only

£000

	Cash	Real terms
1979-80	104,712	104,712
1980-81	135,813	114,561
1981-82	106,902	82,163
1982-83	107,998	77,517
1983-84	122,904	84,310
1984-85	144,000	94,131
1985-86	161,187	99,895
1986-87	177,768	106,585
1987-88	n.a.	—
1988-89	n.a.	—

The above figures do not include expenditure for voluntary aided and special agreement primary and nursery schools, for which information is not readily available.

Teacher Training

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many students who entered initial teacher training are specialising in nursery education for each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many students who entered all forms of initial teacher training are specialising in early years education, up to seven years old, for each of the last 10 years;

(3) how many post graduate certificate for education students have entered initial teacher training specialised in primary school teaching for each of the last 10 years;

(4) how many students have entered all forms of initial teacher training specialising in primary education for each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available on the number of students entering initial teacher training who specialise in nursery education. The first table gives the numbers of students entering courses of initial teacher training specialising in early years education since 1986. The second table shows numbers of students entering primary courses of initial teacher training since 1982. These are the years for which, in each case, information is available.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the governors of a school seeking grant-maintained status, and where a ballot of parents has received a majority yes vote, will have the same right to comment on objections subsequently submitted by the local education authority as the authority itself has for commenting on objections to section 12 notices; and whether this applies where the school in question is itself the subject of a section 12 notice.

Mrs. Rumbold: Objections to proposals from schools seeking grant-maintained status are submitted direct to my right hon. Friend and are not automatically shown to the governing body. However in considering the proposals my right hon. Friend takes steps to ensure that he has all the information necessary for him to make a decision, including where appropriate comments from the governing body on objections to the proposals. Proposals for grant-maintained status are treated in the same way for a school which is also the subject of a section 12 notice, but in that case both proposals are considered together.

Lecturers (Dispute)

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action is being considered to ensure that students' examinations will not be jeopardised as a result of the current lecturers' dispute.

Mr. Jackson: This is a matter for the university authorities. I understand that they are actively considering a range of possibilities.

National Curriculum

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if sufficient copies of the national curriculum are available in schools in preparation for September.

Mrs. Rumbold: Following the publication of national curriculum documents for mathematics and science on 14 March, initial copies were sent to schools in time to arrive before the end of their Easter term. A second instalment will be distributed by local education authorities after Easter, which will allow one copy for every primary teacher and secondary teacher of mathematics or science. It is intended that national curriculum documents for key stage 1 in English will be distributed to schools in early June.

Derbyshire County Council

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much Derbyshire county council has spent on primary and secondary education each year since 1981-82, in total, and per pupil.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is given in the table:

Net institutional expenditure[1] and spend per pupil[2]

Year	Primary schools: Net institutional expenditure £ million	Primary schools: Unit cost £	Secondary schools: Net institutional expenditure £ million	Secondary schools: Unit cost £
1981-82	46·9	575	60·1	795
1982-83	49·5	635	65·5	870
1983-84	51·7	690	70·5	950
1984-85	54·1	730	73·6	1,020
1985-86	58·1	780	78·1	1,125
1986-87	65·3	875	86·6	1,305
1987-88	[3]75·2	[3]990	95·9	1,530

[1] Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certin supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.
[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DoE and pupil number returns to DES.
[3] The figures for 1987-88 include nursery schools.

Education Costs

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the Government have spent on primary and secondary education each year since 1981-82.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local authorities determine their own education budgets. Rate support grant paid by the Government in support of local authority spending is not hypothecated to individual services, and education specific grants are not necessarily paid on a sectoral basis. The information requested is not therefore available.

Books (Expenditure)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the spending on books in England per primary school child for every year for the last 10 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: While local authorities' expenditure returns to the Department of the Environment show separate figures for books, these need to be treated with caution because of differing local authority practices in allocating spending between books and equipment. The table therefore shows spending figures for books and equipment together as well as for books separately.

Expenditure per pupil on books and equipment
Primary schools, England, £ cash

	Books and equipment	Within which, books
1977-78	11·40	3·60
1978-79	12·80	4·20
1979-80	14·30	4·70
1980-81	16·00	5·30
1981-82	18·20	5·90
1982-83	20·90	7·00
1983-84	22·80	7·10
1984-85	23·50	7·30
1985-86	24·90	7·50
1986-87	28·00	8·20

The Government's expenditure plans for 1989-90 allow for provision per primary pupil for books and equipment to increase by 32 per cent. in cash over the 1986-87 level.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing, by local authority areas, the number of full-time equivalent 0-4 year-olds in nursery schools in January.

Mrs. Rumbold: In January 1988 the number of full-time equivalent pupils under five in maintained nursery schools in each local education authority in England is given in the table.

Examinations

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in each education authority achieved five or more GCSE passes or equivalent qualifications, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 14 March 1989]: The information is given in the table. The figures relating to examination results are derived from a 10 per cent. sample of school leavers from each school. Sampling error is a major consideration where information for individual local education authorities is concerned. To help mitigate the effects of sampling error, the figures are presented in the form of a three-year aggregate covering the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

PRIME MINISTER

Canadian Prime Minister (Visit)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if during the visit of the Canadian Prime Minister to Downing street on 13 March, she discussed the prospects of the sale of British nuclear submarines to Canada.

The Prime Minister: Yes, expressing the hope that the Canadian order would go to the United Kingdom. Mr. Mulroney told me he had still to take a decision.

NHS (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the Rhyl offices of the National Union of Public Employees to hear its views on (a) Her Majesty's Government's proposals for the National Health Service and (b) Clwyd health authority's proposals to close Lluesty hospital, Holywell; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be meeting a range of organisations in Wales to hear their views on the White Paper "Working for Patients".

I understand that no proposal to close Lluesty hospital has been put to Clwyd health authority. It would therefore not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend or myself to enter into any discussions at this stage.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will meet the Clwyd local medical committee and representatives from 40 general practitioner practices in Clwyd to hear the views of general practitioners concerning the White Paper "Working for Patients";

(2) if she will visit Wrexham-Mealar district hospital, Glan Clwyd district hospital and Mauceot community hospital to meet representatives of the nursing and ancillary staffs concerning Her Majesty's Government's White Paper "Working for Patients": and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she will meet Clwyd general practitioners to discuss their views of the National Health Service Review "Working for Patients";

(4) if she will meet the Clwyd local medical committee at Tegfryn, Mold, Clwyd, to discuss matters concerning the National Health Service; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be meeting a range of organisations in Wales to hear their views on the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Policing (North Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit North Wales police headquarters, Colwyn Bay, to meet the chief constable and the Gwynedd-Clwyd police committee to discuss police manning levels and to discuss developments in the level of crime; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the North Wales police. Since the Government took office 51 extra police posts have been approved for North Wales. The police authority has applied for the further 10 posts in 1990-91. This will be considered. It is encouraging to see that recorded crime in North Wales fell by 6 per cent. in 1988.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister who is representing the United Kingdom at the global convention on the control of transboundary movement of hazardous waste; and if she will make a statement on the remit of the United Kingdom's representative.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom's delegation to the diplomatic conference at Basle to draw up a convention on the transboundary movements of hazardous wastes was led by the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will make a statement about the conference as soon as possible.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister, if she will make a statement on the role of each Government Department involved in the licensing of dangerous substances, the controls over the shipment of such substances, the rescuing and disposal of cargoes containing such substances in case of accident and the monitoring and clearing up of the after effects of any accident.

The Prime Minister: The Department of the Environment is responsible for the general oversight of waste, including dangerous waste. A scheme for the notification of new substances is run jointly by the Health and Safety Executive and DoE. On registration of agricultural pesticides, the lead is taken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The Department of Transport is responsible for the regulation of the carriage of dangerous goods including waste, with specialist advice from the Health and Safety Executive and the Civil Aviation Authority as necessary.

EC Directive 84/631/EEC, and the related United Kingdom regulation, deal with the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste. International movement of dangerous substances by sea is governed by the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981 and in practice means compliance with the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code.

The marine pollution control unit in DTp is responsible for dealing with spillage and clearing up after accidents. If such goods are brought ashore here for disposal they would have to be dealt with at a suitable facility by a local authority. In serious cases advice on disposal would be available from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she has had with the Jordanian Government concerning the sale of eight Tornado aircraft to that country.

The Prime Minister: I have discussed the possible sale of Tornado to Jordan with King Hussein on a number of occasions, most recently on 13 March. I understand that the Jordanian Government, after reviewing their financial commitments, and in the light of the current economic situation in Jordan, have informed us that they would like to postpone further negotiations on the sale until more favourable circumstances prevail. This has been agreed.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what contacts she has had with the West German Government concerning the sale of eight Tornado aircraft to Jordan.

The Prime Minister: Since the Tornado is a collaborative project I have had occasion to have discussions with the Federal Republic of Germany authorities about financing arrangements for this possible sale.

Newspapers (Legal Proceedings)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what injunctions or other legal proceedings have been brought by the Government or members of the Government against individual newspapers or publishing organisations over the last 12 days.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any such proceedings.

Pamella Bordes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what discussion took place between on the one hand Downing street officers or representatives of Her Majesty's Government and on the other hand representatives of national newspapers on the question of Miss Pamella Bordes between Sunday 12 March and Monday 20 March.

The Prime Minister: Downing street press officers discharge their duties as appropriate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Junior Counsel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide for the latest available 12 month period (a) the number of junior counsel regularly practising and (b) the number of junior counsel regularly practising in the criminal courts; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of junior counsel regularly practising is 5,343 for the 12-month period ending 1 October 1988[1]; the number of junior counsel regularly practising in the criminal courts is 2,926 as at 17 March 1989[2].

[1] Figures supplied by the Bar Council based on those registered as at 1 October.

[2] Figures supplied by the Bar Mutual Indemnity Fund as at 17 March 1989.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide for the latest available 12-month period in respect of the Crown prosecution service (a) the total number of lawyers employed, (b) the number of barristers employed, (c) the number of solicitors employed, and (d) the number of cases prosecuted in (i) the magistrates' courts and (ii) the Crown court, (e) the average cost of cases prosecuted in the magistrates' courts, (f) the average cost to the Crown prosecution service, of prosecution in the Crown court excluding counsels fees and (g) the average counsel's fee in Crown court cases; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The latest 12-month period for which the information requested is available is from January to December 1988. The information requested is as follows:

(a) 1,539.
(b) 549.
(c) 990.
(d) (i) 1,354,000 defendants.
(ii) 123,000 defendants.
(Records are kept of the number of defendants, rather than the number of cases, prosecuted in each court).
(e) £47.
(f) £170.
(g) £267.

Legal Reform

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General what instructions the Director of Public Prosecutions has given to lawyers in the service of the Crown prosecution service on the public expression of any views they might have on the Lord Chancellor's Green Papers, and on their sending such views to the headquarters for collation.

The Solicitor-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has reminded all members of the Crown prosecution service that, in accordance with standard civil service practice, they should not comment publicly on matters of current political controversy. The director has expressed the view that if members of staff wish to make comments on issues raised in the Green Paper, the most appropriate course is to send them to the working party which has been set up under the chairmanship of the deputy director/chief executive to consider the Department's response to the Lord Chancellor's proposals.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General how many appeals against entrance clearance were upheld by adjudicators in 1987 and 1988; and in how many of such appeals entry clearance thereafter was issued by the relevant immigration authorities.

The Solicitor-General: In 1987, 1,612 appeals against refusal of entry clearance were upheld; in 1988, 978 such appeals were upheld. Figures on the number of such appeals where entry clearance was subsequently granted by the immigration authorities are not available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Miss Pamella Bordes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has made, or is intending to make, any changes in the vetting system for pass applications following upon the issue of a pass to Miss Pamella Bordes.

Mr. Wakeham: As the hon. Member will be aware, the House has already approved the Services Committee's Second Report, "Access to the Precincts of the House", which includes recommendations about security matters. These are in the process of implementation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what inquiries have been instituted by the authorities of the House into the issue of a pass to Miss Pamella Bordes;

(2) whether the matter of the providing of a pass to Miss Pamella Bordes has been referred to those persons responsible for security in the House;

(3) what instructions have been given to the police as to the nature of inquiries that should be made into the background of applications for a pass for entry to the House.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not appropriate to comment in detail on matters of security of the House.

Division Bells

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) whether he will list the location of all division bells in the SW1 area in the homes of persons other than right hon. and hon. Members and Members of the House of Lords;

(2) on what date approval was given for the fitting of division bells at (a) 6 Stockton court, Greycoat street, London SW1 and (b) 69A Winchester street, London; and who made the application in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: It would be inappropriate for me to provide information about the specific location of Division bells. It is the policy of the authorities of the House not to approve the fitting of Division bells in homes of persons other than right hon. and hon. Members.

Passes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what security checks were instituted in the case of Mr. Michael Middleton, employee of Messrs. Kingfisher of Ferndown, Dorset, in the case of his access to the House of Commons for the purpose of delivering food provisions;

(2) whether he will list the categories of convictions which preclude a person from receiving (a) a day pass or (b) other passes authorising access to the House of Commons.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not appropriate to comment in detail on matters of security of the House.

WALES

Wildlife Poisoning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last five years the number of cases of wildlife poisoning in Wales caused by the illegal use of pesticides or poisons; and if he will identify the species involved and if possible the poison or pesticide involved.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of cases of wildlife poisoning in Wales caused by the illegal use of pesticides or poisons identified by the wildlife and storage biology service were as follows:

	Number of incidents	Species involved	Pesticide/poison involved
1984	12	8 dogs, 2 carrion crows, buzzard, duck, magpie, water rail	Strychnine, mevinphos, alphachlorose, famphur, parathion
1985	4	2 cats, 2 carrion crows, 2 magpie, 1 pheasant	Alphachlorose, famphur, metaldehyde
1986	10	3 dogs, 2 cats, 2 foxes, buzzard, gull, carrion crow, jackdaw, lamb, rabbit, pheasant	Mevinphos, strychnine, alphachlorose, metaldehyde
1987	7	4 dogs, buzzard, jackdaw, herring gull, peregrine, pheasant, raven	Strychnine, alphachlorose, endrin, mevinphos
1988	6	5 dogs, cat	Strychnine, metaldehyde

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, the provision for value added tax liability on new construction within the budgets given for capital expenditure on roads by his Department and the local authorities in Wales in chapter 17 of the Government's expenditure plans 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Small Businesses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the disruption being caused to development projects of small businesses in rural Wales arising from the suspension of the rural conversion grant scheme in February; if he has discussed this with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency with a view to re-establishing the scheme; if he will make available to the Welsh Development Agency the necessary finance to enable them to meet their obligations under this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency has earmarked £3 million to the rural conversion grant programme over the next three years, sufficient to stimulate nearly 1,200 new jobs. The record resources allocated by the agency to conversion grants in the current financial year, broadly double the amount available in 1987-88, are fully taken up, though payment in relation to new schemes will commence in April. The impact on the development of small businesses in rural Wales of the slight delay in payments is therefore minimal.

Development Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the latest average unemployment rate for development areas in Wales and (b) the unemployment rate on the same date for each travel-to-work area which had an unemployment rate higher than the average for development areas in Wales, denoting which of these areas have in their territory a development area.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

Unemployment rate as at February 1989

	Percentage
(a) Average for development areas in Wales	12·6	—
(b) Travel-to-work areas with a higher unemployment rate than the average for the development areas in Wales:
Aberdare	17·7	IA
Bangor and Caernarfon	13·3	DA
Blaenau Gwent and Abergavenny	13·8	DA
Cardigan	18·0	DA
Fishguard	16·1	IA
Haverfordwest	14·0	IA
Holyhead	17·7	DA
Lampeter and Aberaeron	13·2	DA
Merthyr and Rhymney	14·1	DA
Pwllheli	19·0	IA
South Pembrokeshire	17·6	DA

Notes:
1. DA denotes development area.
2. IA denotes intermediate area.
3. Development areas are defined in terms of travel-to-work areas.

Alcohol

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has issued any guidance to health authorities in Wales on the development by each such authority of an alcohol planning strategy; and whether he is satisfied with the provisions being made by health authorities in this area.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department, along with others, has recently issued a joint circular to health authorities, and a wide range of other organisations, on planning to tackle the problem of alcohol misuse. A copy of Welsh Office Circular 8/89 is in the Library of the House. Progress is to be monitored: relevant aspects of health authorities' work are to feature in forthcoming performance reviews.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in implementing section 5 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, in respect of its obligation to place duties upon education authorities and social services authorities to identify, assess and provide for the needs of people with mental handicaps at the time that they move out of full-time education; and what arrangements have been made to ensure that these facilities are being monitored in respect of their implementation in terms of quality of life.

Mr. Peter Walker: The attention of local authorities was drawn to their detailed responsibilities under section 5 and 6 of the Act at the time of their implementation and it is upon them that the responsibilities now lie. No central record is held of individual assessments but social work service officials will be conducting a survey of local authority services for disabled people in the coming months.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to implement sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and whether he will meet the cost implications required to appoint authorised representatives for all people with mental handicaps in connection with the provision of services and the right to obtain relevant information to facilitate an informed choice of a selection of appropriate support services.

Mr. Peter Walker: As my ministerial colleagues in the Department of Health have repeatedly said, each section of the Act will be implemented as and when the necessary resources can be identified and made available. We are making good progress on implementation with six key sections now in force. We have agreed with the local authority associations that section 7 is the next priority and detailed work on sections 1, 2 and 3 will follow as soon as possible. Local authorities will be consulted about the potential cost implications at an appropriate time.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many social workers trained to deal with physically handicapped people are employed by each county council in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information relating to the number of senior social workers, social workers and community workers with qualifications is given in the following table[1]:

	Number
Clwyd	134
Dyfed	120
Gwent	175
Gwynedd	72
Mid Glamorgan	201
Powys	25
South Glamorgan	156

Rural Water Supply

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rural water supply schemes have been requisitioned of the Welsh water authority by district councils in Wales in each year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is not held centrally. I am asking the chairman of the Welsh water authority to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Therapists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of professionally qualified people in post in each health authority area in Wales, and the number of vacancies that exist within the same disciplines, as (a) speech therapists, (b) occupational therapists and (c) physiotherapists;

(2) what steps are being taken to improve training facilities for speech therapists, occupational therapists and physiotherapists in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 21 October at columns 1015-16, which gives the information requested in respect of physiotherapists and speech therapists. Information on the number of occupational therapists in post in each Welsh district health authority as at 30 September is given in the following table. As indicated in my earlier reply information on the number of vacancies is not currently collected by the Department on a regular basis, but information obtained in the course of the 1988 manpower resource planning exercise indicated that at the all-Wales level at 30 September 1988 there were about 75 (whole-time equivalent) vacancies for occupational therapists. This aggregate figure is approximate only; reliable information at individual district health authority level is not currently available.

Following the results of the 1988 manpower resource planning exercise, consideration is being given to how training provision for speech therapy and occupational therapy may be improved in Wales. The need for improved training capacity for physiotherapy will be assessed in the light of the 1989 round of manpower resource plans.

Crime (Housing Estates)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the chief constables of Wales to discuss how crime on local authority housing estates might be eliminated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I keep under review the crime levels on housing estates and in the country generally. In addition my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State represents the Welsh Office on the ministerial group on crime prevention. My Department works closely with statutory agencies and the voluntary sector to reduce crime on housing estates—grants totalling over £600,000 have been given by the Welsh Office over the last two years for a variety of crime preventive schemes for this purpose. I remain informed of the views of chief constables on all local matters.

Lluesty Hospital

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Lluesty hospital, Holywell, to discuss with patients and staff the proposals of Clwyd health authority to close Lluesty hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I understand that no proposal to close Lluesty hospital has been put to Clwyd health authority. It would therefore not be appropriate for me to hold any discussions at this stage.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) nursing staff, (b) ancillary staff, (c) paramedical staff, (d) patients and (e) beds there are at Lluesty hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many geriatric patients are under treatment at Lluesty hospital.

Mr. Peter Walker: As at 28 February 1989, there were 48·3 nursing staff, 24·0 ancillary staff and 3·1 physiotherapists. These staff are recorded as whole-time equivalents.

In the period January to September 1988 inclusive, the numbers of in-patients and beds, both of which were recorded under the geriatric speciality, were as follows:

[1]	Number
In-patients	394
Average daily available beds	74·0

[1] Excludes day care.

NHS (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make additional cash allocations to Clwyd health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Plans to increase the cash allocations to Clwyd health authority were announced in January for the coming financial year. Other specific initiatives are to be announced shortly. The authority's initial revenue cash allocation for 1989-90 is £107·13 million, an increase of 6·5 per cent. over the 1988-89 allocation; in addition the authority is expected to achieve cost improvements and generate additional income next year equivalent to a further 1·3 per cent. of their revenue allocation. The authority's initial capital allocation for next year is £6·915 million, an increase of more than 40 per cent. over this year. I believe that these resources will be sufficient to allow the authority to meet inflationary pressures and provide for further service development.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Clwyd health authority at Preswefa, Mold, Clwyd, to hear the authority explain why it has rejected the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Peter Walker: I will be meeting a range of organisations in Wales to hear their views on the White Paper "Working For Patients", including the chairmen of district health authorities.

Hospital Journeys (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the distance by bus route from Shotton, Deeside to (a) Lluesty hospital and (b) Abergele hospital, Clwyd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The distances by bus to Lluesty hospital and Abergele hospital are 9·5 miles and 30 miles respectively.

NHS Review

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will receive a deputation of the Clwyd local medical committee to hear their views on the National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients";

(2) if he will address a general meeting of Clwyd general practitioners from 40 practices on the National Health Service review; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many general practitioners in Wales he has met to discuss his proposals concerning the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave today.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received objections from general practitioners in Wales concerning his National Health Service review proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received comments on the White Paper from a number of general medical practitioners and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave today.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what research or assessment his Department has undertaken into the impact on general practitioners in Wales of the Department of Health's proposals for general practitioners;

(2) what research projects his Department has undertaken on the practices of general practitioners in rural Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The document "A New Contract" setting out proposals for changes in the arrangement for the remuneration and terms of service for general medical practitioners was issued jointly by the Health Ministers for Wales and England. I will be having discussions with representatives of the GPs.

Broadleaved Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions the Forestry Commission awarded grants under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in Wales between its inception and closure; and on how many occasions the grant of £100 for obtaining professional advice in the preparation of a plan of operations under the BWGS was awarded.

Mr. Peter Walker: To date, the Forestry Commission has approved 671 applications for grant under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in Wales. The grant of £100 has been paid on 142 of those applications.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any response from the Welsh water authority following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received the authority's initial response, which has been published today, and have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission was asked to report on the efficiency and costs of, and the services provided by, Welsh Water. After a thorough investigation, for which I am grateful, the Commission made 24 recommendations, eight of which it considered should be a matter of priority for the authority. Overall the Commission considered that, although it had detailed comments to make, the authority now had the right policies in place.

The recommendation that the Commission considered should be a matter of priority for the authority related to the implementation of the new customer accounting system, the collection of arrears of debt, manpower efficiency, the proposed cost and saving investment strategy, the development of business information systems, a work planning system to introduce and monitor performance targets for small jobs, the efficiency of section 15 agencies, the relationship between costs and services and the need for the athority to undertake rigorous and critical examination of its own operations.

The authority has successfully implemented its new customer accounting system, ahead of schedule, and introduced a work planning system to bring in and monitor performance targets for small jobs. Effective action is in hand to implement the other recommendations. A number of the recommendations not in these priority categories have also been implemented.

I am pleased to note that the authority is taking a positive stance in its consideration of the report; implementation of its detailed recommendations will further improve the authority's performance and add to the considerable strides it has made towards increased efficiency.

I have drawn the Commission's report and this first response by the Welsh water authority to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment so that he can bring both to the attention of the other regional water authorities.

THE ARTS

Scottish Arts Council

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the Scottish Arts Council grant in current prices in each year from 1978.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

1979-80	14,390,861
1980-81	13,561,463

1987-88	15,268,807
1988-89	15,258,000

[1] Included £917,851 at 1983-84 prices for Scottish Opera deficit.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Luce: Since my announcement on 26 January at column 665, I am pleased to announce that a painting by Cézanne, "Allée à Chantilly" has been accepted in lieu of capital transfer tax. The amount of tax satisfied was £3,387,556 and was met by a call on the Reserve. A decision as to the allocation of this painting has not yet been taken.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Comic Relief

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to increase contributions to the developing world over the next three years in the light of the public response to comic relief.

Mr. Chris Patten: I pay tribute to the remarkable fund-raising achievement of comic relief and to the generosity of the British public. We are currently discussing with comic relief how we can fund projects with it so that the proceeds go much further. The aid programme is planned to grow in real terms over the next three years.

Namibia

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what special assistance he is planning for Namibia during its period of transition to independence.

Mr. Chris Patten: We shall maintain the existing programme of English language training and scholarships for Namibians living both within and outside the country, at a cost of about £1·5 million annually. I announced recently a contribution of £500,000 towards the programme for the repatriation of refugees being undertaken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. We are ready to help also with the costs of relocating exiled Namibian institutions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Debt

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the amounts of the national debt owing on the day of the spring Budget for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lilley: National debt is conventionally defined as the liabilities of the national loans fund, which is not the most useful or comprehensive measure of public sector indebtedness. It does not cover the whole of central government, it excludes entirely the debt of other parts of public sector, and it take no account of the public sector's short term assets.

A more useful measure of public sector indebtedness is the net public sector debt which includes debt held by local authorities and public corporations, as well as central Government. It also takes account of the public sector's short term assets. Net public sector debt is measured on 31 March each year, and the figures for the last 10 years are:

	£ billion	Per cent. of GDP
1978	87·9	54·2
1979	95·3	50·6
1980	102·1	45·6
1981	116·5	47·0
1982	127·2	46·7
1983	135·0	45·5
1984	147·3	46·2
1985	160·7	46·3
1986	166·8	44·8
1987	171·1	42·2
1988	171·3	38·2
1989[1]	157·0	32·0

[1] Forecast.

Exchange Equalisation Account

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what transfers were made to the exchange equalisation account from the national loans fund and vice versa in each month from April 1988 to February 1989.

Mr. Lilley: The net transfer between the National Loans Fund and the exchange equalisation account over the financial year is published in table 16.7 of the Central Statistical Office's annual "Abstract of Statistics".

Gilts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what gilts have been brought in by the Bank of England in each month from April 1988 to February 1989.

Mr. Lilley: The most recent and comprehensive figures for official transaction in gilts are contained in table 8 of the February 1989 Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin. (These figures are published on a quarterly rather than monthly basis).

It is not the practice to give information on the particular stocks involved in these transactions on grounds of market sensitivity.

Treasury Loan

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when 15½ per cent. Treasury loan 1998 was first issued; how much was issued; at what price; how much is now outstanding; and what is the highest coupon gilt issued.

Mr. Lilley: 15½ per cent. Treasury loan 1998 was first issued on 14 October 1976 and the original amount was £600 million nominal. The issue price was £96. There is currently £1,100 million nominal outstanding. The highest coupon gilt ever issued and the highest coupon currently outstanding are 15½ per cent.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations caused him to revise the proposals on value added tax on non-residential construction from those originally published on 21 June 1988.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 6 February at columns 548-50.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify the assumptions and forecasts he has made about non-residential construction in the private sector in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92, and 1992-93, in calculating value added tax yield in future years on such construction.

Mr. Lilley: The assumptions and forecasts used to calculate the VAT yield from non-residential construction in 1989-90 and 1990-91 are consistent with the economic forecasts contained in the FSBR.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he has undertaken any study into the effect of the output and activity of the construction industry of his proposals for applying value added tax to non-residential construction;

(2) whether he has undertaken any study into the likely effect on employment in the construction industry of his proposals for applying value added tax to non-residential construction;

(3) whether he has undertaken any study into the likely effect on urban development corporations of applying value added tax to non-residential construction;

(4) whether he has undertaken any study into the likely effect on inner city regeneration of his proposals for applying value added tax to non-residential construction.

Mr. Lilley: As I made clear in my statements on 21 June 1988 and 6 February 1989, the Government had no choice but to remove the zero-rating found unlawful by the European Court of Justice. After consulting the construction and property industries, the Government are satisfied that the best solution is to combine the taxations of certain new construction with the landlord's option to tax rents, so that the tax could "wash through" the system to the maximum possible extent.

Interest Rates

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are interest rates in (a) Britain and (b) Germany.

Mr. Lilley: Three-month interbank rates on 20 March were 13·1 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 6·6 per cent. in Germany.

Take-home Pay

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage increase in the real take-home pay of a married man with two children on half average male earnings from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 22 March.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has completed his review of the trunk road network; and if he is now in a position to improve the A11 trunk road through Elveden, Suffolk.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review of the trunk road programme is still in progress. Possible improvements to the A11 are being considered along with many other candidates for inclusion. Each must compete on its merits for a share of the resources available.

We expect to make an announcement later in the spring. I could not say more about the prospects for particular proposals before then.

We shall look separately at the possibility of shorter term improvement of the junction of the A11 and the B1106 at Elveden when we receive the report from Suffolk county council to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend on 14 March 1989 at column 205.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list information available to him on all the plans by (a) British Rail and (b) other undertakings to improve transport infrastructure in the Yorkshire region in the period before the opening of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Plans for infrastructure investment in railways, roads, ports, airports and other passenger transport facilities in the Yorkshire and Humberside region are too numerous to list. Major schemes include the electrification of the east coast main line; resignalling in the York area and from Northallerton to Berwick; and 29 national trunk road schemes.

There are many other schemes which have not yet been finalised. British Rail is still working on the plan which it is required to publish by the end of the year, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987, setting out its proposals for Channel tunnel passenger and freight services and any associated infrastructure.

British Rail (Signalling and Safety)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what spending criteria have been laid down for British Rail in respect of signalling and safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's duty is to ensure that its equipment and procedures meet high standards of safety. Following a review of the railway inspectorate in 1988 I have asked British Rail to ensure that safety is explicitly covered in all investment cases that come to Ministers for consideration. In deciding on the best way of meeting safety requirements, British Rail has to apply the normal investment tests to ensure that the preferred option represents the best possible value for money.

Car Telephones

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding hazards to road safety produced by drivers using car telephones while driving; what advice his Department gives on this subject to those responsible for ensuring road safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a number of representations. Most expressed concern at the safety implications of using in-car telephones in moving vehicles.

The revised highway code, issued in March 1987, tells drivers not to use a hand held telephone while their vehicle is moving, except in an emergency.

Anyone who can afford a car telephone can afford, and should use, a hands-free microphone.

Railway Safety

Mr. Michael Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be meeting the chairman of British Rail to discuss all aspects of safety relating to the railway system.

Mr. Portillo: The chief inspecting officer of railways has meetings with BR's director of safety to review safety every six months. He reports to Ministers and the HSC annually on major safety issues and from time to time on particular concerns and individual accidents. I have discussed safety a number of times with Sir Robert Reid over the last 12 months and shall want to do so again when the inspector's reports on the accidents at Clapham, Purley and Bellgrove are available.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department was informed of the cargo of the Perintis freighter before it was sunk.

Mr. Portillo: There is no requirement to report the carriage of packaged hazardous cargoes and the Department was not informed of what cargo the Perintis carried.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when his Department was informed of the danger posed to the environment by the cargo of the Perintis.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's marine pollution control unit obtained a copy of the cargo manifest and recognised the presence of substances likely to pose a threat to the environment within six hours of the sinking of the MV Perintis on 13 March.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what help was asked for and provided by his Department in ensuring the safe disposal of the cargo of the Perintis.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's marine pollution control unit alerted Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on 14 March who in turn advised the MPCU and south coast local authorities on the safe disposal of any chemicals from MV Perintis which might be landed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what controls his Department has over cargoes of hazardous substances being transported through British waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There is no control of hazardous cargoes being transported through territorial waters unless those cargoes have been loaded or are to be unloaded in a United Kingdom port. Ships are, however, required to report the loss or likely loss of any substances that might cause pollution, and powers of intervention are available to control pollution incidents.

M40 (Wendlebury to Waterstock)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to try and ensure that the time between the completion of the Waterstock to Wendlebury or the Wendlebury to Waterstock sections of the M40 is kept as short as possible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is intended to invite tenders for the Waterstock-Wendlebury section as soon as possible. Tenderers would be invited to suggest their own shorter periods for construction. The contract would include provision for payment of a bonus for early completion.

Nuclear Fuel Transporter (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a radioactive nuclear fuel transporter was left unguarded for several days at the beginning of March near the Mech Cast factory in the railway sidings at Carr hill, Doncaster.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The nuclear fuel transporter in Carr hill sidings from the 3-8 March was awaiting repair. It did not contain a nuclear fuel flask. The weatherproof cover was in place and this may have given the false impression that the wagon was loaded.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received the report of his consultants into the alternatives to the current suspension bridge designs for the east London river crossing; and when he expects to make an announcement and place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Channon: The consultants are finalising their report and expect to submit it soon. An announcement will be made when the report has been considered. I have already undertaken to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Town Police Clauses Act 1847

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend the Traffic Act 1985 in order to repeal clause 57 of the Town Police Clauses Act 1847, in relation to police powers in relation to taxi drivers.

Mr. Portillo: I have no such plans at present but I am reviewing taxi and hire car legislation and if my hon. Friend has a specific problem in mind I shall be pleased to hear from him.

A27 Arundel Bypass

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to make an announcement regarding the choice of route for the A27 Arundel bypass; and if, in the light of recent road accidents, he will take into account the need for urgent provision of safe crossing facilities for north and south traffic at the Avisford/Walberton/Slindon interchange.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to announce the preferred route by about the middle of next year. The subsequent detailed design will include a new B2132 junction.

In view of the recent accidents near the junction the Department are investigating possible accident prevention measures, for the period before the bypass is built.

Microlight Aircraft

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the legislation and regulations which control and regulate the flying and safety of microlight aircraft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will write to the hon. Member with the information as soon as possible.

M1 Luton

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the maximum amount of traffic that can be handled in safety on the M1 south of Luton; and what are the present levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accidents may be associated with any volume of traffic. As traffic increases on any particular section of road there is a steady lowering of the level of service and an increase in congestion. Particular local design features, together with driver behaviour, are much more significant in determining the risk of accident.

The average number of vehicles using the M1 south of Luton in 1988 was 122,000 per day.

Consulting Engineers

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of times that a second firm of consulting engineers have been employed to report on the performance of the consulting engineers employed on a road building scheme; if he will give details of the circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The case where a second firm has been appointed to report, in part, on the performance of a consulting engineer commissioned for a road building project is the Chapel-en-le-Frith and Whaley bridge bypass which was the subject of the hon. Member's questions on 2 March. I cannot yet add to the answers that I gave then.

Second firms are frequently used to consider specialist matters which arise in and from the development of highway projects. An independent design check in relation to certain categories of structures is a standard quality assurance requirement in all cases.

Civil Servants (EC)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of civil servants in his Department whose main task is work related wholly or mainly to the European Economic Community; and what is the gross annual cost of travel and accommodation to and from Brussels, Luxembourg and Strasbourg in connection with this work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 15 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

British Rail (Disciplinary Procedure)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail train drivers were disciplined for taking trains through red danger signals in each of the years 1980 to 1988; and what assessment he has made of the implications for safety.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 March 1989]: The chief inspecting officer of railways drew attention in his annual report for 1986 to the growing problem of signals passed at danger and the studies being carried out by British Rail. As my right hon. Friend reported to the House at column 757, in his statement on the accident at Bellgrove, British Rail has now decided to carry out trials of an automatic train protection system as a possible way of dealing with this problem. Detailed figures for the years 1980-88 are not available since BR has not in the past been required to report these incidents to the railway inspectorate. Arrangements to do so in future are being discussed as part of the follow up to the review of the railway inspectorate which I announced on Tuesday 21 March in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

Bridge Inspections (Divers)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, 15 March, Offical Report, column 118, on what bridges inspections are being carried out by divers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 March 1989]: Inspection by divers of three bridges on the Inverness-Wick/Thurso railway line—Beauly viaduct, Evanton and Alness viaduct—has been satisfactorily completed. The inspection at Conon viaduct is continuing, but is being hampered by high flows of water. Work already carried out there has indicated a need for remedial action and the Conon viaduct has therefore been temporarily closed. I understand that BR's target date for completion of repairs is May.

Plutonium (Air Transport)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his current estimate of the number of annual flights that will be necessary to transport plutonium reprocessed at Sellafield back to customers once the THORP facility is opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 22 March 1989]: On present information it is estimated that around 30 flights per year will be needed.

Unadopted Streets

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under which provisions public funds have been made available towards the costs of making up unadopted streets.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 22 March 1989]: Under section 236 of the Highways Act 1980 local authorities having responsibility for highways can, if they wish, meet some or all of the costs of making-up unadopted streets. Normally, however, the costs are apportioned between the owners of properties fronting the street involved.

Under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 central Government can give grants both to private sector developers and to local authorities towards providing road access for new industrial development in assisted areas including making up unadopted roads.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Statistics

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each quarter since the first quarter of 1979 (a) British manufacturing investment as a proportion of GDP expressed as a percentage of the G7 average; (b) British spending on civil research and development as a proportion of gross domestic product expressed as a percentage of the G7 average, (c) British manufacturing output per head as a percentage of the G7 average and (d) Britain's share of world trade as a percentage of the G7 share of world trade.

Mr. Atkins: Differences in definitions between countries and problems with different currencies make it inappropriate to express the United Kingdom data as a percentage of the G7 average. Much of the information is not available on a quarterly basis. The available annual information for each of the G7 countries is given in the following tables:

Manufacturing output per head

	United Kingdom £'000	France '000 FFr	FR Germany '000 DM	Italy mn lire	USA $'000	Japan mn yen	Canada Can $'000

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures for spending on (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional development grant for (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland for each year from 1978-79 to 1989-90 in cash and at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Forth: For gross expenditure on regional development grants and regional selective assistance in England, Scotland and Wales in the financial years 1978-79 to 1987-88 I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 25 January at columns 566-68.

The information requested in respect of 1988-89 and 1989-90 is as follows. Regional development grant and regional selective assistance schemes do not operate in Northern Ireland.

Expenditure (£ million)

Notes:
1. All figures are gross of domestic receipts and receipts from the European Regional Development Fund.
2. RSA includes expenditure on industrial and training grants, Business Improvement Services and the Exchange Risk Guarantee Scheme.

Arms Contracts

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the arms contracts for 1987 and 1988 in which the Export Credits Guarantee Department has had to fund losses; and if he will give the losses in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose information about individual cases.

Oftel

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of funding for Oftel in 1988 and 1989; what were the Oftel staffing levels in 1987, 1988 and 1989; how many staff have been seconded from his Department; and if he will make a statement about Oftel's budget for 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The funding and staffing of Oftel is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications in consultation with the Treasury. One hundred and twenty-one full-time posts and one part-time post at Oftel are currently filled by secondees from my Department.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with his West German and Italian counterparts concerning the provision of credit support for the export of Tornado aircraft to Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

Mr. Alan Clark I have had no such consultations.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any credit was extended to cover that part of the contract to sell Tornado aircraft to Jordan that related to the cost of negotiating the contract.

Mr. Alan Clark It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose information about individual cases.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 13 March.

Mr. Maude The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, reached broad agreement on an important directive to break down barriers to the free flow of television programmes across frontiers within the Community. The Council also adopted a directive on the permissible sound level and exhaust system of motor cycles.

Companies House Executive Agency

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what targets have been set for the Companies house executive agency.

Mr. Maude Companies house's creation as an executive agency on 3 October last year built on the very considerable progress that has been made in the organisation in recent years. The activities of Companies house in making available information about companies promote enterprise and contribute substantially to open and informed markets. Its first few months as an agency confirm that this new status will enable Companies house to provide a still better service to its many customers, and to increase its efficiency.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has today set the chief executive the following targets for improvements in the quality of service and financial performance over the next two years:

- 10 per cent. reduction in the proportion of companies which have not filed all the accounts and annual returns required by the Companies Act, so that by June 1991 the compliance rate will be increased to 83 per cent;
- 20 per cent. reduction in the time taken to process documents, so that by April 1991 documents are on average available to the public within 18 working days of being delivered to Companies House;
- 12 per cent. increase in output per member of staff;
- 7 per cent. decrease in unit costs in real terms.

In addition my right hon. and noble Friend has emphasised to the chief executive the need to provide a standard of service over the whole range of Companies house operations which meets the needs of his customers. As well as maintaining his efforts to improve the quality of existing services, we expect the chief executive shortly to announce new services in response to customer demands to enhance the accessibility of the information he holds.

My right hon. and noble Friend is also glad to announce that there will be no increase in the level of statutory fees for Companies house services in the 1989-90 financial year.

Bradford Task Force

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) from which subhead of his Department's vote the Bradford inner city task force will be funded; what annual budget has been allocated to the Bradford task force; what operating budget the task force will disburse; what are the immediate objectives of the task force; how the task force will assess applications made to it for funding; and by what criteria the task force will consider applications made to it for funding and other support;

(2) if he will consider urgently how he might assist through the inner city task force, those voluntary organisations in Bradford providing training for the unemployed and child care enabling women to undertake employment outside the home;

(3) how many officials he has appointed to the Bradford inner city task force announced on 9 March; what is the salary range of those officials; from which departments they have come; whether any of these officials have belonged to other inner-city task forces; what office accommodation the task force will occupy; and what is the estimated annual cost of renting that accommodation;

(4) if he will direct the Bradford inner-city task force to examine urgently possible funding for voluntary organisations which are now threatened with closure or severe cuts in their funding.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 9 March that he intended to establish an inner-city task force in Bradford. I expect it to be operational by the autumn. The expenditure of all inner-city task forces comes from the same vote subheads. Running costs are funded from class V vote 3 subhead B.01, and programme expenditure from class V vote 2, subheads G.01 and I.02. When the Bradford task force is established it will share in the £17 million provided for task force programme expenditure in 1989-90. It will also share the common objectives of task forces which can be summarised as enhancing the enterprise and employability of residents of their areas. No budget can be set, nor more detailed operational objectives established nor other matters determined until the task force has been set up.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all woodlands in the three counties of Yorkshire either sold or proposed for sale by the Forestry Commission since the passage of the Forestry Act 1981; if he will state for each such woodland (a) the acreage, (b) the map reference and (c) the species composition; and if he will make a statement.

Slaughtering

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied that the practice of paying slaughtermen by piece work is not causing animals to be stunned for less than the obligatory seven seconds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Slaughterhouses Act 1974 requires that when animals are stunned they must be instantaneously rendered insensible to pain until death supervenes. Minimum periods for effective stunning by electricity are not prescribed by law and will vary according to the equipment employed and the size and species of the animal. At a time when only low frequency stunners were available, a minimum application period of seven seconds was recommended by the Ministry in guidance to local authorities. Some equipment now available is capable of achieving the required effect in two to four seconds.

Local authorities are responsible for enforcing the legislation which must be observed whatever practices are followed in the plant.

Toxic Pesticides

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is taking place to ensure that toxic pesticides that bond with cereals can be detected; when he will publish all of his Department's pesticide residue tests, including those on fish; what percentage of the cereals stored in the United Kingdom are held by the Government; and if he will make a statement on the consequences in terms of possible toxicity or long-term chronic effects on the consumer, human or animal, and also for the food processing industry.

Mr. Ryder: I am able to reassure the hon. Member that "bound" residues in cereals can be detected and identified. The ADAS central science laboratory at Slough has already carried out some successful work and is continuing research in this area. The results of Government monitoring for pesticide residues are published. The latest report—Food Surveillance Paper No. 25 —was published on 13 March this year. It includes results of a survey of freshwater eels; results of studies of marine fish are published separately by MAFF's directorate of fisheries research.

At 31 October 1988 (the latest date for which information is available) about 12 per cent. of United Kingdom cereal stocks were held in intervention. The published results of monitoring for pesticide residues have been considered by the advisory committee on pesticides and the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment who were satisfied that residues in cereals do not represent a hazard to consumers.

Abattoirs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by location all the abattoirs within the three counties of Yorkshire showing which have a licence to export meat to the European Economic Community, which have had their export licence revoked and which can still provide meat to be consumed by British nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 18 January at column 213 to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins). The list of all slaughterhouses in England and Wales placed in the Library of the House identifies those which are export approved.

Two non-export approved slaughterhouses in Yorkshire formerly were so approved but it would not be appropriate to list their names. There can be many reasons for the withdrawal of export approval, including changing business requirements. There is no reason to assume that hygiene standards in slaughterhouses which were once export approved are no longer satisfactory or are below those in other slaughterhouses whether or not they are export approved. The legislation governing the supply of meat for consumption in England and Wales is enforced by local authorities who appoint environmental health officers for supervision. The professional status of environmental health officers is of the highest order.

Salmonella

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further measures will be taken to prevent the introduction into Great Britain of salmonella in animal protein intended for use as animal feedingstuffs.

Mr. Ryder: Amended conditions for the importation of animal protein have been introduced over recent months and action will be completed by 1 May.

The new conditions include the position of veterinary certification of heat treatment to destroy salmonellae in consignments, originating from countries from which animal protein has, within the last two years, been found to be contaminated when sampled at the port and landing. Samples will be obtained from consignments on arrival and tested for salmonellae. Subsequent action will depend on the results obtained.

In the case of consignments of fishmeal not shipped direct from the country of origin, transhipment will be authorised only through a limited number of ports in the Federal Republic and Germany and the Netherlands, since transhipment will be supervised by the veterinary authorities in those countries.

Animal Mutations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is being (a) undertaken by his Department or (b) commissioned by him into animal mutations following the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The incidence of congenital defects in grazing animals is constantly kept under review, and no difference is observed between areas of high and low deposition of Chernobyl fallout. No specific research into animal mutations caused by fallout from the Chernobyl accident is therefore being undertaken by my Department, nor has any been commissioned.

Radioactive Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations of the slaughterhouses where he is carrying out a trial of the feasability of radioactive monitoring of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The feasibility trial is being carried out at three slaughterhouses in Cumbria and three in Lancashire, which in normal circumstances will be processing animals from the Cumbrian restricted area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is considering monitoring other animals for radioactivity prior to slaughter in abattoirs.

Mr. Ryder: I currently have no plans to do so.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who carries out on his behalf monitoring of sheep for radioactivity in slaughterhouses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Monitoring of sheep for radioactivity in slaughterhouses is carried out by Ministry staff based in the area.

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to lift the post-Chernobyl restrictions on the movement of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: We shall remove restrictions as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising food safety. The broad trend in radioactivity within the Cumbria restricted area in 1988 compared with 1987 was downwards and this is encouraging. However all the while there are sheep above the 1,000 bq/kg limit, restrictions will have to remain in place.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the incinerators by name and district which may be used for the disposal of sheep from restricted areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Casualty sheep from the post-Chernobyl restricted area in Cumbria may be buried or cremated by farmers on their own land or, where this is not possible, farmers may make arrangements for disposal of the carcases at a county council refuse tip or incinerator. The location and availability of incinerators is a matter for the local authorities.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the incinerators by name and district used for the disposal of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle or parts of the same;

(2) if he will list the incinerators by name and county which may be used for both the disposal of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle and sheep from restricted areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Cattle suspected of having BSE are disposed of at the following incineration facilities:

Ministry Veterinary Investigation Centres at Carmarthen; Itchen Abbas, Winchester; Langford, Bristol; Longbenton, Newcastle upon Tyne; Merrythought, Penrith; Riseholme, Lincoln; and Sutton Bonnington, Loughborough;

Scottish Agricultural Colleges' Veterinary Investigation Centres at Auchincruive, Ayr; Buckburn, Aberdeen; Edinburgh; Perth; and St. Boswells, Galashiels;

Shetland Islands Council incinerator at Rova Head, Lerwick; and at private incinerators at Royston, Herts; and Wrexham.

As regards the disposal of sheep from infected areas, I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply.

Radioactivity (Cumbria)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the restricted area of Cumbria was covered by the aerial survey for radioactivity in 1988.

Mr. Ryder: Although the aerial survey was set up to cover all of the restricted area in Cumbria, due to unseasonably bad weather, only 80 per cent. of the area was surveyed.

Sheep Dip

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his staff are currently working on the problems of the link between sheep dip and human health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A precise number cannot be readily estimated but all my staff whose work relates to licensing or use of sheep dips ensure that the precautions needed to avoid hazards to human health are identified and understood.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research he is conducting into the run-off of sheep dip into the Rivers North Tyne and South Tyne and its tributaries;

(2) what research he is conducting into the run-off of sheep dip into water courses.

Mr. Ryder: None. However, because sheep dip is potentially a serious pollutant my Department issued a press notice on 20 September 1988 to reinforce the guidance in ADAS booklet 2198 and to remind farmers and others of the need to take the greatest care in disposal. I am placing a copy of the press notice and booklet in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives to farmers about the siting of sheep dip facilities on the edge of water courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Department's code on good agricultural practice, the free guide to the code, ADAS pamphlets p 593 and p 2332 and ADAS booklet 2198 all give advice on safe dipping and recommend farmers to seek guidance from local water authorities on the siting and construction of dip baths and soakaways.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he is conducting into the effects on human health of organochlorine compounds in sheep dip; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None. No currently licensed sheep dips contain organochlorine compounds.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he is conducting into the effects of organophosphorous compounds in sheep dip on human health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department, with the Department of Health and the Health and Safety Executive, assesses all available data on the risks to human health from organophosphorus compounds which are the subject of applications for veterinary medicinal product licences. In addition, the HSE will be undertaking a study during the compulsory sheep scab dipping period this autumn. My Department also records and investigates all suspected adverse reactions to veterinary medicinal products, including sheep dips.

ADAS (Staff)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently employed in the agricultural development advisory service and how many he expects to be in post on 1 January 1990.

Mr. Ryder: There are 3,823 professional, scientific, technical and industrial staff (excluding temporary staff) currently in post in ADAS. Future staffing levels will need to reflect the proposals and other matters dealt with in the Minister's reply of 21 March to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on agricultural and food research and development, as well as future demands for ADAS chargeable and other services.

Central Veterinary Laboratory

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many staff at the Central Veterinary Laboratory are qualified veterinarians; and how many such qualified veterinarians he expects to be in post on 1 January 1990;

(2) how many staff are currently employed at the Central Veterinary Laboratory; and how many he expects to be in post on 1 January 1990.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of permanent staff in the professional, scientific, technical, industrial and administrative grades currently employed at the Central Veterinary Laboratory is 573½. Of these, 46 are qualified veterinarians. Some additional posts are being created to deal with work on salmonellosis, but future staffing levels will need to reflect the proposals and other matters dealt with in my reply of 21 March to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on agricultural and food research and development, as well as future demand for ADAS chargeable services.

Experimental Husbandry Farms

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many experimental husbandry farms there are in his Department; and how many he intends to close.

Mr. Ryder: There are at present 11 experimental husbandry farms in my Department. I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 March in which the Minister outlined a proposal to close one of these farms.

Laboratories

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many laboratories there are within his Department; and how many he plans to close.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary on 16 March at columns 349-50 and to the reply that the Minister gave on 21 March at column 515 to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell).

Horticultural Stations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many experimental horticultural stations are in his Department; and how many he intends to close.

Mr. Ryder: There are at present seven experimental horticulture stations in my Department. The closure of one of these (Lee Valley) has already been announced and will take place on 31 March 1989. I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 March 1989 in which the Minister outlined a proposal to close a further three stations.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions the Forestry Commission awarded grants under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in England between its inception and closure; and on how many occasions the grant of £100 for obtaining professional advice in the preparation of a plan of operations under the BWGS was awarded.

Mr. Ryder: To date, the Forestry Commission has approved 5,156 applications for grant under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in England. The grant of £100 has been paid on 819 of these applications.

Butter

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether additions to the list of free EEC butter distributors are being made; what is the criteria for an organisation to be eligible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) announced to the House that 127 organisations had been designated to distribute produce to the most needy. These organisations were designated to participate for the two years 1988 and 1989. The conditions with which they had to comply were outlined in my reply to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 19 October 1988. We are currently consulting designated organisations about their allocation of produce for 1989 but only in exceptional circumstances could we consider making any additions to the list of those organisations.

Veterinary Products Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his officials attend meetings of the Veterinary Products Committee; and when he last received a report on the committee's activities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The level of attendance at meetings of the Veterinary Products Committee by the Departments concerned depends on the subject matter and the needs of the committee. The committee periodically draws matters to my attention as well as providing me with an annual report of its work, which is published.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place copies of the minutes of all meetings since June 1987 of the Veterinary Products Committee in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. Much of the information provided to the Veterinary Products Committee and the committee's consideration of it are confidential.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he sees minutes of meetings of the Veterinary Products Committee.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Veterinary Products Committee provides me with specific advice rather than with the minutes of its meetings.

Pesticides

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the use of pesticides manufactured before 1965 until after the completion of his review on safety.

Mr. Ryder: At the present time no risk to health is suggested which would warrant an immediate ban on pesticides which were approved before 1965. The routine review programme announced on 16 March will enable the independent advisory committee on pesticides (ACP) to re-evaluate the available data and if necessary require additional or updated data from companies. The ACP will then be in a position to make any recommendations it considers necessary.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his review of the safety of pesticides manufactured before 1965 to be completed.

Mr. Ryder: The completion date for the review of pesticides approved prior to 1965 cannot be estimated until all relevant data sheets have been prepared and ranked in priority order for consideration by the advisory committee on pesticides. In addition, the time taken for each review of an active ingredient will vary.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what are his estimates for the number of staff he will employ in evaluating old and new pesticides in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many staff he has employed to evaluate old and new pesticides since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Staff at the Ministry's pesticides data evaluation unit are involved in the evaluation of pesticides for agricultural use. The number of scientific posts are as follows:

	Number
1985	22·5
1986	32·5
1987	32·5
1988	43·0
1989	52·0
1989-94	[1]

[1] Staffing levels are under review.

Of these, there is a core of staff engaged full-time on new active ingredients and the review programme and these will be supplemented by other technical experts in the unit, those in other Government Departments and by the independent experts on the advisory committee on pesticides and its scientific sub-committee.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring he carries out of pesticide incidence in wildlife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 March 1989]: My Department operates two schemes in England and Wales. The ADAS wildlife incident investigation scheme responds to reports of the deaths or illness of companion animals (chiefly cats and dogs), wildlife (mammals and birds) and honeybees, and to the discovery of possible poisoned baits.

Information resulting from these investigations is made available to the advisory committee on pesticides, to be used in the course of making recommendations concerning pesticide registration. If there is evidence that incidents have involved misuse of pesticides, in contravention of the Control of Pesticides Regulations or other legislation, further investigations may be conducted to obtain evidence for use in enforcement action.

Surveys of pesticide residues in wildlife are undertaken periodically by the working party on pesticide residues.

In addition, my Department has recently completed a seven year field study at Boxworth experimental husbandry farm into the environmental impact of different pesticide strategies on winter wheat. Annual reports have been prepared, summarising the results of this in-depth ecological study and the full account of our findings are now being prepared for publication.

Lindane

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take immediate steps to ban the manufacture and import of the pesticide Lindane.

Mr. Ryder: No. Lindane is currently under review by the independent advisory committee on pesticides. Any necessary action will be taken on the basis of the Committee's recommendations to Ministers.

Levies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the levy paid per litre by farmers who pasteurise their own milk and then sell it retail;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether the producer processor levy, the retail processor levy and the farm pasteurising levy are compatible with the payment of FEOGA refunds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Producer retailers currently pay a contribution of 3·369 pence per litre to the Milk Marketing Board. I do not regard these arrangements (or the similar producer processor arrangements) as having any bearing on the payment of FEOGA refunds.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis he instructed the Milk Marketing Board to withdraw the farmhouse cheese makers levy in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the Milk Marketing Board's decision to end the farmhouse cheesemakers' scheme (FCS) on 28 February 1987. The board's decision reflected my concern that the FCS milk pricing and allocation system risked distortion of competition between cheesemakers, and might therefore be regarded as contrary to the Community rules governing our milk marketing arrangements.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list all appeals against the Veterinary Products Committee's rejection of a product licence for BST to be heard in the next three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall in due course receive the Veterinary Products Committee's recommendations on applications for product licences for BST. Decisions on licences are a matter for the licensing authority.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of plans by Egypt to construct a chemicals plant capable of producing chemical warfare agents, at Abu Zaabal, near Cairo; and if he has consulted with his counterpart in the United States Government over this matter.

Mr. Eggar: We have no information to indicate that the plant at Abu Zaabal is intended to produce chemical warfare agents. We are in regular contact with the United States and other allies to discuss CW proliferation worldwide.

Israel

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to have discussions with the Israeli Foreign Minister; and on what subjects.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to visit Israel this summer, and looks forward to discussing bilateral and regional issues with Professor Arens then.

Tibet

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the subject of human rights abuses in Tibet.

Mr. Eggar: Expressions of concern about events in Tibet have been received from hon. Members, Members of the House of Lords and from members of the public.

El Salvador

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet representatives of the new El Salvadorean Government.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet representatives of the new Government of El Salvador.

Council of Ministers

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues he intends to raise at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present six meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for April.

The Social Affairs Council, meeting on 5 April, is expected to hear a Commission report on a draft charter of social rights; consider with a view to agreeing common positions health and safety directives on the workplace, work equipment and personal protective equipment; and consider a draft resolution on continuing vocational training, a regulation on measures to help redundant shipbuilding workers and an amendment to the regulation on family allowances for migrant workers.

The internal market council on 13-14 April will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 17, 18 and possibly 19 April to discuss 1989 price-fixing proposals, the forestry action programme and possibly conversion schemes.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 17 April to consider the Commission's proposals for harmonising the taxation of savings and discuss direct taxation of companies. It will consider a progress report by the Presidency on tax approximation and discuss the 18th VAT Directive concerning the ending of various derogations available to the member states under the terms of the 6th VAT Directive. The Council is also due to complete the process of conciliation with the European Parliament on two regulations associated with the establishment and making available of own resources by member states to the Commission.

The Foreign Affairs Council on 24-25 April may discuss a Commission proposal for a financing facility to enable developing countries to import food products from the European Community on concessionary terms, and a linked proposal to harmonise export credits available for exports of agricultural products from member states. Other possible subjects for discussion are food aid, and the Uruguay Round, on which the Commission may report on the outcome of the meeting of the GATT trade negotiations committee in Geneva. An EC-Morocco Co-operation Council will be held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council.

The Telecommunications Council on 27 April will consist of a general discussion on Open Network Provision with the likelihood that ISDN and standardisation in telecoms will be adopted. There will also be detailed consideration on the draft proposed Council decision on HDTV. There may also be a discussion on the second phase directive on mutual recognition of type approval.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the speed at which entry clearance cases are now being dealt with when referred to his Department.

Mr. Eggar: Cases referred by entry clearance officers in Commonwealth countries, the Philippines, Thailand and Indonesia are sent by posts direct to the immigration and nationality department of the Home Office. All other referrals are channelled via the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The time taken to deal with referred applications varies from case to case and average times cannot be given.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he is going to take decisions on the applications made at the post in Islamabad, by Abdul Sattar, date of birth 30 June 1978, Abdul Ghaffar, 11 January 1972, Safeena Kausar, 7 March 1982, and Fareeda Kausar, 28 August 1980, to enter the United Kingdom; when their applications were made; what inquiries have been made into their applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: All four applications were lodged on 2 July 1987 and are still under consideration. In view of the compassionate circumstances the applicants were given a priority interview on 28 August 1988.

Following that interview the entry clearance officer at Islamabad was not satisfied as to the claimed family relationship of the applicants and deferred a decision for local inquiries to be made. These inquiries have however proved inconclusive and on 22 March 1989 the entry clearance officer referred the applications to the Home Office for further consideration.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Mr. Nadeem Mumtaz, date of birth 9 December 1965, was refused a visa to visit the United Kingdom by the post in Karachi; and if he will reconsider this case in the light of Mr. Mumtaz's four previous visits.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Nadeem Mumtaz was refused entry clearance on 16 February 1989 as the entry clearance officer at Karachi was not satisfied, as he is required to be under paragraph 17 of HC 169, that Mr. Mumtaz was a genuine visitor who would leave the United Kingdom at the end of his permitted stay. Mr. Mumtaz sought a two months stay to visit a relative in this country. The entry clearance officer was aware that Mr. Mumtaz had made previous visits to the United Kingdom, but his application for a visa had to be considered afresh and in the light of Mr. Mumtaz's present circumstances.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Mr. Nazar Hussein, reference No. V/3428/89, was refused a visa by the post in Islamabad to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will reconsider this case.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Nazar Hussein was refused entry clearance on 23 February 1989 as the entry clearance officer at Islamabad was not satisfied, as he is required to be under paragraph 17 of HC 169, that Mr. Hussein was a genuine visitor who would leave the United Kingdom at the end of his permitted stay. Mr. Hussein sought a two to three months stay to visit his brother who lives in this country. Mr. Hussein has a statutory right of appeal to an independent appellate authority within three months of the date of refusal. No such appeal had been lodged up to 22 March 1989.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will describe the procedure adopted by the relevant immigration authorities when an appeal against entry clearance refusal has been upheld by an adjudicator; and if it is the practice to grant entry clearance when an appeal is so upheld;

(2) in what circumstances entry clearance will not be issued by the relevant immigration authorities once an appeal against refusal has been upheld on adjudication.

Mr. Eggar: Entry clearance officers (ECOs) have a statutory duty to comply with any written or oral directions given by the appellate authorities in giving effect to a determination; where directed they will issue entry clearance immediately unless, in the case of an adjudicator's direction, it is subject to further appeal. Where, however, an adjudicator allows an appeal but gives no directions, the ECO will reconsider the application within the spirit of the adjudicator's determination and will issue entry clearance if the appellant meets the requirements of the immigration rules. If, because of changed circumstances, the appellant does not meet the requirements of the immigration rules, his application will be refused with a further right of appeal to the appellate authorities.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances an appellant whose appeal against entry had been upheld would be required by the immigration authorities to produce further documentary evidence; and in how many cases in 1987 and 1988 this was required.

Mr. Eggar: Where an adjudicator allows an appeal but gives no directions, an entry clearance officer (ECO) may call for further documentary evidence to satisfy himself, within the spirit of the adjudicator's determination, that, notwithstanding changed circumstances, the appellant meets the requirements of the immigration rules. Details are not available of the number of cases in which this proved necessary.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time which elapses between an appeal against entry clearance being upheld by an adjudicator and entry clearance being issued by the relevant immigration authorities; and if he has taken steps to ensure that minimal delay occurs in successful appeal cases.

Mr. Eggar: Appeal determinations not subject to further appeal are normally sent by the Home Office to overseas posts within a maximum of two weeks of receipt from the appellate authorities. On receiving a determination the entry clearance officer (ECO) informs the appellant and, where directions are given by an adjudicator, entry clearance is issued as soon as the appellant presents his passport. I am satisfied that existing procedures ensure minimal delay.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criticisms have been made by the immigration appeals tribunal over delays in appeals against entry clearance being upheld in the United Kingdom and the actual granting of entry clearance to successful appellants; and what steps have been taken to rectify such delays.

Mr. Eggar: None. Where directed by an adjudicator an entry clearance officer (ECO) will issue entry clearance immediately. Where no directions are given an ECO will issue entry clearance as soon as he has satisfied himself, if necessary after further inquiries, that the appellant meets the requirements of the immigration rules.

Ethiopia

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will call in the Ethiopian ambassador to seek the considered response urged by the head of the United Kingdom delegation at the 45th session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva on 7 March.

Mr. Eggar: We have urged the Ethiopian Government to give a considered response. We now await this. We have raised our human rights concerns with them on numerous occasions and will continue to do so on all appropriate occasions.

Chemical Products (Regulation)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his decision to agree to the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 February adopting a regulation on the control of certain chemical products prior to completion of parliamentary scrutiny.

Mrs. Chalker: The proposal for a regulation requiring national controls on the export of eight key chemical weapons precursors arose at very short notice, and discussion at the European political co-operation ministerial meeting in Madrid on 14 February revealed a strong concensus for urgent Community action. Given our firm stand against proliferation of chemical weapons and our wish to see existing export controls in Community countries applied more effectively, we took the view that an immediate decision on the regulation would be appropriate. That is why we did not oppose the adoption of the regulation at the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 February, on which I reported in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 22 February, even though it was clearly not possible in the very short time available to complete parliamentary scrutiny. The Chairman of the European Legislation Committee was, of course, kept fully informed throughout.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Attendance Allowance

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance his Department issues on the definition of the term terminally ill with regard to the determination of eligibility for attendance allowance.

Mr. Needham: No guidance is issued as the term does not occur in the legislation governing entitlement to attendance allowance.

Special Diets

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department has taken to assess the cost of special diets in Northern Ireland for people receiving state benefits; and what is his estimate of the number of such people who require special diets for (i) epilepsy and (ii) diabetes.

Mr. Needham: As the benefits system does not make specific provision for special dietary needs, the cost has not been assessed nor is an estimate of the numbers mentioned available.

Comber (Bypass)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the proposal for a bypass at Comber.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has a scheme to extend the existing Comber bypass from Killinchy street to Newtownards road.

This scheme is included in the current major works programme 1989-90 to 1993-94 and detailed design work is under way. It is not possible to indicate a start date since this will depend on the completion of the statutory processes and the availability of finances at the time.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for which urban areas in Northern Ireland urban development grants are presently available.

Mr. Needham: Urban development grant, funded by the Government, is available in Belfast and Londonderry. Similar grants under the first urban development programme funded by the international fund for Ireland and administered by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland were available in 22 district towns, and in the urban areas of Castlereagh and Newtownabbey. Under the second urban development programme announced in November 1988 grants in addition may be offered to exceptional projects in other urban areas.

Social Security Payments

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many families in Northern Ireland are in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Needham: A total of 14,176 at 15 March 1989.

Married Teachers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to introduce appropriate legislation to ensure that the widows and widowers of married teachers will receive equal benefits and pensions in cases where equal contributions from salary have been made by teachers for pension and benefit purposes.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no such plans.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the estimated area of broadleaved woodland in Northern Ireland in 1968, 1978, 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Viggers: Although figures are not available for the years in question estimates carried out in 1986-87 indicated that there were 8,100 hectares of pure broadleaved woodland and 6,500 hectares of mixed broadleaf conifer woodland in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Northern Ireland forestry service will carry out a review of the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in parallel with that being done by the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The broadleaved woodland grant scheme was closed for applications in March 1988. Accordingly, no review of the scheme is contemplated.

Felling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the provision made for felling licensing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There is no provision for felling licences in Northern Ireland.

Objective 1 (EC)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in making arrangements for Northern Ireland to benefit as an objective 1 region within the European Community.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under the new arrangements governing the Community"s structural funds, objective 1 regions such as Northern Ireland are required to forward to the European Commission a "regional development plan" from which will be derived future claims for assistance. The preparation of the Northern Ireland plan has now been completed and the document will be submitted to the Commission before the end of the month as required. The document, which reflects Government policy in the main development areas, has been prepared in consultation with the Commission and with relevant local interests, as required by the EC regulations. I am confident, therefore, that the Northern Ireland development plan will provide a sound basis for the European Community to continue to contribute to development in the Province, in particular through its financial support from the structural funds for projects to be included in earning measures.

Rates

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each district council in Northern Ireland, the local district rate in actual and percentage terms for each of the years from 1986-87 to 1989-90.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 March 1989]: The table showing for each district council in Northern Ireland the local district rate in actual and percentage terms from each of the years 1986-87 to 1989-90 is as follows:

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Scottish Assembly

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last made an assessment of the running costs of a Scottish assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government believe that the present constitutional arrangements provide for Scotland's interests to be fully respected and recognised and we therefore have no plans to introduce legislation to create a Scottish Assembly. Accordingly, I have made no assessment of the running costs of an Assembly. The 1978 scheme of devolution, however, was estimated to cost £13 million at November 1977 prices. Any new scheme would clearly cost very considerably more than that.

Disabled People

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from which sources he derives information about the number and proportion of disabled people of working age who are unemployed; and what is the latest information provided by those sources in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The only count made of unemployed people with disabilities is of those who choose to register for work at jobcentres and careers offices. The latest figures available for Scotland show that on 6 January 1989 there were 7,257 unemployed people with disabilities registered for work at jobcentres and careers offices. There is no count made of the total number of people of working age with disabilities.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will issue the Scottish results of the 1988 survey of the quality of the United Kingdom bathing waters.

Mr. Rifkind: I expect to announce the results early in April.

Sentencing

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider reforms to confer upon the Crown a right of appeal against sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce reforms of this nature.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the law of sentencing with regard to the sentencing of sexual offenders in the light of the admonition of the accused in the case PF v. Gordon, Glasgow Sheriff Court, 30 August 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to conduct a review of the law of sentencing.

Dampness

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dwellings in Scotland were affected by damp in 1978, 1979, 1987 and 1988, respectively; and how many people lived in them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Housing (Amenities)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many dwellings lacking one or more basic sanitary amenity there were in Scotland in 1978, 1979, 1987 and 1988; and how many people occupied them;

(2) how many people in Scotland lived in dwellings unfit for human occupancy in 1978, 1979, 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the following table. Comparable figures were not collected for 1978.

Dwellings below tolerable standard at 31 March, Scotland[1]

	Thousands
	1979	1987	1988
Dwellings below tolerable standard	121	56	[2]57
Lacking one or more standard amenity (sink, hot water and inside WC)[3][4]	71	31	27
Lacking a fixed bath or shower[3][4]	73	29	24

No information is available on how many people occupied these dwellings.

[1] Including most recent year's figure for those authorities whose returns are outstanding.

[2] Increase in 1988 figure due to change in the basis of compilation of Glasgow district council's return.

[3] Some local authorities were unable to provide information on dwellings in this category.

[4] A dwelling may be recorded in both these categories and there is therefore an element of double-counting.

NHS (Repairs)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the capital repairs backlog in the Scottish National Health Service in current prices in each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Schools (Capital Spending)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total capital spending in Scottish schools in current prices in each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 16 January at column 69 which gave details of capital expenditure from 1979-80 to 1987-88. In 1978-79 the capital expenditure on local authority primary and secondary schools was £49·72 million (at outturn prices) and £102·021 million (at 1987-88 prices).

House Repossessions

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total number of house repossessions in Scotland in 1979, 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Building Societies Association publishes statistics on the number of repossessions by building societies in the United Kingdom as a whole, but no corresponding information is available for Scotland only. No information is held centrally on other mortgage lenders.

Crime Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the annual crime detection rates for all crimes and for violent crimes for each year since 1978.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Clear-up rate (percentage) Total crimes	Violent crimes[1]
1978	29·7	53·2

[2] Provisional.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the total number of crimes and (b) the number of violent crimes committed in Scotland annually from 1978.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Number recorded Total crimes	Violent crimes[1]
1978	334,957	11,222
1979	346,680	11,279

Housing Repairs

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dwellings in (a) the public sector and (b) the private rented sector were in need of repair in (i) 1978-79 and (ii) 1987-88.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Overcrowding

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households lived in overcrowded conditions in 1978, 1979, 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Manufacturing

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people in employment in manufacturing in Scotland in the first quarter of 1979, and the last quarter of 1988.

Mr. Lang: The seasonally adjusted number of employees in employment in Scottish manufacturing in the first quarter of 1979 was some 606,000. Figures for the last quarter of 1988 are not yet available. The number in the third quarter is provisionally estimated at around 399,000. The latter estimate may be revised when the results of the 1987 census of employment become available.

Capital Formation

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Scottish gross domestic fixed capital formation in current prices in (a) education, (b) health and social services, (c) housing and (d) community development in 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Ian Lang: Estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation in Scotland by function of government are prepared annually by the Central Statistical Office. The estimates relate to calendar years and do not separate housing from community development. The latest available estimates are:

Gross domestic fixed capital formation in Scotland by certain functions of Government

	£ million 1978	1986
Education	64	72
Health and social services	62	119
Housing and community development	270	411

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total gross domestic capital formation in current prices in total and per head in Scotland for 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation (GDFCF) for Scotland are available only for certain sectors: agriculture, forestry and fishing; energy and water supply; manufacturing; transport and communication (excluding shipping and air transport); and dwellings. In 1986 these sectors accounted for 57 per cent. of United Kingdom GDFCF (excluding the continental shelf region).

The estimates are prepared by the Central Statistical Office and relate to calendar years, the latest available being 1986. The figure for 1978 is on a slightly different basis, but the changes are likely to have affected the estimates by under 1 per cent.

Gross domestic fixed capital formation in certain industries and dwellings: Scotland

	1978	1986
£ million, current prices	2,071	3,094
£ per head of population	400	600

Children

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of Scottish children living in families where the head of the household was unemployed annually from 1978.

Mr. Lang: The estimated number of dependent children aged 18 years or under in households in Scotland where the head was unemployed is 120,000 in 1988, according to preliminary results from the spring 1988 labour force survey. The equivalent estimate for spring 1981 was 136,000. These estimates are subject to sampling errors.

Estimates are not available from the 1979 survey and could be obtained for the remaining years for which there were surveys only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Construction

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of housing starts and completions in the public and private sector in Scotland in 1979, 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on housing starts and completions for 1979 and 1987 was published in tables 4 and 3 respectively of Scottish Development Department Statistical Bulletin HSU No. 5, Housing Trends in Scotland quarter ended 30 June 1988, which was issued on 15 March 1989. Returns for 1988 are not yet complete.

School Leavers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many school leavers in Scotland in total and in percentage terms entered (a) further and (b) higher education in 1979, 1987 and 1988;

(2) how many school leavers in Scotland have entered full-time employment annually in total and percentage terms for each year from 1978.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for each year since 1978 is not readily available. The most recent information from the biennial Scottish young people's survey relating to the destination of school leavers was published by the Scottish Education Department in its statistical bulletin school leavers' destinations (No. 12/E1/1988) published in December 1988 which is available in the Library.

School Books

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the spending on books (a) per primary pupil and (b) per secondary pupil in Scotland in current prices for 1978-79 and 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 16 January at columns 67-70 and the corrected tables accompanying my letter to him of 9 March.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total area of applications for forestry grants and the area of that relating to new afforestation since 1 July 1988; and what is the total area of forestry grant applications for which environmental assessment has been requested since that date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From 21 June 1988, when the scheme opened to applications, to 28 February 1989, the Forestry Commission received applications for entry to the woodland grant scheme covering 49,297 hectares, of which 29,271 hectares were for new planting.

The environmental assessment provisions came into force on 15 July 1988. Since then, the Forestry Commission has requested environmental assessments on about 3,100 hectares of applications for new planting.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the area of land approved for grant aid for afforestation in each Forestry Commission conservancy under (a) the forestry grant scheme, (b) the broadleaved woodland grant scheme and (c) the woodland grant scheme in the year beginning 1 April 1987 and the period 1 April to 31 December 1988; and if he will instruct the Forestry Commission henceforth to publish such figures in its annual reports.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the following tables. I have asked the Forestry Commissioners to consider whether more detailed information on private planting might reasonably be provided in their annual reports.

Period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988

Crofters (Tree Growing)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to enable crofters to grow trees on common grazings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 7 March at column 486 to a question tabled by the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie).

Road Bridge (Dornoch Firth)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the anticipated start date for construction of the road crossing of the Dornoch Firth; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Owing to unforeseen difficulties with soil condition, work is not now expected to start on the actual bridge construction until mid-summer, although preparatory works are continuing.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the nature of the technical difficulties delaying determination of the final design of the foundations of the road bridge over the Dornoch Firth.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Soil investigation by the contractor indicated that further verification of the load carrying capacity of soils is required. This may result in some refinement and development of the foundation design.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of children who received compensation from the Scottish Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for physical or psychological injuries suffered in cases of physical or sexual abuse in each of the past seven years; what was the range of the sums of compensation; and what was the average amount awarded to children following such cases;

(2) what consultations he proposes to undertake to ensure that any regulations made in terms of rule 14 of schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 go as far as possible to facilitate the success of applications on behalf of children who have suffered physical or sexual abuse and whose parents are either unwilling or unable to act on their behalf; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has drafted regulations using his power under rule 14 of schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to prescribe the circumstances and method by which one person may act for another in relation to a claim for compensation to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to manage the payment and investments of awards to persons below the age of 18 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since the criminal injuries compensation scheme operates on a Great Britain basis, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Boundary Commission (Members)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who are the present members of the Boundary Commission for Scotland; and for what terms they have been appointed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The members of the Boundary Commission for Scotland are:

Mr. Speaker, ex-officio, Chairman

The honourable Lord Davidson—appointed by the Lord President of the Court of Session on 25 September 1985 and subsequently re-appointed.

Professor Urlan A. Wannop—appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland on 6 June 1983 and subsequently re-appointed.

Mr. Adam R. Napier—appointed by the Secretary of State on 2 May 1985 and subsequently re-appointed.

The appointed members' terms of office expire on 31 December 1993.

Electricity Boards

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has agreed a financial target for 1989-90 for the Scottish electricity boards.

Mr. Rifkind: I have agreed with the Scottish electricity boards that the financial target for 1989-90 is for the boards jointly to achieve a return of 2·7 per cent. on net assets valued on a current cost basis. This compares with a target of 2·8 per cent. for 1988-89. The target has been set for the boards jointly to reflect their shared responsibility for nuclear generation.

Health Boards

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has allocated £1,875 million to health boards to meet their gross recurrent expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1989-90. This figure includes £38 million allocated for specific commitments, including cardiac surgery and AIDS. After expected income is taken into account, the net cash limited allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

1989-90 recurrent expenditure (net)

Health board	£ million
Argyll and Clyde	132·025
Ayrshire and Arran	102·420
Borders	29·605
Dumfries and Galloway	48·956
Fife	94·488
Forth Valley	89·024
Grampian	170·364
Greater Glasgow	473·907
Highland	71·779
Lanarkshire	151·699
Lothian	294·977
Orkney	5·466
Shetland	6·464
Tayside	170·703
Western Isles	9·774
Total	1,851·651

Hospital and Community Health Services Capital

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed distribution of the hospital and community health services capital for 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has allocated £148·8 million to health boards to meet their gross capital expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1989-90. This includes £35·7 million specifically for the improvement and upgrading of the NHS estate.

The allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Capital allocation

Health boards	£ million
Argyll and Clyde	8·600
Ayrshire and Arran	18·300
Borders	2·000
Dumfries and Galloway	2·250
Fife	3·300
Forth Valley	7·800
Grampian	12·900
Greater Glasgow	28·350
Highland	3·600
Lanarkshire	9·000
Lothian	32·800
Orkney	0·975
Shetland	1·575
Tayside	12·000
Western Isles	5·350
Total	148·800

This is an increase of 35 per cent. over comparable figures for the current financial year and confirms the Government's commitment to maintaining the biggest ever hospital building programme in the NHS.

Parole

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report of the committee on parole and related issues in Scotland, chaired by Lord Kincraig, is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The report of Lord Kincraig's committee was published this morning and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. We are all indebted to Lord Kincraig and the other members of his committee for producing such a clear and balanced report within a year of their first meeting.

The Kincraig committee recommend the retention of a parole system, because parole recognises the possibility of change in an individual or his circumstances over time, and enables long-term prisoners to be released selectively on this basis. They recommend, however, that the scope of parole should be restricted to those serving over five years, and that prisoners should be eligible for consideration only after serving one half of their sentences, instead of one third, as at present. All long-term prisoners would be liable to supervision on release. Prisoners serving five years or less would no longer be eligible for parole, but instead a system of conditional early release would apply to them. Under this system they would be released after serving half of their overall sentence, but would be automatically recalled to prison to serve the outstanding balance of their sentence if they were reconvicted.

The committee has also recommended changes in parole procedures, which are intended to make the process less cumbersome and more open. Parole applicants would have the chance to put their case to a panel of three parole board members, and would be entitled to be given reasons for a refusal of parole.

The committee was also asked to look at a number of related issues. The committee recommended no change in the formal role of the Secretary of State in the parole system; no alteration in the present arrangements for supervision for released prisoners by local authority social workers; and funding of the supervision of released prisoners by central Government on an agency basis. Their recommendations on life sentence prisoners will fall to be considered in the light of the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on Murder and the Release of Life Sentence Prisoners, now in session. They recommend against the introduction of suspended or part-suspended sentences into Scots law but (by majority) recommend that all custodial sentences should be backdated to the date when the offender was first remanded in custody, unless there are special reasons for not doing so.

The report raises issues of considerable public importance, and before deciding on what action might be taken to implement it, I would be glad to receive views on the report which interested parties may wish to put to me. These should be submitted to me by 30 June.

Schools (Self-Government)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations and individuals who have responded to the consultative paper on self-governing schools; and how many of these have indicated support for the proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seventy-five organisations and individuals have commented on our explanatory paper as at 15 March.

Birds (Shetland)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has of the level of breeding success for the red-throated diver, Arctic skua, great skua, puffin and kittiwake in Shetland in 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total population size of Arctic terns in Shetland in 1980; and what proportion this represents of the British and EEC populations, respectively;

(3) what information he has on research conducted or commissioned to identify the key factors that have influenced the breeding success of Arctic terns in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list the estimated number of young that the Shetland Arctic tern population has successfully reared in each of the last five years; and what the breeding success of this bird has been in other areas in the United Kingdom over the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) commissioned Durham university to conduct a short preliminary study on arctic terns in Shetland in 1985. This found some evidence of breeding failure. In 1986, NCC and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds jointly commissioned Glasgow university to carry out further studies on arctic terns in Shetland, and specifically to examine the role of food supply in breeding performance. This project is still in progress, but results indicate that there has been a shortage of a specific size class of sandeel in surface waters of Shetland during a crucial phase of the Arctic tern breeding cycle.

The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland are collaborating with other interested parties on co-ordinated research to investigate sandeel mortality and factors affecting the availability of sandeels for food. They are to increase substantially their effort on sandeel research in 1989-90 including, exceptionally, three research ship cruises.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total population size of Arctic terns in Shetland in 1980; and what proportion this represents of the British and EEC populations, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1989]: According to the Nature Conservancy Council the population was about 32,000 pairs. This represented some 43 per cent. of the British population and some 37 per cent. of the EEC population.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what information he has of the level of breeding success for the red-throated diver, Arctic skua, great skua, puffin and kittiwake in Shetland in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council has supplied the following information:

Red-throated diver—poor breeding success
Arctic skua—poor breeding success
Great skua—poor breeding success
Puffin—mixed breeding success
Kittiwake—very poor breeding success

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will list the estimated number of young that the Shetland Arctic tern population hs successfully reared in each of the last five years; and what the breeding success of this bird has been in other areas in the United Kingdom over the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council has advised me that, on the basis of sample monitoring of Shetland Arctic tern colonies between 1984 and 1988, a low breeding success has been achieved. The species' breeding success in other areas in the United Kingdom over the same period was mixed.

DEFENCE

"World in Action" Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek from the producers of Granada Television's "World In Action" programme on Aldermaston, broadcast on 20 February 1989, a copy for his Department's library of a videotape and transcript of the programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Chemical Weapon Agents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, 9 February, Official Report, column 765, he will set out the reasons for the policy of the non-disclosure of locations of chemical weapon agents held in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: MOD does not disclose such information for security reasons.

Nuclear Plant (Clean-up)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West, (Mr. Jones) 9 February, Official Report, column 764, on the financial costs of environmental clean-up at Springfields, Capenhurst, Sellafield, Aldermaston, Burghfield and Caerwent, if he will state the annual cost of clean-up for each of the plants operated for his Department, and the proportion of the contractual finances paid to British Nuclear Fuels for nuclear materials processing comprised by the component for environmental clean-up;

(2) if he will give consideration to the publication of a report on all Ministry of Defence, Atomic Weapons Establishment or British Nuclear Fuels contracted establishments involved in the production and processing of military nuclear materials in regard to the costs of environmental clean-up similar to that produced by the United States Department of Energy and Senator Glenn for the United States military nuclear facilities in 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. For reasons of national security, it has not been our custom to disclose costs of the procurement and processing of defence nuclear materials, either in part or in aggregate.

Plutonium and Tritium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any (a) plutonium or (b) tritium was exported on 21 February under agreement or order of his Department from Barrow on the PNTL ship Pacific Sandpiper destined for Hampton Rhodes, in Virginia, and thereafter Baltimore in the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the practice of successive Governments neither to confirm nor deny the presence of defence special nuclear materials at any particular place or time, nor to reveal details of the kind requested.

Bird Strikes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of bird strikes suffered by military aircraft in 1988, updating the figures provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 18 July 1988, Official Report, columns 501-02.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is as follows:

	1988
Royal Air Force	746
Army	41
Royal Navy	39
Procurement Executive	10
Total	836

Skyguard

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of deployments of the Skyguard radar system in the Roxburgh and Berwickshire constituency since 1987.

Mr. Neubert: The Skyguard radar system has not been deployed in the Roxburgh and Berwickshire constituency.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the reasons for the increases in the proportion of United Kingdom low flying which took place over southern Scotland, listed in his replies to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 13 July 1988, Official Report, columns 238-39, and 6 February 1989 Official Report, column 512; and if these trends are planned to continue.

Mr. Neubert: The amount of flying activity in particular areas is influenced by several factors, some of which are unpredictable. These include the weather, the location of major exercises and the availability of range and other facilities. The aim is to spread low flying training as widely and evenly as possible throughout the entire country to ensure that, as far as is practicable, no area receives an undue share of the training.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 6 February 1988, Official Report, column 512, if he will now publish figures for low flying movements in, and complaints from southern Scotland, including those within low flying area 13, for each calendar year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Neubert: No, the major part of low flying area 13 falls within northern England.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level flights were conducted over the United Kingdom by aircraft of the Federal German armed forces not normally based in the United Kingdom in (a) 1987 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate effort. However, over 98 per cent. of low flying training in the United Kingdom is carried out by British military or United Kingdom based USAF aircraft, with under 2 per cent. being carried out by other NATO allies.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made with the Federal German authorities since September 1988 for the transfer of low flying by Federal German military aircraft to Britain.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had during 1988 with his Belgian counterpart, Monsieur Guy Coëme, on the subject of low flying.

Mr. Neubert: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements were reached on the reduction of low flying over West Germany during his discussions with his West German counterpart, Dr. Rupert Scholz, on 30 January.

Mr. Neubert: None. Discussions did, however, take place on ways in which it might be possible to ease the impact of low flying training on the population.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many low-flying sorties took place in 1988 and 1989 to date which originated or terminated at RAF Finningley;

(2) how many low-flying sorties took place over the county of Yorkshire in 1988; how many have taken place in 1989 to date; and how many of these sorties originated or terminated their sorties from airfields in Yorkshire.

Mr. Neubert: Central records are not held in a form which would enable the information requested to be provided.

Armoured Personnel Carriers (Vauxhall)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the reasons for two armoured personnel carriers or similar vehicles being at Vauxhall at 5.15 pm on Sunday 19 March.

Mr. Neubert: The vehicles referred to are from a TA unit based in London. The two APC's were returning to their unit lines in Westminster on return from weekend training.

Tornado Sales

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) to what extent the cost of purchasing Saudi Arabian oil under Ministry of Defence sponsored arrangements are used in payment for Tornado aircraft by the Saudi Arabian Government;

(2) to what extent costs to the Jordanian Government of Tornado aircraft in excess of that price being paid by the United Kingdom Government for Tornado are supported by official credit support facilities from the ECGD;

(3) what arrangements are or will be maintained by the Ministry of Defence for programming payments to British Aerospace for the purchase of Tornado aircraft and other defence equipment by the Jordanian and or the Saudi Arabian Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has never been the practice of this or previous governments to publish details of individual defence exports for reasons of commercial and customer confidentiality.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, following upon or during discussions representatives of Her Majesty's Government or Ministers have had on the sale of Tornado aircraft to Jordan or Saudi Arabia, he has received information as to the level of commission payments being paid in the supply of Tornado aircraft to those countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has been informed by the West German Government as to what extent commission payments to citizens of Saudi Arabia or Jordan have influenced the decision by the West German Government not to provide more than 23 per cent. of official credit support towards the construction of Tornado and other defence equipment for supply to the Jordanian or Saudi Government.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work was undertaken by the Defence Export Services Organisation in support of the negotiations for the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to (a) Saudi Arabia and (b) Jordan.

Mr. Sainsbury: The negotiation of Government-to-Government agreements in connection with the sale of defence equipment are undertaken by staff of the Defence Export Services Organisation. This practice was followed for the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to Saudi Arabia and the prospective sale of Tornado to Jordan.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he had with his West German and Italian counterparts relating to the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to (a) Saudi Arabia and (b) Jordan.

Mr. Sainsbury: As with any collaborative project my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has naturally had occasion to have discussions with collaborative partners; in the case of Tornado with the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy in connection with prospective sales to third parties.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments were made to cover the cost of negotiating the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

Mr. Sainsbury: The only costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence in the negotiation of the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to Saudi Arabia and the prospective sale to Jordan were the salaries, travel and related costs of the MOD staff involved in the Government-to-Government negotiations.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount of expenditure incurred by the Defence Export Services Organisation in promoting the sale of Tornado aircraft and other defence equipment to middle eastern countries in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987 and (d) 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: DESO costs are not apportioned to individual sales prospects. However, the annual costs of the regional marketing division responsible within DESO for the middle east are approximately £400,000.

US Forces (Deployment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations his Department has received from his United States counterpart, or any service or agency responsible thereto, regarding possible deployment of (a) European distribution system warehousing facilities or (b) aircraft from the United States Air Force 10th Military Airlift Squadron or similar unit at RAF Greenham Common;

(2) what representations his Department has received from his United States counterpart, or any service or agency responsible thereto, regarding possible redeployment of warehousing or maintenance facilities from RAF Kemble to RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Neubert: RAF Greenham Common has been designated as a NATO stand-by operating base for many years and we envisage that this role will continue after the cruise missiles have been withdrawn. No decisions have yet been taken on additional roles thereafter, though we anticipate that the base will remain available to the United States authorities for military use. It is not our practice to speculate on alternative future uses for military installations.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from his United States counterpart, or any service or agency responsible thereto, regarding possible deployment of United States Air Force C-130 aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: United States Air Force C-130 aircraft are stationed at RAF Mildenhall. These and other C-130 aircraft deploy to and from the United Kingdom routinely. The hon. Member may be referring to the forthcoming Air National Guard exercise Volant Golpher, which has recently been approved by the Ministry of Defence. This will take place between 4-17 June, when 9 C-130 aircraft of the 109th tactical airlift squadron will deploy to RAF Abingdon.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from his United States counterpart, or any service or agency responsible thereto, regarding possible deployment of United States Air Force RF-4Cs at RAF Alconbury.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence has recently approved the planned deployment of 12 United States Air Force (USAF) RF-4C aircraft to RAF Alconbury during the period 8-11 April for exercise Coronet Hoop. This exercise is part of the annual programme of short term deployments designed to provide experience to USAF reservist aircrew of locations in which they might operate in time of war.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about whether the maintenance facilities for RF-4Cs at RAF Alconbury were dismantled when the 10th tactical reconnaisance wing of the United States Air Force at RAF Alconbury ceased using these aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: I understand that the maintenance facilities at RAF Alconbury used to support the RAF-4Cs of the 10th tactical reconaissance wing were removed after the wing left the base in 1987.

Military Lands

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will specify the dates that (a) the Lydd Camp and Lydd Range Byelaws 1988, (b) the RAF Edzell Byelaws 1988, (c) the RAF Welford Byelaws 1988 and (d) the RNAS Yeovilton and Merryfield Airfield Byelaws 1988 were (i) made and (ii) came into operation; and when the signs were placed around the affected areas stating that the byelaws were in force;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of each of the byelaws listed in the answers of 18 May 1988, Official

Report, column 509, 29 July 1988, Official Report, column 577-8 and 3 March 1989, Official Report, column 358, together with any other byelaws not listed in these answers in force on 1 March 1989.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to the hon. Member.

RAF Sculthorpe (Air Traffic Zone)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the military air traffic zone around RAF Sculthorpe is to be activated later in the current year.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to the hon. Member.

USAF Vehicles (Salisbury Plain)

Mr. Cohen : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why United States air force vehicles, based at RAF Greenham Common, in transit to Salisbury plain in the early hours of the morning of 14 March in the current year were carrying neither a registration number nor a distinctive nationality mark, as required by article V of the NATO status of forces agreement 1951.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Visiting Forces (Markings)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to take to ensure that all vehicles belonging to visiting forces and civilian components thereof that are stationed in the United Kingdom, including those of the United States, are carrying (a) a registration number and (b) a distinctive nationality mark, as required by article V of the NATO status of forces agreement 1951.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Peace Symbols

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the last five years any recorded incidents in which symbols of peace displayed by members of the public have caused harassment, alarm or distress to members of the armed forces, including members of visiting forces.

Mr. Neubert: There have been numerous incidents over the last five years in which symbols of peace have been displayed by members of the public. I am not aware of any records as to whether they caused harassment, alarm or distress to members of the United Kingdom armed forces or members of visiting forces. If the hon. Member has any particular incident in mind, I should be happy to investigate.

Rating Reform

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek powers to exempt RAF personnel who are posted, without families, to Scotland for less than six months from paying the community charge.

Mr. Neubert: I do not anticipate that married service personnel serving unaccompanied in Scotland for periods of less than six months, while retaining a family home elsewhere, will be regarded as having their sole or main residence in Scotland. They will therefore not be liable to pay the personal community charge there.

Small Arms (Price)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current purchase costs of the following (a) one infantry pistol automatic L9A1 with one 13-round magazine, (b) one 7·65 mm pistol automatic Walther type PP Z447E1 and one 8-round magazine, (c) one 5·56 mm M16 rifle and 30-round magazine, and (d) one 7·62 mm L3 0A1 rifle and 10-round magazine.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is no longer our practice to publish unit production costs.

Aldermaston and Burghfield (Audit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 335, any information on the status at that time of the four major projects under review was provided by the BNFL team carrying out the programme audit at Aldermaston and Burghfield (a) in the course of the eight meetings between the team and his officials and (b) at any time in the month of January 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Barracks (Security)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times in the last 10 years security has been tested and evaluated at (a) Tern Hill barracks, (b) Aldershot barracks, (c) Colerne barracks, (d) Driffield barracks and (e) Leconfield barracks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Perimeter Fencing

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual capital expenditure on perimeter fencing at all Ministry of Defence establishments in England, Wales and Scotland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer that my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave the hon. Member on 23 February at column 760.

Private Security Guards

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of private security guards employed at Ministry of Defence establishments, in each year between 1979-80 and 1985-86, inclusive.

Mr. Sainsbury: No figures are available for the years 1979 to 1985-86. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 1 March at column 222 for the figures for later years.

MOD Police

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the strength of the Ministry of Defence police in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Over the last 10 years the strength of the Ministry of Defence police was as follows:

	Numbers
October 1979	4,121
October 1980	4,221
October 1981	4,080
October 1982	3,958
October 1983	3,836
October 1984	4,003
October 1985	4,255
October 1986	4,681
December 1987[1]	4,841
December 1988	4,706

[1] Strengths are taken from the chief constable's annual reports, which from 1987 relate to calendar years.

The figures shown include manpower provided to repayment users but exclude civilians employed in support of the Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual expenditure on pay and pensions for the Ministry of Defence police for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual expenditure on training for the Ministry of Defence police for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mines (Price)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current purchase costs of the following (a) one M18A1 (Claymor) anti-personnel mine, (b) one padmine (containing 650 steel projectiles) and (c) one C3A1 non-metallic anti-personnel mine (Elsie).

Mr. Sainsbury: It is no longer our practice to publish unit production costs.

ELF Transmitter (Glengarry Forest)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, columns 376-37, if he will undertake to place a copy of the notice of proposed development relating to the proposed trial ELF transmitter at Glengarry forest, in the Library as soon as possible after its submission to the Highland regional council.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

ENERGY

Wave Power

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what support for research and development on wave power is currently under way; and if he has any further proposals under consideration.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A major element of the Department of Energy's present programme of research and development into small scale wave energy is the development of the shoreline rock gully device invented by Queen's university, Belfast. Over the last two years the Department has funded research and the construction of an experimental prototype on the island of Islay, off the west coast of Scotland. Early test results of the power performance of the device have been encouraging and the next phase of the project will now proceed, subject to contract, on the basis of the data acquired so far.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the annual cost (a) in cash and (b) 1989 pounds sterling of radioactive waste management and disposal for each of the magnox, advanced gas cooled reactor, fast reactor, steam generating heavy water reactor programmes, respectively; and how these costs have been factored into nuclear electricity prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The fast reactor at Dounreay and the SGHWR at Winfrith are experimental reactors operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. The prices paid by the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board for electricity produced by these reactors are the result of commercial negotiations and reflect the cost to the boards of other supplies rather than the costs of generation. I have asked the chairman of the CEGB to reply to the hon. Member in respect of the board's Magnox and AGR stations.

Nuclear Materials (Export)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if export licences were issued under article 2(i) of the Nuclear Installations Act in relation to the export of nuclear materials to Baltimore via Hampton Rhodes, United States of America, from Barrow on the PNTL ship Pacific Sandpiper on 21 February;

(2) if the nuclear materials exported from Barrow on 21 February on the PNTL ship Pacific Sandpiper destined for Hampton Rhodes in Virginia, United States of America, were covered by bilateral or international safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The nuclear material exported from Barrow on 21 February 1989 on the PNTL vessel Pacific Sandpiper consisted entirely of irradiated fuel elements. These were all subject to international safeguards. An export licence was issued, but the material fell outside the categories for which approval for disposal is required under section 2(i) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

Civil Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to permit publication in the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority journal, Atom, the specific quantities of civil plutonium exported for commercial use under international safeguards, listing utility, date of contract and date of export for all future such exports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Civil plutonium export data is already published in the Department's annual civil plutonium figures press release.

Fissile Materials (Export)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of requests for approval that his Department has received for the export of fissile materials; and if he will further list the consignor and consignee in each case, along with the amount of material permitted in each case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It has been the standard practice of successive Governments not to make public the details of export licence applications for the various categories of goods controlled.

Coal Industry (Productivity)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what figures he has for the growth in productivity in the coal industry for each of the last three years; and if he will publish the figures for other European coal producing nations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Productivity, in terms of kilograms per manhour in the coal-producing nations of the European Community over the latest three calendar years for which figures are available, was as follows:

	1985	1986	1987
United Kingdom	408	512	577
Germany	593	602	616
France	392	427	503
Spain	249	286	284
Belgium	314	321	316

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last considered the timing and content of the nuclear installations inspectorate's plans to publish regulations on off-site emergency planning for the civil nuclear power industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am awaiting proposals from the Health and Safety Commission on this matter.

British Coal

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Ofgas

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the level of funding for Ofgas in 1988 and 1989; what are the staffing levels in 1988 and 1989; how many staff have been seconded from his Department; whether Ofgas intend to move to new premises; and if he will make a statement about Ofgas's budget for 1990.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are at present 12 staff on secondment from the Department of Energy to Ofgas.

Ofgas' expenditure, budget, staffing and premises are matters for the Director General of Gas Supply.

Nuclear Power

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the proportion of electricity which will be generated by nuclear power in Britain in the year 2000.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 11 May 1988 at column 112.

Coal (Subsidy)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average level of Government subsidy per tonne of deep-mined coal each year since 1985 in each European Economic Community country and in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows. It has been obtained from European Commission publications. The United States of America does not provide financial support to its coal industry.

£/tonne[1,2]

	1985	1986	1987[5]
Belgium	22·0	35·6	58·1
France	37·6	46·4	49·6
FR Germany	6·0	24·2	58·1
Portugal[4]	—	—	6·9
Spain[4]	—	—	12·0
United Kingdom[3]	5·0	8·1	6·6

The Belgium and French coal industries are much smaller than those of FR Germany and the United Kingdom and are currently undergoing substantial contraction which distorts the aid figures. The figures for FR Germany in 1986 and 1987 also include Government aid for supplying coal and coke to its steel industry at world market prices.

[1] It is not possible to make absolute comparisons between the figures from different Member State as the statistical basis may vary.

[2] Figures for all countries represent aid for current production and inherited liabilities only. They do not include social security payments such as pension schemes and insurance contributions since these are not readily comparable.

[3] United Kingdom figures are on a financial year basis for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88. The others are in calendar years.

[4] Portuguese and Spanish data are not available prior to 1987.

[5] 1987 data are the latest published. 1988 figures are not yet available.

HEALTH

Social Workers (Training)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Central Council for Education and Training of Social Workers has provided additional curriculum advice on mental health matters to courses for social workers.

Mr. Mellor: In January 1987, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) published its regulations and guidance for the training of social workers to be considered for approval in England and Wales under the Mental Health Act 1983. In December 1987, it produced a report which referred to training issues. Since then, the Council has had a programme of approving training courses for approved social workers in local authorities. To date, some 90 per cent. of local authorities have, in many instances and in conjunction with other local authorities, produced a programme of CCETSW approved training for approved social workers. CCETSW is itself shortly to produce an evaluative report on the training provided by these courses, which will include guidance on training matters.

General Practitioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners earn more than £55,000 per annum in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The remuneration arrangements for general medical practitioners are conducted on a GB basis and are designed to deliver fees and allowances on an average basis together with some expenses which are reimbursed directly to doctors incurring them. We do not have information centrally in the form requested.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the most recent figures for the cost to the National Health Service of coronary heart disease including (a) the cost of general practitioner prescriptions, (b) the cost of surgery and (c) the cost of hospital beds.

Mr. Freeman: Cost estimates are not available in the exact form requested. However, the following may be of interest:

(a) The net ingredient cost of pharmaceutical products having an effect on the cardiovascular system, and diuretics, dispensed by retail pharmacists in the Family Practitioner Service in England in 1987 was £360 million.

(b) Information on the cost of hospital beds is not collected separately from treatment costs. It is estimated that the total cost of hospital in-patient treatment related to coronary heart disease in England a year is £175·5 milion. (1987-88 prices).

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to end restrictive practices imposed by family practitioner committees in respect of the use by patients of pharmacies of dispensing doctors.

Mr. Mellor: Dispensing by doctors is permitted only as an exception to the general rule that doctors prescribe and pharmacists dispense. This is a sensible rule which ensures that the skills and qualifications of both professions are used to the best effect. I have no plans to change it.

Drugs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the net ingredient cost of drugs per head for each family practitioner committee area and health region for 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will give the 1986-87 cost in terms of 1987-88 prices for each area and region.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the national average net ingredient cost of drugs per head for 1986-87 and 1987-88, what is the 1986-87 cost in 1987-88 prices; and what is the percentage variance cost per head of each family practitioner committee area and health service region for the national average.

Mr. Mellor: The average net ingredient cost per person for 1986-87 is £31·68 for 1986-87 at 1987-88 prices is £33·36 and for 1987-88 is £35·79. A table showing the percentage variation from the England average has been placed in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in waiting list lengths in (a) the North West regional health authority and (b) the Mersey regional health authority since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

In-patient waiting lists, Mersey and North Western regional health authorities, 1979 and 1988

	Mersey	North Western
Waiting list 31 March 1979	41,103	77,368

Change	−8,982	−13,529
Percentage change	−22	−17

Hospital Building Schemes

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital building schemes in (a) the North West regional health authority and (b) the Mersey regional health authority have (i) been completed since 1979 and (ii) are under construction or at the planning and design stage; and what are the comparable figures for the other health regions.

Mr. Freeman: The information held centrally on schemes each costing over £1 million is as follows:

Schemes	Regional Health Authorities
	North Western	Mersey	Trent	Yorkshire	Northern	East Anglian	North-West Thames	North-East Thames	South-East Thames	South-West Thames	Wessex	Oxford	South Western	West Midlands

Drinking Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give within the Trent regional health authority the total number of qualified members of (a) the medical and (b) the scientific staff of his Department dealing with matters related to contamination of drinking water by (i) micro-organisms, (ii) chemicals and (iii) radiation; and where these staff are located within the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has primary responsibility for the public water supply. The Department of Health does not employ any staff to deal specifically with contamination of drinking water.

Vaccinations

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children under the age of one year were vaccinated in 1988; and what percentage this was of the age group.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is not precisely in the form requested. The one year uptake rate of each vaccination is calculated as the number of children who were vaccinated by the end of the year following birth. The latest figures are shown in the table and relate to children born in 1986. Because of the change to collecting data on a financial year basis, the one year uptake rate for this particular cohort of children is calculated as the number of children born in 1986 and vaccinated in either 1986, 1987 or the first quarter of 1988, expressed as a percentage of live births in 1986.

Vaccination and immunisation: completed primary courses

	Live births 1986	Vaccinated in 1986 or 1987-88 (numbers)	Percentage vaccinated by 31 March 1988
	623,609	—	—
Diphtheria	—	487,372	78
Tetanus	—	487,493	78
Polio	—	484,771	78
Whooping Cough	—	419,523	67
Measles	—	401,414	64

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many environmental health officers are employed by his Department; and what are their duties.

Mr. Freeman: The Department employs three environmental health officers. They advise on and deal with a range of functions related to the work of environmental health officers. Their work is concerned with food hygiene and certain aspects of environmental health.

Sex Change Operations

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the district health authorities in England and Wales (a) which fund sex change operations and (b) which do not fund such operations;

(2) how many sex change operations were carried out in each district health authority in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally. The number of such operations carried out is so small that no reliable estimates can be made from normal statistical returns. It is, however, unlikely that the number of operations performed in England exceeds 100 a year.

PACT Information

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how long PACT information has been available to all general practitioners.

Mr. Mellor: The new prescribing information system known as "PACT" was introduced in stages beginning in August 1988 and is now generally available to GPs.

General Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the capitation payments to general practitioners in rural areas will continue for temporary residents.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to make alterations to arrangements for the payment of temporary residents fees to any GPs, except where such alterations are consequent upon the proposals I am putting to the profession's representatives and which are set out in "General Practice in the NHS—A New Contract". For example, I am proposing to extend the period during which a night visit fee may be claimed in respect of permanent patients and consequently in respect of temporary residents.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be in a position to provide a figure for the substantial extra resources to be devoted to the family practitioner service in relation to any new general practitioner contract.

Mr. Mellor: General practitioners' remuneration is determined by the Government acting on advice from the doctors and dentists review body. As part of their evidence to the review body later this year, the Government will consider what additional resources they believe appropriate.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest average income of a general practitioner principal net of all practice expenses.

Mr. Mellor: The current intended average net income for general medical practitioners is £28,800 per annum. The Government have accepted the recommendation in the nineteenth report of the doctors and dentists review body that this should be increased to £31,105 per annum from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioners who hold practice budgets will be able to create a surplus by sending patients to hospital accident and emergency services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect health authorities to satisfy themselves that referral to A and E Departments is not being used as a substitute for out-patient referral and they will continue to do so in future in the case of all GPs whether practice budget holders or not. I do not expect that GP's would use such a device because of their professional integrity and because such a procedure would cause annoyance to their hospital colleagues and inconvenience and bewilderment to their patients.

Teenage Pregnancies

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies were born to mothers aged 16 and 17 years for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The latest year for which information is available is 1987. The number of births in England and Wales were:

Age of mother	Live births	Stillbirths
16	4,398	31
17	10,484	50

Stroke Victims

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of stroke victims in the United Kingdom as a ratio of the population; how many such victims suffer serious or severe disability; and what assistance is available to them.

Mr. Freeman: Centrally collected statistics do not include total numbers of those suffering from "strokes" (acute cerebrovascular disease). However, it is believed that the total number in England and Wales is about 100,000 pa, about 1 in 500 of the population. In broad terms, one third of those who have strokes will suffer disability. After treatment for the acute condition, a range of hospital services is available to stroke victims, including rehabilitation, speech therapy, occupational therapy and physiotherapy.

Newchurch Hospital, Culcheth

Mr Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the future of Newchurch hospital, Culcheth, Warrington; and if there are any plans to close it.

Mr. Freeman: Newchurch hospital is in the process of retraction as patients are gradually transferred to care in the community schemes. As the numbers of patients reduces consideration will have to be given to the best way of caring for those remaining. We are not, however, aware of any plans to close Newchurch hospital.

Self-Governing Hospitals

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact he estimates his White Paper proposals will make on the quality of medical education in self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering the detailed arrangements for providing and funding medical education in self-governing hospitals but we shall ensure that hospitals which become self-governing continue to play their part in maintaining the high quality of this education.

Hospital Computer Systems

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the cost of setting up hospital computer systems will be funded.

Mr. Freeman: In general, the responsibility for deciding how much to spend on hospital computer systems rests with NHS managers. However, hospitals receiving computer based information systems as part of the hospital information and support systems and resource management programmes in 1989-90 will have a substantial part of the cost of those systems met centrally.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the names of chairmen appointed to family practitioner committees from 1 April.

Mr. Mellor: I am placing in the Library a list of the appointments made with effect from 1 April 1989. All appointments are for a period of two years.

Advisory Committees

135. Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the advisory committees coming under his Department and concerned in some way with public health which are covered by the Official Secrets Act whose members are required to sign the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1989, columns 159-60]: I regret that in the list of the Department's advisory committees whose members are subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act, an advisory committee on ethics of gene modification therapy in humans was included in error; the Department is still considering whether to establish such a committee.

Food Safety

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the membership of the committee on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As I announced in the House on 21 February the chairman of the committee is Professor Sir Mark Richmond, vice chancellor of Manchester university. The Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have decided to invite the following to be members:

Dr. Spence Galbraith, former director of the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre.
Professor John Arbuthnott, professor of microbiology, Nottingham University.
Dr. Tony Baird-Parker, microbiologist, Unilever Research Laboratories.
Mr. "Mac" Johnson, senior lecturer, Royal Veterinary College.
Mr. John Moffitt, farmer.
Dr. Roy Spencer, director scientific services, Sainsbury plc.
Professor George Glew, professor of catering studies, Huddersfield Polytechnic.
Professor John Norris, director of research, Cadbury-Schweppes, plc.
Mr. Brian Denyer, chief environmental health officer, City of Westminster.
Mrs. Rachel Waterhouse CBE, chairman, Consumers Association.
Mr. David Clark, food technology manager, Trusthouse Forte plc.

The Committee will be holding its first meeting shortly.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to announce a decision on the request made by the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South for a judical inquiry into whooping cough vaccination and brain damage.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret that I am not yet in a position to consider this request because of other current litigation on this matter. I have written to the right hon. Member explaining the reason in more detail.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis there has been of the vaccine damage payment cases which would indicate the incidence per hundred thousand vaccinations of damage such as to cause a payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to repy. During the five years 1983 to 1988, the number of vaccine damage awards made averaged 17 per year, and many of these related to vaccinations performed in earlier years. Almost all of the awards were on account of vaccinations performed under the childhood vaccination programme.

I understand from the Department of Health that over the same period, an average of around 500,000 children per year have completed the primary courses of vaccination against each of diptheria, tetanus and polio, and 420,000 againts whooping cough; 440,000 have been vaccinated against measles and 300,000 against rubella. Since the primary course for diptheria, tetanus, polio and whooping cough is three doses, this means that around 7 million doses of vaccine are administered to children each year in the primary vaccination programme. A further 2·5 million reinforcing doses are also administered.

The incidence of vaccine damage such as to cause an award to be made is therefore less than 2 per million doses of vaccine administered.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vaccine damage payments were made in 1988; and if he will categorise these according to the age of the child, when the vaccination took place, the year of the vaccination and the nature of the vaccination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Four payments were awarded in 1988 under the provision of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Details are in the table.

Vaccine damage payments scheme
Awards made in 1988 by age of child at date of vaccination Year of vaccination and type of vaccination

Age at date of vaccination (months)	Year vaccination was given	Type of vaccination cited on claim form
1. 3-6	1959	Triple/polio
2. 3-6	1986	Polio
3. 6-9	1972	Pertussis
4. 6-9	1980	Pertussis

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the application form for a vaccine damage payment asks for (a) the date of vaccination alleged to have caused the damage, (b) the type of vaccination and (c) the age of the person when the vaccination took place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The vaccine damage payment claim form asks for the date of vaccination, the type of vaccination received and the date of birth of the vaccinated person. From this information, the age of the vaccinated person when the vaccination took place can be determined.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many claims for vaccine damage payments have been made in each year since the scheme began; and what proportion in each year resulted in a payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available. The information which is available is in the table.

Vaccine damage payments scheme

[1] Awards recorded for a particular year may be the outcome of claims made in earlier years. To analyse for each year's claims the number that were eventually successful would be disproportionately costly.

[2] Although the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 took effect from 22 March 1979, claims were invited when the scheme was announced in 1978.

[3] To 28 February 1989.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there has been any change in his departmental policy regarding the payment of vaccine damage payments following the case of Loveday v. Renton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

There has been no change in our policy of making a vaccine damage payment in every case where the qualifying criteria are satisfied. Whether these criteria are satisfied where pertussis vaccine is involved remains a matter for decision in each individual case.

ENVIRONMENT

Rural Villages (Sewerage System)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the rural villages within the Don Valley constituency that are not connected to a main sewerage supply system; what proposals he has made to ensure that these villages are connected to such a system before the water industry is privatised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the following villages in the hon. Member's constituency are not connected to the public sewerage system: Hooton Pagnell (part), Hampoles, Skelbrooke, Brodsworth, Pickburn, Moorhouses, Marr (part), Stainton (part) and Tickhill.

Responsibility for sewerage services rests with the Yorkshire and Severn-Trent water authorities. It would be for them to provide main sewerage for the villages if they considered this necessary for effectually draining their areas.

The Water Bill provides for the general duty of sewerage undertakers to be spelt out in more detail and for the re-enactment with improvements of the provisions under which local authorities and others can requisition public sewers. Grants under the Rural Water Supplies and Sewerage Acts will continue to be available.

Fluoridation

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what other countries in the European Community fluoridate their public drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: Fluoridation of public water supplies is permissible in a number of European Community countries and is mandatory in Ireland. It is carried out in the United Kingdom, Spain and Ireland.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will monitor the safety of fluoride levels in the public drinking water after privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: Water undertakers will continue to monitor fluoride levels in drinking water. The drinking water inspectorate to be established under the Water Bill will ensure that water undertakers are monitoring water quality consistently and satisfactorily and are complying with the standards set down in regulations made under the Bill. Where fluoride is added to the supply at the request of health authorities, the health authorities will continue to liaise with water undertakers to ensure compliance with the terms of the agreement between them.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which have indicated to water authorities opposition to the proposals to fluoridate the public drinking water in their area.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held by the Department.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water authorities have reduced the fluoridation of their water supplies since the Water Fluoridation Act 1985.

Mr. Moynihan: Severn Trent water authority has stopped fluoridating water supplies in the South Derbyshire area because of technical difficulties in the operation of its plants.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water authorities have firm proposals to fluoridate their water; and what proportion of the total population will be served as a result.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any water authorities which currently have firm proposals to fluoridate their water.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water authorities are currently fluoridating their drinking water supplies; and what proportion of the population now drinks fluoridated water.

Mr. Moynihan: The water authorities that are currently fluoridating one or more of their drinking water supplies are: Northumbrian, North West, Yorkshire, Severn Trent, Anglian, Thames and Welsh. Approximately 10 per cent. of the population of England and Wales receives fluoridated water. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has supplied information in respect of the Welsh Water Authority.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the results of the Water Fluoridation Act 1985.

Mr. Moynihan: The Water Fluoridation Act 1985 is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. My Department has made no assessment of the results of the Act.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the result of his Department's review of policy on housing co-operatives; when part IV of the Housing Act 1988 will come fully into force; and when section 124 of the Housing Act 1988 will come into force.

Mr. Trippier: I expect to receive the report of the housing co-operative review committee shortly. Part IV of the Housing Act 1988 will come fully into force on 5 April 1989. Section 124 of the Housing Act 1988 came into force on 10 March 1989, and I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 10 March at column 699.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the benefits to the United Kingdom of the import of hazardous and toxic wastes for processing or disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The import of difficult wastes for specialist treatment and safe disposal provides employment and helps our balance of payments. Such imports often also result in a global environmental advantage, for example if there is no suitable treatment facility in the country where the waste originates.

Departmental Estates (VAT)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the additional cost to be borne by each Department of state in respect of unrecovered value added tax on rents paid by its commercial or industrial estate (a) from 1 August 1989 to 4 April 1990 and (b) for the fiscal year 1991-92.

Mr. Chope: Landlords have not yet decided whether or not to exercise their option to tax rents, so it is therefore impossible to offer meaningful estimates of any additional costs which might be borne by Departments.

Water Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communications he has had with the chairman of the Yorkshire water authority about the increase in its charges to consumers which come into effect from the 1 April and about the derogations of legislation regarding sewage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Common Land

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to safeguard common land on the basis of the proposal of the common land forum.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 8 March, at column 523.

Drinking Water

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the water supplies in England and Wales that are in breach of the EEC directive on water quality in respect of safety limits on lead in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No water leaving water mains in England breaches the EC directives standard for lead. However, certain types of water can dissolve lead from lead service pipes and plumbing in properties. In areas where such water is supplied water undertakers investigate whether additional water treatment would reduce lead levels significantly. In most of these areas action has already been successfully taken, but in the following areas action is still being investigated:

Water Authority	Area
Anglian Water Authority	Eriswell
Yorkshire Water Authority	Haisthorpe East Hull
North West Water Authority	Swinden Crosby Parts of Greater Manchester and Lancashire (served by Lake District supplies) Longridge and Ribchester (served by Dilworth source) Preston (served by White Bull Treatment Works) Parts of Blackpool and Wyre (Barnacre source) Blackburn, parts of Blackpool and Flyde (fed from Hodder Treatment Works) Rainhill (Vyrnwy source)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and location of breaches in the precautionary standard for pesticides in drinking water in 1988 for each division in supplies provided by the Severn-Trent water authority; and if he will list by location how much these breaches exceeded the standard laid down.

Mr. Moynihan: I am informed that during the period December 1987 to November 1988 there were breaches of standard of 0·1 microgram per litre for pesticides, specified in the EC drinking water directive, in water supplies leaving the following treatment works of the Severn Trent water authority: Barbourne, Mitcheldean, Mythe, Witcombe, Campion, Strensham, Rugby, Melbourne, Hallgates, Nanpanton, Wing, Church Wilne, Whitacre, Trimpley, Costford, Bomere, Ford, Meolfre, Astley, Norton, Elkesley, Far Baulker, Farnsfield and Fishpool. I understand that Witcombe is now not used for public supply and that breaches of the standard at Bomere, Ford, Moelfre, Astley, Norton, Elkesley, Far Baulker, Farnsfield and Fishpool were transient and that most samples from these works complied with the directive.

The levels of pesticides in these supplies were below those which would be considered a risk to health.

Seal Skins

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the illegal import of blueback or whitecoat skins which have been illegally imported into the United Kingdom in contravention of EEC directive 85/444.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 6 March 1989 at column 426.

Air Pollution

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure maintenance of standards after the change to a system of self regulation of air pollution in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to change to a system of self-regulation of air pollution in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure conformity to EEC guidelines on air pollution, within the proposed restructuring of the air inspectorate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Regulations have been laid which come into force on 31 March and will give formal effect to the air quality standards set in three EC directives.

The present restructuring proposals for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will have no adverse effect upon the ability of the United Kingdom to conform with these or any other EC requirements concerning air pollution.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether any agreement has been reached within Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to guarantee employment conditions during restructuring of the air pollution inspectorate;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the geographical and industrial remits proposed for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution air inspectorate.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Proposals are being developed for the reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in order to integrate its responsibilities for air pollution control, radioactive substances, water pollution and other wastes on a regionalised basis related to industry groupings. Three regions are proposed to cover the north, south west and south east and it is proposed to retain the existing air district offices as outstations. Consultations are continuing with staff representatives on the management implications of the proposals.

Repossessions

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of private dwelling repossessions for the second half of 1988; what was the comparable figure for 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The information asked for is given in the table. I draw the attention of the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 10 March at column 698.

Number of properties taken into possession by building societies

	Number
Second half 1988	6,380
Second half 1987	11,230

Number of propeties taken into possession by local authorities

	Number
1987-88	330
1986-87	490

Global Environmental Declaration

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the global environmental declaration made by 24 Governments at the Hague conference on 11 March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are considering the declaration of 11 March.

Radon

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 9 February, column 769, on the former Medical Research Council radon source radioactive wastes at Barton-le-Clay, Bedfordshire, he has yet received confirmation sought of the Medical Research Council that no radioactive residues remain at the Barton-le-Clay caves.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Barium Sulphate Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 8 March, column 524, on radioactive barium sulphate waste at Amersham, when he expects the site effluent treatment plant to be decommissioned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Amersham International plc intend to start decommissioning the existing site effluent treatment plant at Amersham in 1992.

Hinkley C (Inquiry)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any evaluation of the evidence presented to the Hinkley C nuclear inquiry by the Irish Sea Project and Ms. Penelope Boyce on radioactive liquid waste discharges from United Kingdom nuclear plants.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has considered those parts of the evidence submitted to the inquiry by the Irish sea project and Ms. Penelope Boyle that are relevant to the Department's interests.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of applications for home improvement grants and the number accepted for each year since 1979 by metropolitan districts in the north-west of England at constant prices.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Fee Competition

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department now uses fee competition in seeking tenders for professional services from the private sector.

Mr. Ridley: The Property Services Agency, which is part of my Department, has operated fee competition arrangements for professional services on major works projects since July 1984. Fee bids are now sought for all projects of £1 million value and over. The introduction of these arrangements has resulted in substantial initial fee savings.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Ridley: My Department consults widely on its work and decisions including the issue of over 40 consultation papers in 1988.

Wildlife Poisoning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the last five years the number of cases of wildlife poisoning in England caused by the illegal use of pesticides or poisons; and if he will identify the species involved; and if possible the poison or pesticide involved.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

Incidents involving the poisoning of wild birds and mammals by pesticides are investigated through my Department's Wildlife Incident Investigation Scheme. The number of incidents (and the chemicals involved) in England, during the period 1984-88, in which the deaths of wild birds and mammals were attributed to the deliberate abuse of agricultural pesticides are listed in Table one. However, it should be noted that it is not always possible to determine whether incidents were due to accidental misuse of deliberate abuse.

The species involved in these incidents were:

Mallard, Red Kite, Marsh Harrier, Buzzard, Peregrine Falcon, Kestrel, Pheasant, Red-legged Partridge, Grey Partridge, Moorhen, Wood Pigeon, Stock Dove, Feral Pigeon, Turtle Dove, Barn Owl, Tawny Owl, Little Owl, Raven, Carrion Crow, Rook, Jackdaw, Magpie, Jay, Blackbird, Robin, Starling, House Sparrow, Greenfinch, Chaffinch, Yellow Bunting.

Fox, Badger, Hedgehog.

Housing Transfers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many approvals he has given to date for the transfer of local authority housing stock to another landlord under the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988; and if he will list the local authority areas where such approvals have been given.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) on 22 March 1989.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 280, which of the consultants' reports on the proposed housing action trust areas he has received to date; and when he intends to publish them and announce his conclusions.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 16 March 1989 at column 322.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 280, what is the total aggregate cost of the consultants' reports commissioned by his Department on the six areas proposed for housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: The final costs of the reports will not be known until all the contractors' claims have been submitted to the Department. We expect the total cost to be about £900,000 including VAT. This covers the cost of producing copies of reports for local councils, tenants associations and local libraries.

No. 1, Poultry

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to preserve No. 1, Poultry, City of London, in its present form.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. 1 Poultry and associated buildings are currently the subject of listed buildings and planning appeals, which are before my right hon. Friend for decision.

In the circumstances, it would be inappropriate for any comment to be made at this stage.

Local Labour Clauses

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now reconsider his rejection of the use of local labour clauses in the light of the European Court of Justice's ruling in the case 31/87 Beentyes v. State of Netherlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Discussions are currently taking place in Brussels on the issues raised by the European Court of Justice's judgment in the Beentyes case. The European Commission has expressed the preliminary view that contract clauses requiring a contractor to employ a given number or percentage of persons resident in the area in question appear to be discriminatory and contrary to the treaty of Rome. At this stage, the Government do not see any reason to alter their policy on the use of local labour clauses.

Cabinet War Rooms

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the Cabinet war rooms.

Mr. Chope: Since 1948 the Department has maintained the more important of the Cabinet war rooms as they were used during the war, in accordance with an undertaking given at that time by the then Minister for Works. In 1984 the rooms were opened to the public generally and the trustees of the Imperial War museum agreed to manage them as a museum under a short term agreement on behalf of the Department.

The initial five year term of this management agreement is now approaching its end and officials of the Department and others concerned were asked to review, in consultation with the Imperial War museum, the future arrangements for managing the Cabinet war rooms.

On the basis of their report, the Government have concluded that it would be inconsistent with the future commercial development of the Property Services Agency which I announced last May at column 333 for it to retain a direct responsibility for managing the rooms. Furthermore, we feel that my predecessor's commitment as to the preservation of this important historic site will be best discharged by giving full responsibility to those professionally concerned with museum management.

The Government are therefore pleased to accept an offer from the trustees of the Imperial War museum to take on direct responsibility for the Cabinet war rooms and for honouring the commitment given in 1948. A number of the artefacts currently displayed in the rooms are from the museum's collection or are on loan from the Churchill family. We are now transferring ownership of all the rooms' other contents, including all documents, photographs equipment and furniture as well as all fixtures and fittings, to the trustees of the Imperial War museum. The rooms themselves form part of a Government office building and will be leased to the trustees of the Imperial War museum on an agreed basis from 1 April 1989.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will make constituency or local authority assessments of the number of losers and gainers under the poll tax.

Mr. Gummer: No.

As I said in my answer to the hon. Member on 16 March, the Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. We cannot estimate the numbers of gainers and losers in each local authority or constituency as a result of the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the deductions to be made under a community charge attachment of earnings order for (a) weekly earnings, (b) monthly earnings and (c) daily earnings.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 March 1989]: Tables showing the deductions to be made under attachment of earnings orders are contained in schedule 4 to the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 438) which were laid before the House on 17 March.

Private Landlords

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the percentage of the housing stock let by private landlords for each year since 1979;

(2) what is his estimate of the percentage of the housing stock which is likely to be let by private landlords during 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Director General of Water Services

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where the office of the Director General of Water Services will be located.

Mr. Howard: After considering the nature of the work and the number of posts involved, it has been decided that, subject to parliamentary approval of the Water Bill, the headquarters of the Water Services Offices should be located in Birmingham.

This location reflects the Government's policy of locating civil service work in areas offering advantages in terms of accommodation costs and labour supply conditions, including where appropriate areas which are the focus of regional and urban policies.

This new, non-ministerial Government Department is expected to employ some 80 civil servants, including the secretariats of the ten regionally based customer services committees proposed in the Water Bill.

County Hall, London

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how much money either through his Department or through the London residuary body has been or is expected to be spent on (a) the High Court hearing in relation to the previous planning application for development of the former Greater London council headquarters and (b) the taking of the same case to the court of appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 March 1989]: The information is not available.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing local authority current expenditure for each year since 1975-76 to 1990-91 on (a) housing, (b) personal social services and (c) education and science; and what proportion each makes up of (i) central Government current expenditure on the same areas of expenditure and (ii) total local authority current expenditure.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 22 March 1989]: The information requested for the years 1983-84 to 1990-91 is given in the table. Corresponding information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[2] ie Central Government plus local authority expenditure.

[3] The fall in this percentage between 1988-89 and 1989-90 reflects the transfer of responsibility for funding polytechnics and colleges from local authorities to central Government.

Water Quality

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, he will provide technical details of the more stringent basis upon which designated British bathing waters were evaluated in 1988 in relation to that upon which they were evaluated in 1987.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 22 March 1989]: The results of the 1988 survey have been reported on the basis of the strict requirements for 95 per cent. compliance specified by the directive. On this basis, a water is assessed as complying with the directive providing that no more than one sample in 20 exceeds the mandatory coliform standards. Previously, with our relatively short bathing season and the minimum sampling frequency specified in the directive, authorities generally took about 12 samples and we allowed one failure before a water was assessed as failing. The European Commission indicated that the strict interpretation of 95 per cent. compliance should be adopted. To this end, the Department asked that authorities increase their sampling frequency to ensure that a water did not fail merely because of a single high sample.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Low-income Families

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to paragraphs 2·23 and 3·17 of Cmnd. 9756, if he will publish in the Official Report details showing how the undertaking to give substantial and well targeted extra help for low income families in work has been implemented; and at what cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Family credit was introduced in April 1988 as part of the reform of social security. In 1988/89 it will provide about double previous expenditure on family income supplement and free school meals and free milk. Estimated expenditure for 1988/89 is £422 million and the estimated caseload is 285,000. Average awards are at present around £25 per week. About 60 per cent of present recipients get £20 a week or more and over 35 per cent. get £30 or more. A major advertising campaign will begin in April to encourage claims from those who may not realise that they are eligible. Over and above the prices uprating, the income support and housing benefit applicable amounts for children and the family credit child credit rates have been increased by an additional 50 pence from this April. In the case of family credit, the extra provision is over and above what is required to compensate for the standstill in child benefit. The reformed structure of benefits helps alleviate the unemployment trap by aligning the assessment rules for income-related benefits. Generally, people on the same income levels are now treated equally whether they are fully employed or out or work. Furthermore, under this new system, net income increases when gross earnings increase. This eliminates the possibility that less income-related benefit can mean a lower net income when gross earnings rise.

Local Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the live load figures of supplementary benefit for (a) unemployed claimants, (b) claimants not required to register for work and (c) pensioners, for each of the two local offices in Doncaster and the local office in Wath-on-Dearne that covers Mexborough, for each of the years April 1980 to April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Supplementary Benefit Live Load	[1]E.A.P.	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of the years 1980 to 1988 the number of claimants and the number of dependants and the percentage take-up of family income support for each of the two local offices in Doncaster and the local office in Wath-on-Dearne that covers Mexborough.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available on a local basis for either family income supplement (family credit since April 1988) or income support (supplementary benefit prior to April 1988).

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give an estimate of the number of people who would qualify for invalid care allowance or severe disablement allowance but who have not claimed those benefits in (a) Great Britain, (b) Scotland and (c) Lothian region.

Mr. Scott: I regret that it is not possible to provide this information. The OPCS surveys of disabled people have collected data about the incidence of different types and degrees of disability and also about receipt of benefits. They do not, however, provide enough information about the circumstances of carers to identify with sufficient certainty the total number who would qualify for invalid care allowance if they made a claim. It should also be remembered that there has been a tenfold increase in the number of recipients of the allowance since the survey data were collected in 1985.

The main difficulty with severe disablement allowance is in identifying clearly the number who would satisfy the primary qualifying condition of being incapable of work.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of housing benefit in 1978-79, 1979-80 and 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is in the table. Figures are not held for 1978-79.

Estimated numbers receiving assistance with housing costs

1979-80	3,065
1987-88	6,875

Notes:

1. Assistance with housing costs in 1979-80 was through the supplementary benefit scheme administered by the Department and the rent and rate rebate and rent allowance scheme run by the Department of Environment. The figure of 3·065 million represents the estimated number of people receiving assistance through the Department of Environment scheme only. Information about the numbers also receiving help through supplementary benefit is not available.
2. The information for 1987-88 represents the estimated number of people receiving assistance with housing costs through the unified housing benefit scheme introduced in November 1982.

Children

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of Scottish children (a) in total and (b) as a percentage dependent on supplementary benefit and income support in each year from 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest information is in the table.

Children in Scotland

Social Fund

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken by social fund officers to reach a decision on crisis or budgeting loans or community care grants (a) nationally, (b) in the northern region, (c) in south Tyneside, (d) in Gateshead, (e) in Newcastle, (f) in Sunderland and (g) in north Tyneside, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is shown in the table.

Teenage Pregnancies

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will include in his Department's leaflet FB23, "Young People's Guide to Social Security", information about eligibility for income support in the last 11 weeks of pregnancy among 16 to 17-year-olds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements will be made to include this information in the leaflet.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pregnant 16 to 17-year-olds are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects his Department to conclude its consideration of the application for attendance allowance submitted on 25 October 1988 by Mr. Andrew Purves of 21 Park road, Ormiston, East Lothian.

Mr. Scott: The application for attendance allowance made in October 1988 was disallowed on 10 November 1988 and Mr. Purves notified accordingly. An application for a review of that decision was received on 23 November 1988. The attendance allowance board has now completed its review and its decision will be sent within the next few days. I am writing to the hon. Member.

Pensions, Benefits and Allowances

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the value in real terms, both in absolute figures and as a percentage, of retirement and other state pensions and all other welfare and national insurance benefits and allowances paid in November 1979 in relation to those to be paid from April 1989; and if he will indicate the actual figure for each benefit in each year.

Mr. Scott: I regret that it will only be possible to carry out the comparisons requested once the April 1989 retail prices index figure is available.

Income Support

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what income support is provided for a single dependent young person, the only child of a one-parent family, in full-time study for forthcoming A-level examinations who becomes 19 during his final months at school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is provided for a dependent young person in full-time non-advanced education until he or she reaches age 19. As a full-time student the young person is not eligible for income support but local education authorities have discretionary powers to award educational maintenance allowances to help such young people complete their education.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost to his Department of income support for maintaining persons aged 65 years and over in private residential homes in the latest year for which statistics are available; and what was the average cost per person.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

However, in August 1988, the annual income support expenditure on people in independent residential care and nursing homes as a whole in Great Britain was estimated to be £890 million, based on an average payment of £115 per week.

Lone Parents (Benefit)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what conclusion was arrived at by the lone parents receiving benefit pilot study carried out at Leicester and Sittingbourne benefit offices which ended on 24 February; if he will list the location of the 44 benefit offices that will be involved in the national study due to commence in April 1989; and when this will be completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The pilot study carried out at Leicester and Sittingbourne was intended to test the effectiveness of the sampling method and questionnaire proposed for the main study. As a result of the experience of the pilot the researchers are considering some minor alterations to the questionnaire. The social security offices participating in the main study are listed as follows. The final report is due in May 1990.

Supplementary Benefit and Income Support

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children under 16 (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of all children were living in households dependent on supplementary benefit and income support for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available figures are:

Number of children under 16 in Great Britain

	Total	Dependent on supplementary benefit	Percentage
November 1977	13,059,400	1,122,000	8·59

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many relations have claimed funeral expenses for the latest available period; and what studies he has commissioned in the use of these funds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A social fund funeral payment may be claimed by anyone responsible for the costs of a funeral. No statistics therefore exist to indicate the number of claims made by relatives. In the period April to November 1988, 28,950 payments were made. We have commissioned no studies into the use made of these payments which are made to cover the cost of simple funerals.

Cold Weather Payment

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total cost of a week's cold weather payment to all those who were eligible if the capital limit was (a) raised to £6,000 and (b) abolished.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: If the capital limit were to be increased to £6,000 or abolished and all those eligible received a payment, the cost of one week's cold weather payments would be £13 million. No one with capital of more than £6,000 can qualify for income support and since this benefit acts as a passport to cold weather payments, to abolish the capital limit would admit no more people to the scheme than would raising the limit to £6,000.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will take steps to ensure that information relating to applications for housing benefit transitional protection will be made available, broken down by local authority area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. The computer system at the transitional payments unit has been designed to produce information in the form requested. However, it is currently working at maximum capacity to handle the payments that are being made and to deal with the process of renewing awards of transitional payments. We expect computer time to become available to produce the information requested later this year.

Sick Pay

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of people in receipt of statutory sick pay since 1983.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of recorded payments of SSP in each year since its introduction is as follows:

Tax year	Number of SSP payments (million)
1983-84	5
1984-85	5·7
1985-86	5·9
1986-87	5·7
1987-88	5·8

Note: These figures relate to employments not people. Where a person has had spells of SSP with more than one employer in a tax year, the spells with each employer will be recorded in the table. Thus the number of people receiving SSP will be less than the figures shown above.

Benefit Changes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the occasions on which benefits have been increased in any year since 1979 by more than the rise in prices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 March 1989]: In November 1979, November 1980 and November 1982, when the forecast method of uprating was used, benefits were increased by more than the actual rise in the retail prices index.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table listing each change in social security benefits in 1988-89 and those planned for 1989-90 and the expenditure and savings resulting from each change.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 17 March at columns 394-96. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced to the House on 14 March at columns 307-08 that we propose to abolish the pensioners' earnings rule with effect from 1 October 1989. This will give more choice and flexibility for older people who want to carry on working. The estimated benefit cost will be about £190 million in 1989-90 and about £375 million in 1990-91. Additional revenue from income tax and national insurance contributions will reduce the net Exchequer cost which will be met from the reserve.

Benefits

Mr. John Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, following his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West on 22 February, Official Report, column 679, he will break down the real increases or decreases in expenditure for each benefit showing what amount and proportion is attributable to (a) a rise or fall in the real level of benefit, (b) a rise or fall in the numbers claiming benefit and (c) other factors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 March 1989]: An analysis of family support distinguishing between the effects of changes in the average amount of benefit paid and changes in numbers of beneficiaries between 1978-79 and 1988-89 is set out in the table.

Family Support 1978-79 to 1988-89

(£ million)

	Changes in average amounts paid	Changes in expenditure caused by numbers of beneficiaries	Total change
Child Benefit	1,067	−417	650

[1] Supplementary Allowance, Income Support and Housing Benefit (includes rate rebates) paid to one parent families and to people looking after elderly persons.

Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Gregory) of 26 January, Official Report, columns 709-10, if he will re-calculate the figures to show the effects of increased rents and rates on the growth of real disposable incomes defined as net incomes less housing costs between 1979 and 1986, distinguishing between (a) all pensioners and (b) pensioners mainly dependent on state benefits.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 2 March 1989]: The increases are (a) 22 per cent. and (b) 14 per cent. respectively.

Note: "Mainly dependent on state benefits" are those pensioners dependent on state benefits for three-quarters or more of gross income.

Household Incomes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing the rise in real household income between 1979 and 1985 for all decile groups broken down by family status in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South, 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 819-20;

(2) what was the percentage rise in real household income for the average, broken down by family type, between 1979 and 1985, shown in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South, 29 July 1988, Official Report, columns 819-20.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A table providing this information has been put in the Library. It should, however, be noted that the principal objective of the "Households Below Average Income" statistics is to measure improvements in living standards in different parts of the income-distribution for the population as a whole. The tables are not designed to measure the living standards of individual family types within each decile of the population. Although compositional figures by family type are included in the main "Households Below Average Income" statistics, the hon. Member is advised that the information on real income increases for individual family types within each decile provided in reply to this question does not provide a meaningful guide to improved living standards.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people would gain and what would be the average gain as a result of raising the level of savings under which housing benefit is payable to £10,000 on the assumption that (a) the rules for other benefits are unaltered, (b) the interest actually received on savings and not an arbitrarily assumed return is used in assessing benefit and (c) no change is made to the rule that those with savings of under £3,000 receive benefit in full;

(2) what would be the cost of raising the level of savings under which housing benefit is payable to £10,000 (a) in 1989-90 and (b) in a full year on the assumption that (i) the rules for other benefits are unaltered, (ii) the interest actually received on savings and not an arbitrarily assumed return is used in assessing benefit and (iii) no change is made to the rule that those with savings of under £3,000 receive benefit in full.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1989]: We estimate that increasing the housing benefit capital limit from £8,000 to £10,000 would cost roughly £25 million. Generally speaking, current recipients with capital holdings between £3,000 and £6,000 would lose more as a result; those with savings between about £6,000 and £10,000 would gain. An additional, 45,000 people who do not currently qualify would become entitled to benefit of, on average, £10 a week.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to the reply 1 March 1989, columns 243-244]: I regret that the reply given has been found to contain an error. The amended figures are as follows:

Information in the form required is not available because records are held on a combined basis with the Department of Health.

Information for both Departments is given in the following table:

	Total staff	Female staff		[1]Ethnic minorities staff
		Numbers	Per cent.	Numbers	Per cent.

Training

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what Government spending has been per head of the labour force on training in the north-west in each of the last three years; and what was the national average in each of those years.

Mr. Cope: The information is shown in the Training Commission (formerly Manpower Services Commission) annual report in the House of Commons Library.

The figures are available only for the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88. The figures for 1986-87 include expenditure by the employment and enterprise group, most of which was transferred to the Department of Employment on 26 October 1988 and now forms part of the employment service.

The expenditure per head of the labour force was as follows:

	North-West	National
1986-87	131	107
1987-88	126	102·5

Labour Statistics

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the level of youth unemployment in the north-west in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants aged 16 to 24 years in the north-west for each January from 1987 to 1989 together with the percentage change in each year. The figures are affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over recording and by the change in coverage from September 1988 due to the introduction of new benefit regulations affecting those aged under 18.

Dock Workers

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered dock workers have been recruited in the last 12 months by each of the dock labour scheme ports in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 76 registered dock workers were directly recruited by scheme ports during the whole of 1988, the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many dockers were employed by each of the dock labour scheme ports in 1979; and how many are currently employed in these ports.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of registered dock workers employed by each of the dock labour scheme ports in December 1979 and March 1989 according to National Dock Labour Board lists are as follows:

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors have been employed in the Health and Safety Executive for monitoring pesticide usage on farms in each of the last eight years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectors monitor pesticide usage on farms concurrently with their other inspection duties. Since 1981, the number of inspectors employed in Her Majesty's agricultural inspectorate's field force based in area offices is as follows:

1 April	Numbers
1981	166
1982	156
1983	149
1984	144
1985	150
1986	150
1987	151
1988	139
1989[1]	142

[1] At 1 March.

In addition, at 1 March 1989 there were 13 inspectors employed in the agricultural inspectorate headquarters. The executive's objective is to increase numbers in the agricultural inspectorate to 165 inspectors as soon as possible.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many farms have been visited in each of the last eight years by the Health and Safety Executive to monitor pesticide usage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not separately recorded. However, during the course of their visits to farms, Health and Safety Executive inspectors examine all aspects of health and safety including, where appropriate, pesticide usage.

Wages Councils

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all (a) employer organisations and (b) other organisations which in response to the Government's consultative document issued on 5 December 1988 have indicated (i) that they oppose the abolition of the wages councils, and (ii) that they favour this action.

Mr. Cope: It is not this Department's practice to reveal the content of submissions made by individual organisations. With that exception the information requested is as follows:

Wages (Illegal Underpayment)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to investigate allegations made by the BBC "Watchdog" programme that named employers were paying illegally low rates of pay to employees and falsifying accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The wages inspectorate is examining the allegations made in the programme.

The inspectorate treats all of its inquiries and investigations as confidential and the results are disclosed only to those directly involved.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the characteristics of the two cases of underpayment in the Yorkshire and Humberside area which were prosecuted, and on the action taken over the 629 cases of underpayment not prosecuted.

Mr. Nicholls: The cases met the wages inspectorate's criteria for prosecution action. The policy of the inspectorate under all Governments has been to seek compliance by advice and persuasion and to consider prosecution only where an offence is deliberate or repeated and where the evidence is considered adequate to prove a charge in court.

In the great majority of cases where underpayments are found, the employers are being inspected for the first time and many of them are unaware of the regulations. In these and other circumstances where underpayment occurs, the employer is notified of his obligations and asked to give an undertaking to pay not less than the statutory minimum rate in the future. Where the inspectorate has reason to believe that the underpayment may continue, the establishment is identified for re-inspection.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) since the increase in the maximum number of weeks' suspension of unemployment benefit from 13 weeks to 26 weeks, how many claims for unemployment benefit have been received at Stockton unemployment benefit office; in how many of these cases benefit has been suspended; in how many of these cases the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied by the adjudication officer; in cases where the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been applied, in how many cases the length of the suspension has been reduced on review of the case; and in how many of the cases where the 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied, the suspension has been reduced on appeal;

(2) since the increase in the maximum number of weeks' suspension of unemployment benefit from 13 weeks to 26 weeks, how many claims for unemployment benefit have been received at Billingham unemployment benefit office; in how many of these cases benefit has been suspended; in how many of these cases the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied by the adjudication officer; in cases where the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been applied, in how many cases the length of the suspension has been reduced on review of the case; and in how many of the cases where the 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied, the suspension has been reduced on appeal;

(3) since the increase in the maximum number of weeks' suspension of unemployment benefit from 13 weeks to 26 weeks, how many claims for unemployment benefit have been received nationally; in how many of these cases benefit has been suspended; in how many of these cases the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied by the adjudication officer; in cases where the maximum 26 weeks' suspension has been applied, in how many cases the length of the suspension has been reduced on review of the case; and in how many of the cases where the 26 weeks' suspension has been initially applied, the suspension has been reduced on appeal,

Mr. Lee: The table shows, for the period April 1988 to December 1988, the number of claims for unemployment benefit that were received for the locations requested and for the country as a whole.

Information is not available on how many of these claims were disqualified by the adjudication officer, nor on the numbers where the maximum period of disqualification had been imposed or reduced on review or appeal.

Number of claims taken for period April 1988 to December 1988.

Sikhs

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the freedom of Sikhs to wear their turbans in all work circumstances.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission issued a consultative document in December 1986 containing proposals for regulations to require construction workers to wear head protection. The commission has received a large number of representations in response to the document, both on the proposals as a whole and on their implications for the Sikh community. My colleagues and I have also received letters on the subject.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under the job release scheme and the part-time job release scheme.

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information his Department has about the number of community insulation projects which were operating in September 1988 and in February of the current year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 14 March 1989]: Although the total number of community insulation projects at those two dates is not known, most community insulation projects are registered with Neighbourhood Energy Action. I understand that 444 projects were registered in September 1988 and 260 in February 1989.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of (a) factory and (b) agricultural inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive; how many of these are field inspectors; and how many of these inspectors were employed in each of the inspectorate grades.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 20 March 1989]: On 1 March 1989, 608·5 factory and 165 agricultural inspectors were employed in the Health and Safety Executive. Of these, 532·5 factory and 142 agricultural inspectors were employed in the Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorate division's field force based in area offices.

The breakdown by grade of factory and agricultural inspectors employed in HSE is as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Jeremy Bamber

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of the recent decision by the Court of Appeal to refuse leave to appeal to Jeremy Bamber in respect of his conviction on five counts of murder, he will now make a statement about the conduct of police investigations in this case.

Mr. Hurd: After Mr. Bamber's conviction on 28 October 1986, I asked the then chief constable of Essex, Mr. Robert Bunyard, to submit to me an urgent report on the conduct of the investigation of this case by his force. That report acknowledged that mistakes had been made in the early stages of this investigation and made proposals designed to prevent any recurrence. At my request, Sir Richard Barratt, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, discussed with Mr. Bunyard the issues raised in that report and then, in a separate review, sought to identify lessons from this case which might be applied to the police service generally.

It is clear that errors were made in the early stages of the police investigation contrary to existing force practice.

First, the senior investigating officer having assessed the scene of the crime and considered the information provided by Jeremy Bamber, wrongly concluded that Sheila Caffell had taken her own life after shooting her parents and her twin sons. In consequence of this error of judgment, he did not follow normal procedures of potential murder cases and was reluctant to take account of information which challenged his original assessment.

Secondly, there was inadequate supervision of the senior investigating officer to ensure that the existing force practices were observed and that inquiries took account of the information coming to light.

It is clear that prompt and effective action to remedy these shortcomings was taken once the chief constable and senior officers were made aware of the misgivings which relatives of the Bamber family expressed. Proper procedures were then implemented and they produced the evidence which was then presented to the jury.

I have today placed in the Library a list of the 18 substantive recommendations made by Sir Richard for adoption throughout the police service. They are designed to reinforce standard procedures and ensure proper management supervision to minimise the risk of prejudicing the outcome of a major inquiry.

The recommendations do not call for radical changes in police procedures, rather they clarify and confirm existing good practice so that it is consistently followed.

The recommendations have been forwarded to the Association of Chief Police Officers for their consideration and implementation as necessary.

Law and Order Services (Spending)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached a decision on new arrangements for controlling capital expenditure on the law and order services.

Mr. Hurd: The Government's proposals for law and order services were set out in the consultation document "Capital Expenditure and Finance for Home Office Services" issued on 28 October 1988. I remain of the view that capital spending on the police, probation and magistrates courts services should generally be subject to the capital control system applicable to all local authorities proposed in the Local Government and Housing Bill now before the House.

To meet concerns about the risk of credit approvals being vired away from law and order services, thus jeopardising their capital programmes, I intend, at least initially, that credit approvals should be issued in the form of supplementary credit approvals thereby hypothecating them to those services. I do not intend to recover the specific grant element contained in receipts generated by these services, but to protect the national taxpayer's investment I propose to provide that the reserved part of such receipts should be 75 per cent. I shall also ensure that our support for capital projects is based upon Government priorities and policies through the continuation of a system of project approvals to which payment of grant would be linked. Authorities would be free to spend available resources on projects which do not secure a place in the approved programme but such spending would not attract capital grant.

I am satisfied that the arrangements I propose for law and order services will meet the objectives of the new local authority capital finance system and that authorities will be able to maintain sufficient levels of capital expenditure on those services, while exercising a strict control on Exchequer support in the form of capital grants.

Metropolitan Police Manpower

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will authorise increases in Metropolitan police manpower for 1989-90.

Mr. Hurd: Under the four-year programme of police manpower increases announced in May 1986, I said that I would be prepared to authorise annual increases in Metropolitan police manpower of up to 300 in the police establishment and 150 in the civil staff ceiling, subject to my being satisfied that earlier increases had been properly used. In the first three years of the programme I authorised increases totalling 900 in the police establishment, and 450 in the civil staff ceiling.

Having reviewed the use to which Metropolitan police manpower has been put over the past year, I am satisfied with the progress which has been made. During 1988, almost 600 additional officers were posted to the areas and divisions of the Metropolitan police; the number of man days on foot patrols rose by 16 per cent.; recorded crime reduced and clear-up rates rose. 134 posts were civilianised during the year.

I have therefore decided to authorise the final increases of 300 officers and 150 civil staff, plus the 100 extra civil staff which I announced in the autumn. Of the 250 civil staff, 200 will be used for civilianisation. This will bring the Metropolitan police establishment to the record level of 28,415 as from 1 April 1989.

Prison Inspections

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 27 January, columns 769-70, how the inspections by his Department's health and safety officers are validated; and if there are any prison inspections by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Inspections carried out by Home Office health and safety officers are validated by random inspections undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive. These random inspections include prison service establishments.

Formal hygiene inspections of prisons carried out by Home Office health and safety officers are also subject to random, unannounced validation inspections by an environmental health officer from the Department of Health.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fires there have been in prisons in the last ten years; who is responsible for fire precautions in prisons; and who validates the inspections that take place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Between 1 January 1979 and 31 December 1988, 2,829 fires were reported in penal establishments. Many of these would have been small fires (for example, a lighted rag or newspaper thrown out of a cell windows, and quickly extinguished by prison staff.

The responsibility for fire precautions in each establishment rests with the governor, who nominates a fire officer from among his staff to be responsible to him for all fire safety matters. Governors and fire officers are encouraged to maintain close contact with their local fire brigade.

The responsibility for implementing recommendations resulting from fire prevention surveys conducted by local brigades rests with prison service line management, ie, governors, supported by regional directors and ultimately by headquarters, where the advice of Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate is available if any question arises as to the validity of a particular recommendation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 27 January, Official Report, column 769-70, how many validating prison inspections by environmental health officers from the Department of Health were carried out in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 April 1988, 12 validation inspections have been carried out at prison service establishments by an environmental health officer of the Department of Health.

Food Poisoning (Prisons)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 27 January, Official Report, column 769-70, on how many occasions local authority environmental health officers have been called in to prisons to provide assistance and expertise in tracing the source of food poisoning; and to which prisons they were called.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1984, local authority environmental health officers have been called in to prison service establishments on seven occasions to provide assistance and expertise in tracing the source of food poisoning.

The establishments involved were:

1984—Her Majesty's Prison, Leeds
1985—Her Majesty's Prison, Leeds
1987—Her Majesty's Prison, Wakefield
1988—Her Majesty's Prison, Cardiff
Her Majesty's Prison, Rudgate
Her Majesty's Prison, Lincoln
1989—Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institute, Hollesley Bay Colony

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, 27 January, Official Report, column 769-70, he will consider requesting the help of local authority environmental health officers in order to prevent food poisoning outbreaks as well as to investigate them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are satisfied that formal hygiene inspections of prison catering facilities by Home Office health and safety officers and Home Office supply and transport catering branch are of a standard comparable to those carried out by local authority environmental health officers. Home Office inspectors have considerable knowledge and experience of food hygiene problems associated with large scale catering operations. Their standards are monitored by random validation inspections undertaken by an environmental health officer from the Department of Health.

Prison governors and medical officers have authority to invite local authority environmental health officers to visit their establishment in an informal advisory capacity should they consider this appropriate.

There are no plans to change existing arrangements at present.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the speed at which entry clearance cases are now being dealt with when referred to his Department.

Mr. Renton: Entry clearance applications may be referred to the immigration and nationality department either for further inquiries to enable the entry clearance officer to reach a decision or for the department to take a decision. In all cases, applications are dealt with as promptly as possible although the need to make inquiries and the volume of work arising from these and on other applications to the Home Office are unavoidable sources of delay. Accordingly, remedies have to be sought not only in respect of entry clearance cases themselves but also in reducing nugatory work wherever possible elsewhere in the control system in order to free resources to be applied to what work remains. Against that background, the following measures are in train or have been taken.

Many referred entry clearance applications require the sponsors in the United Kingdom to be interviewed. These interviews are carried out by the immigration service and, depending on seasonal commitments at the ports, have been subject to delay. Arrangements are now in hand to streamline the handling of interview requirements to smooth out delays so far as practicable by securing a better balance between interview requests to the immigration service and their available manpower. The objective remains of carrying out interviews within three months of receipt of papers in the United Kingdom.

We are also introducing on a phased basis arrangements giving entry clearance officers abroad greater delegated authority to decide entry clearance applications locally. We expect that these new arrangements will be fully in place by January 1990 and will make an important contribution to expediting decisions.

More generally, the Government have taken a number of steps to seek to improve the time taken to process all applications handled by the Department. We introduced immigration rules changes in February 1988 to reduce the amount of nugatory work carried out by the Department and to free resources for resolving essential applications. Wider advertising, improved procedures and the recruitment of part-timers have helped the staffing situation considerably in recent months. Since 1988, a net additional total of 136 staff has been recruited. We are also introducing wherever possible improved working procedures to ensure that applications are processed as promptly as possible.

We believe that, taken together, these initiatives in the United Kingdom and abroad will significantly improve the overall quality of service including directly or indirectly to entry clearance applicants. Their effect will be kept under review.

Policing (North Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chief constables of Wales to discuss the manning levels of the police forces of the constabularies in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend visited South Wales constabulary on 30 January and plans to visit Dyfed-Powys police later in the year. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State visited North Wales police on 1 February. There were and will be opportunities to discuss police manpower on these and other occasions.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will visit North Wales police headquarters, Colwyn Bay, to discuss with the chief constable and the police committee police manning levels and the crime rates peculiar to north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the North Wales police. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State visited the force on 1 February. Since the Government took office 51 extra police posts have been approved for North Wales. The police authority has applied for a further 10 posts in 1990-91. This will be considered. It is encouraging to see that recorded crime in north Wales fell by 6 per cent. in 1988.

Football Attendances

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of arrests at each Football League ground for the current season to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most up-to-date figures available are those given in the reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 10 January at column 492, as corrected for division 4 in the reply to a question from the hon. Member on 2 February at column 389.

New Prisons

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to open any new prisons (a) in the north-west and (b) in the Warrington area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One new prison (Lancaster Farms) is currently under construction in the north-west and three (Kirkham, Rochdale, and Fazakerley) are subject to discussion with relevant planning authorities. There are no plans at present to open a new prison in the Warrington area.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammed Ismail Tinwala

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to take a decision on the application made at the post in Bombay by Mr. Ghulam Mohammed Ismail Tinwala, date of birth 19 November 1932, to settle in the United Kingdom; and when Mr. Tinwala's application was referred to him.

Mr. Renton: Mr. Ghulam Mohammed Ismail Tinwala was interviewed by the entry clearance officer in Bombay on 16 February 1989 and his application was referred to the immigration and nationality department on 20 February. First examination of the application indicates that further information is required from Mr. Tinwala's accountant in the United Kingdom to enable the Department to reach a decision on this case. Once this information is made available the Department will then decide the application without delay. Mr. Tinwala will be notified of the decision direct by the entry clearance officer in Bombay.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultations he proposes to undertake to ensure that any regulations made in terms of rule 14 of schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988, go as far as possible to facilitate the success of applications on behalf of children who have suffered physical or sexual abuse and whose parents are either unwilling or unable to act on their behalf; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has drafted regulations using his power under rule 14 of schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988, to prescribe circumstances and method by which one person may act for another in relation to a claim for compensation to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and to prescribe the powers of the board to manage the payment and investments of awards to persons below the age of 18 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The rules provided for in paragraph 14 of schedule 7 to the Act have not yet been drafted. We shall consult the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and its council and tribunals about the terms of the rules.

Under the present scheme the board will consider applications on behalf of a minor made by a parent or any other person exercising parental rights, including a local authority or by the Official Solicitor or, in Scotland, a judicial factor appointed by a court. We do not propose to adopt narrower arrangements under the rules and are willing to consider any suggestions about the scope of the rules on this point.

Child Abuse

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number of children who have received compensation from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for physical or psychological injuries suffered in cases of physical or sexual abuse in each of the past seven years; what was the range of sums awarded in compensation; and what was the average amount awarded to children following such cases.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not at present collate separately details of claims or awards relating to children, but plans to record from 1 April the number of applications which are based on alleged physical or sexual abuse of children.

Broadcasting

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, having regard to the proposed exemption of BSB from the Council of Europe convention and to the decision taken at the meeting of EEC Ministers on 13 March, permitting member states to exempt national broadcasting channels with no overspill into other territories from the directive's provisions on the insertion and amount of advertising, he will establish a uniform set of controls for all United Kingdom broadcasters.

Mr. Renton: The Council of Europe convention on transfrontier television does not apply to British Satellite Broadcasting, since BSB is not involved in broadcasting across frontiers. Nonetheless, BSB will have to comply with the IBA's rules on advertising. As to the control of broadcast advertising in the longer term, this is a matter which we shall be considering in the light of responses to the White Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations have been received by his Department from television companies, in response to the White Paper on the future of broadcasting;

(2) how many representations have been received from television companies concerning the future of regional television with regard to the White Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: We have so far received nearly 3,000 responses, and a few late ones are still coming in. We have it in mind in due course to place in the Library a list of the main organisations which have responded. The proposals in the White Paper that regional Channel 3 franchises should be required to show regional programming including programmes produced in the region, and that the Independent Television Commission should be responsible for deciding on the geographical division of Channel 3, have been generally welcomed.

Forensic Pathology

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recommendation contained in the recent report from the Home Affairs Select Committee on the forensic science service that his Department should work with the Departments of Health and Education and Science to secure the long-term future of the forensic pathology profession.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall be dealing with this recommendation, together with the others made by the Select Committee on Home Affairs in their report on the forensic science service, in the response which we shall be making to the recommendations of the report.

Police Chases

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and in which police authorities (a) innocent bystanders, (b) offenders and (c) police officers have been killed as a result of vehicle chases involving the police in the last year, and in each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information for 1987 is contained in the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary for that year, a copy of which is in the Library. The information requested for earlier years is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Immigration Guidelines

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times he has reversed the decisions of the immigration officers under the terms of the new immigration guidelines concerning representations by hon. Members.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to questions from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 15 March at columns 230-31.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the new immigration rules.

Mr. Renton: We hope to do so in the next few months.

Safer Cities Scheme

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend the safer cities scheme beyond the 14 cities now designated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: Twenty safer cities projects will be established by April 1991. Twelve areas have agreed to take part in the programme, two are currently considering invitations, two more will be approached shortly and four others will be invited in 1990-91.

Drugs and Arms (Imports)

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to maintain controls to prevent the importation of illegal drugs and arms into the United Kingdom in the light of proposals from the European Community Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend gave an account of his thinking on these and other points in the explanatory memorandum, dated 6 February, on the Commission's communication to the Council (10412/88 (COM)(88) 640) on the abolition of controls of persons at intra-Community borders. Copies of the memorandum are available from the Vote Office.

Crime Figures

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest crime figures for the Metropolitan police district.

Mr. Patten: The information requested is published in table 7 of Home Office statistical bulletin 7/89, a copy of which is in the Library. More detailed figures for each borough in the Metropolitan police district are also available in the Library.

Immigrant Detainees

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to transfer detainees from Latchmere house to Haslar in Gosport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 13 March at column 9.

Community Volunteer

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Association of Chief Police Officers about the formation of community volunteers schemes.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will estimate the annual cost of running the proposed community volunteer schemes.

Mr. John Patten: In the field of crime prevention the Government have not formulated any proposals for community volunteer schemes. Members of the public are already contributing directly to crime prevention schemes by joining neighbourhood watch or crime prevention panels. We encourage those wishing to give more active support to the police to join the special constabulary.

Football Spectators Bill

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted criminals will be prevented from travelling abroad as a result of part II of the Football Spectators Bill; and how he calculates the figure.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Part II of the Bill enables a court to make a restriction order requiring someone convicted of a football-related offence to report to an agency here on the occasion of designated matches played outside England and Wales. No order may be made unless the court is satisfied that it would help to prevent violence or disorder at or in connection with such matches. The number of people affected will depend on how the courts exercise their powers.

Crime Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reported (a) violent crimes and (b) other crimes in Knowsley borough for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in the report of the chief constable of the Merseyside police.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present prison remand population for England and Wales; how many of those remand prisoners belong to an ethnic minority group; and what percentage of those remand prisoners who belong to an ethnic minority are charged with an offence that involves violence, robbery or sex.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is given in the table. Information on offences is not recorded centrally until the completion of court proceedings.

Untried and convicted unsentenced population[1] of prison service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1988: by type of prisoner and ethnic origin

	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
White	6,970	1,440
West Indian, Guyanese, African	1,020	130
Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi	240	35
Chinese, Arab, Mixed origin	220	30
Other, not recorded (including refusals)	630	100
Total	9,080	1,730

[1] Provisional figures.

Police Discipline Code

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many complaints as defined under section 84/4 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 were recorded under section 9 in the discipline code in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; how many of those complaints were formally investigated; and how many of those investigated were substantiated;

(2) how many internal investigations were carried out by the United Kingdom police forces in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988 which related to section 9 of the discipline code; and how many of those were found to be substantiated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Number of complaints
Recorded[1]	83	197	180	220
Formally investigated	57	142	131	127
Substantiated	0	4	4	5

[1] Does not include complaints which were recorded but subsequently withdrawn.

Information relating to internal investigations which were not based on a complaint under the terms of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and to the subsequent disciplinary proceedings is not held centrally, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Suicide Attempts)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of suicide or self-injury with apparent suicide intent, or other self-injury, occurred among those detained in police cells in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During 1988, the number of deaths in police cells resulting from self-inflicted injuries was three. The comparable number for 1987 was four. No central record is kept of incidents of self-inflicted injuries which do not result in death.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that circular instruction 3/1987 on suicide prevention is being properly implemented in prison department establishments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Compliance by establishments with the procedures set out in CI 3/1987 is monitored by the prison service's regional directors. Establishments which are unable to implement the procedures in section C of the circular instruction because of pressure of numbers at reception have been authorised to make alternative arrangements; otherwise I am satisfied that the circular instruction is being complied with.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons have made arrangements for Samaritans to have access to suicidal prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Although we have not monitored the progress of this initiative centrally, we are aware that a substantial number of establishments have made arrangements with the Samaritans.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress there has been in implementing the recommendation of the Chief Inspector of Prisons in his report on Her Majesty's remand centre, Risley; and what steps have been taken to implement circular instruction 3/1987 on suicide prevention at that establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A statement by the Home Secretary setting out the action which was being taken, including the full implementation of CI 3/1987, was published on 30 June last year, and a copy has been placed in the Library. The deputy director general of the prison service is responsible for following up the inspection report and will be visiting Risley for this purpose.

Contracted-out Catering

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those establishments which have contracted-out catering services for inmates and the provision of inmates' canteens to private operators showing in each case who is the private contractor.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Inmates Catering
Ashford Remand Centre—Sutcliffe Catering South-East
Downview Prison (to open shortly)—Tappe Catering Services Ltd.

Inmates Canteen
Ashford Remand Centre—NAAFI

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce proposals to establish a Government DNA scheme to assist those seeking to settle in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are considering in what form a centrally organised DNA scheme might be introduced into the entry clearance process. I hope to be in a position to announce our conclusions on this before long.

Whatton Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether riot equipment was used by either prison staff or police during recent disturbances at Whatton young offenders institution;

(2) if he will give details of the type of accommodation currently in use for all prisoners based at the Whatton young offenders institution;

(3) if he will give details of the age categories of all prisoners detained currently at the Whatton young offenders institution;

(4) who carries out night security patrols at Whatton young offenders institution;

(5) if he will give details of recent prison disturbances at the Whatton young offenders institution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Offenders committed to Whatton young offenders institution fall into two age categories: those aged 14 to 16 and those aged 17 to 20. These age groups are held in separate units, both comprising a mixture of dormitory and cubicular accommodation. In addition, there is a further unit containing a small number of cells. At night, the institution is staffed by a mixture of prison officers and night patrol officers.

On the night of 28 February/1 March, a short series of incidents occurred at the institution involving a small number of inmates in the younger age group. In one of the incidents, inmates in a dormitory damaged windows, fixtures and fittings. It was necessary for prison staff, using protective equipment, to remove the inmates from the dormitory. Two prison officers suffered bruising and nine inmates minor scratches and abrasions, two requiring stitches for cuts believed to have been caused by flying glass. No police officers were involved.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will supply details of sentences and crimes committed by all prisoners detained at the Whatton young offenders institution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation will be paid to the holders of firearms which chief officers of police will not allow the holders to retain under the terms of the Firearms Amendment Act 1988 on part one firearms certificates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no grounds for offering compensation in such cases. A firearm which a chief officer of police will not authorise an individual to hold on a firearm certificate may be sold to a registered firearms dealer or to the holder of a firearm certificate who is authorised to possess or acquire it.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation will be paid to the holders of shotguns which cannot be converted to retain the classification of shotgun under the terms of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no grounds for offering compensation in such cases. A large magazine smooth-bore gun which cannot be adapted to retain the classification of a shotgun under section 2 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 may be held by its owner on a firearm certificate provided the criteria laid down in the Firearms Act 1968 are met. Alternatively, such a gun may be sold to a registered firearms dealer or to the holder of a firearm certificate authorised to possess or acquire it.

Women and Children (Offences)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has issued any circular relating to the trend in the role of women police officers in relation to crime involving women and children, as recommended by the Women's National Commission;

(2) what circulars he has issued following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that he issue a further circular, following up H.O. 25/83, on the continued problem of the under-reporting of crimes of rape and sexual assault, and the special needs of victims in relation to rape trauma syndrome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The deployment of women police officers is an operational matter for chief officers of police in the light of the overall needs of their force and the requirements of equal opportunities legislation. Home Office circular 69/1986, which contains the responses agreed with chief officers to the report of the Women's National Commission on violence against women, recognises the valuable role which women police officers may play, subject to the operational requirements of individual forces.

The responses to the report also specify measures to ensure that sexual assaults are accurately and fully recorded and confirm the importance of making police officers who are involved in the investigation of serious sexual offences aware of the special needs of victims.

Domestic Violence

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what improvements in data collection on domestic violence have been made following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986, we reminded chief officers of police that the criteria for recording offences of violence in a domestic setting were the same as in other contexts. Some forces have made arrangements for relevant information, particularly on civil injunctions, to be collected and made readily available to officers attending incidents. The 1983 and 1987 British crime surveys included questions on domestic violence. A Home Office research and planning unit review of research into domestic violence is to be published shortly.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent action has been taken following the Women's National Commission's 1985 recommendation that a circular be issued by his Department to give guidance and encouragement to chief constables to review training and procedures on domestic violence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recommendations concerning police training and procedures in dealing with domestic violence which were made by the Women's National Commission in its 1985 report "Violence Against Women" were incorporated in Home Office circular 69/1986. We are currently considering whether further guidance is necessary.

Horse Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amounts of monies given by the Horse Race Levy Board to each individual horse racecourse in the United Kingdom since 1983.

Mr. John Patten: The powers of the Horserace Betting Levy Board extend only to Great Britain. I understand from the board that the annual financial records of the board do not identify all the information required. Some of the grants it makes are distributed through other racing bodies.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all horse racing courses in the United Kingdom by region showing the number of races held at each course and the levels of prize monies at each course since 1983.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not held by the Home Office or by the Horserace Betting Levy Board.

Arrests (Statistics)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made during recent disturbances at St. Neots in Cambridgeshire and in Oxford; and if he will provide a breakdown of the different offences committed detailing the number of arrests made for each.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Cambridgeshire that, during disorder on the night of 4/5 March in St. Neots, eight people were arrested and were charged with violent disorder under section 2 of the Public Order Act 1986. Fourteen further arrests have subsequently been made for more minor offences. I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that during disorder on the same night in Oxford one person was arrested for threatening behaviour under section 4 of the Public Order Act.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 149

SESSION 1988–89

13th March–23rd March 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
